The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Amendment No. 36: Page 79, after line 7, insert the following:

"SEC. 6. On and after July 1, 1939, no executive department or independent establishment of the Government shall transmit through the mail, free of postage, any book, report, periodical, bulletin, pamphlet, list, or other article or document, except official correspondence, unless a request therefor has been previously received by such department or independent establishment or such transmission is required by law. For each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1939, the head of each independent establishment and executive department (other than the Post Office Department) shall submit to the Postmaster General an estimate of the number of pieces and the weight of the mail matter that the independent establishment or department will be required to transmit free of postage during such quarter, and he shall also certify to the Postmaster General at the end of each such quarter that nothing was transmitted through the mail free of postage by the independent establishment or department in violation of the provisions of this paragraph: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the mailing free of postage of lists of agricultural bulletins or of lists of public documents which are offered for sale by the Superintendent of Documents: Provided, That this prohibition shall not apply to the transmission of such books, reports, periodicals, bulletins, pamphlets, lists, articles, or documents to educational institutions or public libraries."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LUDLOW moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 6. On and after July 1, 1939, no executive department or independent establishment of the Government shall transmit through the mail, free of postage, any book, report, periodical, bulletin, pamphlet, list, or other article or document (except official letter correspondence, mail concerning the sale of Government securities, and all forms and blanks necessary in the administration of such departments and establishments), unless a request therefor has been previously received by such department or independent establishment or such transmission is required by law. For each quarter, beginning with the quarter commencing July 1, 1939, the head of each independent establishment and executive department (other than the Post Office Department) shall submit to the Postmaster General, within 30 days after the close of the quarter, a statement of the weight of the mail matter by classes of mail that the independent establishment or department has transmitted free of postage during such quarter, and he shall also certify to the Postmaster General at the end of each such quarter that nothing was transmitted through the mail free of postage by the independent establishment or department in violation of the provisions of this section: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit the mailing free of postage of lists of agricultural bulletins or of lists of public documents which are offered for sale by the Superintendent of Documents: Provided further, That this prohibition shall not apply to the transmission of such books, reports, periodicals, bulletins, pamphlets, lists, articles, or documents to educational institutions or public libraries."

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The purpose of this amendment is to place proper regulations around the penalty mail; that is, the mail of the governmental departments, which has been growing by leaps and bounds. The penalty mail in 1928, 10 years ago, was $8,537,730. In the year 1938 it had increased to the enormous sum of $35,690,807. It is the mail sent out postage free by the governmental departments, bureaus, and activities of all kinds. It is commonly known as the departmental penalty mail. In the same time the mail sent out under the franking privilege which is exercised by Members of Congress decreased from $909,864 to $779,369.

It has been obvious to students of governmental affairs for a long time that the penalty mail is running wild. It is high time some steps should be taken to check it. The purpose of this amendment is to place reasonable and proper restrictions around it.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I fully realize there is much weight to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, but I do not believe this is the proper way to legislate on this important subject. We all know that legislation on an appropriation bill is not allowed in the House of Representatives, but this legislation is attached to an appropriation bill in the Senate. That was done in this case. The only restriction is that it must come back here to the House for a separate vote. No hearings were had on this vital subject. The departments that are supposed to be running wild were not called in. The departments that have been adhering strictly to the rule were not given an opportunity to appear and show the necessity for the privilege in their departments.

I am fully aware that this amendment is to strike at the volume of franked mail that was sent out under the Works Progress Administration. I believe we should do something to stop some of these abuses by that Administration, but this is not the proper method of doing it. For instance, I believe that under this amendment Members of Congress would have difficulty in getting the proper number of, say, what is known as baby books from the Department of the Interior. Further, the Department of the Interior—and I do not pick out the Department of the Interior for any special reason—sends out pamphlets to farmers, miners, and others with regard to safety in the use of high explosives. In order for such people to receive these pamphlets under this amendment they would have to write and request the Department to send the pamphlets to them. These pamphlets have been a great help throughout this country in the mining industry and on the farms, especially in our section where we have used a lot of explosives in clearing land.

The Department of the Interior, through its National Park Service, also sends out some very valuable pamphlets with regard to the tourist industry. The sending out of pamphlets of this type would be practically stopped, because a special request will have to be made to the Department to send them such literature. I do not believe the Treasury Department would have any right under this amendment to send you Members of Congress the Treasury reports unless you specifically requested them. I do not believe that under this amendment you would get any of the valuable information you sometimes get from the conscientious departments unless you specifically requested these documents. If you did not know the documents were in existence, how in the world would you be able to ask for them? I believe you Members of Congress are going to penalize yourselves and penalize a large number of people if you adopt this amendment as it is carried in the bill. I have not had time to examine the committee amendment, and neither have nine-tenths of you Members, and, therefore, do not know whether it improves the Senate amendment or not. Therefore until this very important subject is properly studied by a committee in the regular course of legislation, I shall be forced to oppose this kind of amendment.

I think this should be brought up by the appropriate committee of the Congress and the officials of the departments that have been violating the franking privileges should be called in and questioned with regard thereto. We should find out who is responsible and stop it in a proper manner and not by a back-door method of this kind.

I think the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise in support of this amendment. It is a matter concerning which I have spoken on several occasions before the House. This is an opportunity for economy which we can very well accept, and we will save both time and money.

In the first place, this does not take from any Member of Congress any right whatever which he now enjoys. He can request such documents as he wishes and needs. I think my experience must be the experience of each and every other Member of the Congress, that when we get to our offices in the morning it takes us 5 or 10 minutes to run through this voluminous mass of material franked to us in which we have no particular interest, and we have to consume that time in filling our wastebaskets with things that have been sent to us at the expense of Uncle Sam. [Applause.]

I am pleased to see that this amendment is pending, in order that we may have an opportunity to save some money for the people of this country and to save the time of the Members of Congress, which they can very much more appropriately devote to the things that actually concern the interests of their constituents. I get mail practically every day with reference to some of the internal and detailed affairs of many States of the Union concerning which I have no special need for information and no reason to get the information, and if I wished it I could request it.

I hope that with practical unanimity we will take this step, which will save the taxpayers of this country a considerable sum of money and at the same time save the Members of Congress some valuable time to be applied to the real duties of their office. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support this amendment now before the House. On March 22, 1937, I delivered a speech on the floor of the House protesting against departmental franking, pointing out the tremendous cost of this franking to the people of the United States. On January 13, 1938, I delivered another speech on the floor of the House, again protesting against the use of the franking privilege by the departments and again calling attention to the tremendous cost of this departmental franking to the people of America. I am placing in the RECORD at this point a table, compiled by myself, which I placed in the RECORD of March 22, 1937, and again on January 13, 1938.

Cost of 353,991,329 pounds of paper at 0.0695 cent per pound	24,602,397

Annual cost	55,201,106
Daily cost	180,987

I call attention to the fact that during the first 4 years of this administration—that is, during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1934, 1935, 1936, and 1937—departmental franking, excluding Post Office Department franking, amounted to 2,566,504,407 pieces. This mail weighed 353,991,000 pounds. It would have taken 140 railroad engines, hauling 50 railroad cars each, with 50,000 pounds capacity each, to haul this mail out of Washington, if it were all going out of Washington.

I went to the Printing Office and got the average cost the Printing Office paid per pound for paper, as shown in the table, and found that the paper cost the Government $24,622,397. I figured out the average cost of printing per pound and found the printing cost the Government $75,506,350. When we add to these sums the lost revenue of $120,694,678 as given by the Postmaster General we find the total cost, as shown by the table, of sending out this free mail by departments during the 4-year period ending June 30, 1937, was over $220,000,000. The lost revenue alone during the first 4 years of this administration on free mail was three times that of the 4 years of the preceding administration. Allowing this Democratic administration during the first 4 years 100-percent increase in franking over the last Republican administration, it leaves $75,000,000 as the cost of what must be classified as purely political propaganda in 4 years.

Again permit me to say that I am pleased that the committee at this time is taking action to at least try to correct this abuse.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. How does the cost of the departmental franking of Government matter compare with the subsidy to second-, third-, and fourth-class mail each year?

Mr. ENGEL. The amount of departmental franking is way above any other franking.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that in 1938 we gave a subsidy of $129,000,000 to second- and third- and fourth-class mail; and how does the gentleman feel about that?

Mr. ENGEL. As far as I am concerned, I am not opposed to a proper use of the franking privilege.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman is against the Government sending out free packages; but how about second- and third-class mail?

Mr. ENGEL. The gentleman is undoubtedly referring to the franking of country weeklies and the loss sustained in carrying newspapers and magazines. Newspapers, magazines, and country weeklies pay for their own printing and their own paper. The Government pays for the cost of both the paper and the printing of matters franked in departments. While the country nominally lost $637,150 in revenue in 1938 on publications mailed free within the county, there was actually no loss because the same rural-route carriers who carried the other mail carried these country weeklies. They traveled the same miles with the same expense per mile and the same salary per mile. Not one extra mail box was added because of the fact that they carried this mail.

Regarding newspapers and magazines, I might say that we are taking a loss on all second- and third-class mail, including parcel post, whether that mail is sent by any one of the 130,000,000 people in America or by the owners of newspapers and magazines. This loss is made up by the profit we make on first-class mail. Were we to charge the full rate for carrying second- and third-class mail, the public would pay the cost in the end in increased newspaper and magazine subscription prices.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Speaking about the weekly publications, I think it ought to be brought out that they have free postage only within the county where they are published.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The motion was agreed to.

CONFERENCE REPORT, SECOND DEEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1939

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill H. R. 5219, making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, and June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up a conference report upon the second deficiency appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement.

On amendment No. 14: Appropriates $10,000,000 for grants to States for unemployment compensation administration, Social Security Board, instead of $13,000,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 15 and 16, relating to the District of Columbia: Appropriates $11,812.95 for fees of jurors and witnesses, 1938, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $11,682.25, as proposed by the House, and appropriates $22,330 additional on account of two motor-vehicle inspection stations, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 18: Appropriates an additional amount of $5,000,000 and reappropriates $1,500,000 for administration of the Sugar Act of 1937, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 21 and 22, relating to the Interior Department: Appropriates an additional amount of $45,000, fiscal year 1939, for defraying the deficit in the treasury of the municipal government of St. Croix, and appropriates $70,000 for the completion of two continuous-treatment buildings, St. Elizabeths Hospital, all as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 23: Appropriates $450,000 for salaries and expenses, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Department of Justice, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the House, and $600,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 24 and 25, relating to the Department of Labor: Removes the proposal of the House to confine expenditures to printing and binding from the $2,000 continued available until June 30, 1940, for the investigation of labor conditions in Hawaii by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the appropriation of $18,000 proposed by the House for salaries and expenses, Conference on Children in a Democracy, under the cognizance of the Children's Bureau.

On amendments Nos. 26 to 29, inclusive, relating to the Navy Department: Appropriates $47,000 under "Contingent, Bureau of Yards and Docks, 1939," and $125,000 for the purchase of land, naval radio station, Annapolis, Md., as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 30 and 31, relating to the Post Office Department: Increases by appropriation transfer beyond the increases proposed by the House the appropriations "Contract Air Mail Service, 1938 and 1939," by $36,403 and $30,000, respectively, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 32: Appropriates $10,000 on account of arbitration of smelter fumes controversy, United States and Canada, as proposed by the Senate. It was the sense of the conference committee that this additional appropriation should suffice to wind up this matter.

On amendments Nos. 33 and 34: Appropriates $941.44 for claims for damages, operation of vessels, Coast Guard, and Public Health Service, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $75.44, as proposed by the House.

On amendments Nos. 35 to 38, inclusive, relating to the War Department: Limits the appropriation proposed by the House on account of the development of rotary-wing and other aircraft to rotary-wing aircraft, and reduces the appropriation proposed by the House from $600,000 to $300,000, all as proposed by the Senate, and increases, by appropriation transfer, the appropriation "Pay of Military Academy, 1939," by $50,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 39: Makes a textual correction, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendments Nos. 40 to 50, inclusive, relating to judgments and authorized claims: Appropriates an additional amount of $138,204.96, as proposed by the Senate.

In disagreement

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments of the Senate:

On amendment No. 12, making an additional appropriation of $600,000 on account of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

On amendment No. 17, making an additional appropriation of $100,000, fiscal year 1939, on account of Dutch elm disease eradication.

On amendment No. 19, permitting the National Bituminous Coal Commission to expend during the fiscal year 1939 for "Salaries and expenses, office of the Consumers' Counsel, National Bituminous Coal Commission," and under the head "National Bituminous Coal Commission," an amount equal to the receipts covered into the Treasury under the provisions of section 3 of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937.

On amendment No. 20, making an appropriation of $4,000,000 for continuation of construction of the Parker power plant (Arizona), transmission lines, substations, and appurtenant works (reimbursable).

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to rise at this time to take issue with the capable gentlemen who have brought in this conference report on the second deficiency appropriation bill. However, they have again left out an item which I feel is vitally important to the entire country as an essential part of our national defense. I refer to the proposed research station for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics to be located at Sunnyvale, Calif.

This proposal was recommended to the House in a letter to the Speaker by the President of the United States on February 6. It was approved by the Bureau of the Budget and also has the approval of the Chief of Air Corps of the Army, the Chief of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics, and the Civil Aeronautics Authority. It has been characterized as an emergency measure, vitally essential to the progress of aviation.

This Congress is approving the appropriation of funds for the construction of airplanes running into the hundreds of millions of dollars. Is it wise to spend such tremendous amounts for construction if research is allowed to lag behind the building industry? This country does not need merely a lot of planes—it needs, and should have, the best planes in the world. Compared to the amounts already voted for national defense by this Congress, the sum requested by the N. A. C. A. for further research is a mere pittance.

In the report which accompanied the second deficiency bill, when it was first brought to the attention of the House, the following statement appears:

> The committee is not prepared to recommend that there be two laboratories 3,000 miles apart, both administered from Washington, and both of which would engage, to a very large extent, upon identical problems, although both would be capable of engaging upon the same problems.

The statement of Captain Towers before the Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations makes it clear that the work done at Sunnyvale would not necessarily be similar to that done at Langley Field:

> There would be very little duplication of work. There would be very little in the way of parallel work. * * * As I see it, there would be very few cases where both stations would be working on the same problem.

When I questioned the chairman of the House Subcommittee on Appropriations at the time this bill was first up for consideration, he replied that the committee was not opposed to further research. He stated that with more mature thought and consideration they might approve not only the Sunnyvale project but the necessity for others.

Let me read you some excerpts from the report offered by General Arnold, Chief of the Army Air Corps, and Admiral Cook, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy Department:

1. The Army and Navy are dependent upon the N. A. C. A. for scientific data for aircraft development at the single N. A. C. A. station at Langley Field, Va.
2. Another nation by the development of five aeronautical research stations now has aircraft of greater military effectiveness.
3. The Army and Navy will spend about $225,000,000 for aircraft during the coming year. This aircraft will not be all it is worth unless it is at least equal to the best produced abroad.
4. America does not want second-best aircraft. To regain leadership it is imperative that N. A. C. A. research facilities be materially expanded.
5. It is absolutely impossible to expand at Langley Field, as more room cannot be provided, and, furthermore, at least two research stations are necessary.
6. The second station should be on the west coast.
7. The Sunnyvale research station is emergency in character and of vital importance to the success of our whole program for strengthening the air defense.

I cannot believe that in the face of the testimony which has been offered by men who thoroughly understand their business, and in view of the recommendations of the highest Government officials, that we should continue a policy of penny-wise and pound-foolish in connection with this vital matter.

I sincerely hope that the committee, after further study and on more mature consideration, will see fit to approve the Sunnyvale project before the end of the current session.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first amendment in disagreement be passed over temporarily, and that the Clerk report amendment numbered 17.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

"BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY AND PLANT QUARANTINE

"Dutch elm disease eradication: For an additional amount for Dutch elm disease eradication, including the same objects and conditions specified under this heading in the Agricultural Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1939, $100,000."

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preferential motion offered by Mr. EATON of New Jersey: Mr. EATON of New Jersey moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, the question of what is going to happen to our elm trees in this country has now at last assumed a proportion which is receiving some intelligent attention upon the part of our people. We have 16,000,000,000 board feet of elm lumber in our forests. We have over $600,000,000 worth, on the least valuation, of shade trees, which have a sentimental value of incalculable proportions. I am told that the objection to furnishing our Agricultural Department with the proper financial equipment to fight this elm disease, which is bound to destroy the elms in this country, is based very largely upon a fixed conception on the part of our distinguished friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. He states that the proper thing to do is to cut a ring around the diseased tree from 5 to 10 miles thick, and in each case so end the possibility of this disease being carried from one section to another.

Let us see how absurd and impossible that cure will be. In Portsmouth, Va., we have two or three diseased trees. The gentleman proposes to cut a ring 10 miles thick around that entire area. Out in Columbus, Ohio, you have three diseased trees. Another 10-mile area is to be cut around that. In Indianapolis you have some 30 trees. In New York State and in New Jersey a great many more. By the time you get a 10-mile thick ring cut down you would have bugs far beyond the 10-mile ring unless you cut the 10-mile ring all down in 1 day.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. PITTENGER. As a matter of fact, did not the Director of the Budget recommend $200,000 instead of $100,000?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I thank the gentleman for the correction. The Director of the Budget recommended $200,000 instead of $100,000. It was passed by the House and then was rejected on a technicality. I sincerely hope that the people in the areas of this country where these magnificent trees are God's beautiful gift to us will stand up here and be counted. There is a public opinion setting in, indignant because of the indifference of this House to this most important matter. I hope and pray that my motion will be agreed to by a splendid majority and we will take hold of this problem the way we should. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by printing in the RECORD a speech I delivered before the Manhattan Democratic Club of the Eighth Assembly District, New York City.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made and include certain tables compiled by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include some facts with reference to the steel industry of this country which were prepared for me by Ben Marsh, of the People's Lobby.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, we have before the House today a conference report on the second deficiency appropriation bill in which there are several items in disagreement. One of these items, number 20, pertains to an appropriation of $4,000,000 to build a transmission line from Parker Dam on the Colorado River to Phoenix, Ariz., and also to provide a part of the generating facilities planned for Parker Dam. I wish to say a few words in explanation of this item further than my brief statement made to the House subcommittee on March 10, last month, as recorded on page 512 of the hearings. An emergency has appeared in agricultural conditions in central Arizona which explains the necessity and the haste for the appropriation we are seeking here. The most admirable statement concerning this may be found in the hearings of the Senate subcommittee on H. R. 5219 made by Commissioner John C. Page on Friday, March 31, as recorded on page 112 to page 125 of those hearings.

As I have so many times on the floor of this Chamber said, the Salt River Valley project is the premier reclamation project of the West. It was one of the first, and has been preeminently successful. It is financially sound and has proven itself the most solvent and justifiable of all Uncle Sam's ventures in the field of reclamation. A happy combination of several factors, together with good business management, has contributed to this result. It may be that the amount of land under the project has come dangerously near the limits of the entire water facilities in it, for it is true that while there is storage capacity enough, we have occasionally been short of surface water. The need for additional irrigation water requires pumping from the underground storage when our surface reservoirs are low. Such is the case right now. On January 1 of this year we found that we had only about one-seventh of the water necessary to fill all our reservoirs on the Salt River, though if they were all full, it would be several years' supply.

This will mean that we will have to pump some water for irrigation at the latter part of this growing season. It will mean that we cannot produce electric power at the dams up to their full capacity, because the water must be conserved, and also that the Salt River Water Users' Association will need a great deal of power which they cannot afford to produce with hydroelectric equipment. Therefore they must either buy this power or build additional stand-by plants to produce it. They have just recently built some stand-by plants, one of which cost more than a million dollars, but even these are not sufficient.

Fortunately an abundance of hydroelectric power, not too far away, is available and waiting to be used. The great dam on the Colorado River, just below the mouth of the Bill Williams River, known as the Parker Dam, is one of the highest dams in the world. When it was built by the Reclamation Bureau, with funds supplied by the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California, the foundation was prepared for a giant powerhouse, but the plant itself was not installed, there being then no immediate need of so much power. The Government of the United States is to get one-half of the power which will be produced at Parker Dam, the Metropolitan Water District receiving the other half.

This item of $4,000,000 is asked for on behalf of the Reclamation Bureau to put in the generating plant and build a power line into the capital city of Arizona. Power may begin to flow over this transmission line just the moment it is completed, for it will hook on to the power line from Boulder Dam which now comes to the Parker Dam carrying a surplus of energy. If this item is approved by the House today and by the Senate this week, the line could be built and power flowing over it to Phoenix by next September, or the latter part of this growing season. The Salt River Valley Water Users Association and a private utility have already signed contracts to take a certain amount of power, agreeing to pay three quarters of a million dollars annually for the same. Commissioner John Page says that this is the most favorable contract which the United States Government could possibly enter upon. He figures that it will repay the principle in 14 years and the entire amount with interest in 20 years. Repayment on this money is as certain as repayments on all monies invested in the various parts of the Salt River Valley project have been during the last third of a century.

Not only will this appropriation be one of the safest and soundest business propositions, but it is vitally needed at this very time, and it will have untold possibilities of economic development in central and western Arizona. The line to be built from Parker to Phoenix passes through a mineralized mountain belt and also through several wonderful valleys where agriculture may be carried on by means of pumping. I am assured by Commissioner Page that reasonable rates to the consumers are guaranteed in the Salt River Valley and power for mining and agricultural uses are made possible by this contract. Therefore I urge the House to concur with the Senate in this amendment.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include certain letters and statements with reference to the cotton and jute industry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1939—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, the question of the Dutch elm eradication has been one of the most controversial and disturbing things we have had to contend with in the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the Department of Agriculture. I shall take no sides in this controversy. I merely want to get all the facts before the committee.

There is an opinion that this Dutch elm disease came to this country from Holland in the form of burl logs that had been imported. It was first discovered in Cincinnati in 1930 when they discovered one tree. In 1932 they discovered eight trees. Since that time discoveries and disclosures have continued until in 1938 the Department of Entomology and Plant Quarantine estimates there are in excess of 46,000 elm trees that are now infested.

Forty-five thousand of that number are in New Jersey and in New York. The other 1,000 or 1,200 are scattered over seven or eight States. We have appropriated considerable money to deal with this matter. Frankly I was amazed when I went back and checked all the regular and emergency appropriations and found that since 1930 we have appropriated approximately $15,000,000 in both the regular and emergency appropriations, dealing with this blight. I realize the seriousness of it. My only difficulty in the matter is whether we have been accomplishing any good, for year after year the appropriations have increased, but the number of infected trees has increased from 1 to 46,000 since 1930. I know those who live in the areas where they have the fine, stately elms are thoroughly disturbed about this matter. My whole agitation about it is whether or not the Department of Plant Quarantine has been following the right kind of procedure in dealing with it. We have watched the area expand year after year, even though the appropriations have so substantially increased. So in the discussions that were held in the subcommittee dealing with the Department of Agriculture appropriation we have taken them severely to task. About the only thing they can tell us is that they can continue with their measures of control, and continue to cut down trees.

The Dutch elm virus infects the tree. It causes a little furrow in the tree under the bark, and finally blights the tree entirely. They have hit upon the idea of using W. P. A. labor to cut down the trees. They estimate it has cost as much as $100 to cut down a single large elm. Sometimes they do not receive the right cooperation from the States, since there is no law under which you can compel a property owner to cut down a tree.

In many instances there was no cooperation on the part of those who owned the property where the trees were located; and I confess myself at something of a loss as to just how we are to proceed on this whole question, since the blighted area is expanding year by year.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey rose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I now yield to my beloved and very steadfast friend from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman this question: If on the appearance of this important plague the experts of the Department of Agriculture had been furnished sufficient money and support to have employed their experts to grapple with this proposition in a small area would they not have succeeded? As it is they have been grudgingly granted a few dollars so that they could not put it in the hands of experts. It must be placed in the hands of experts. As it has been they sent out a few W. P. A. workers who did not know an elm tree from a hole in the ground, and they changed the personnel every few days, with the result that most of the $15,000,000 has been wasted. Unless we take hold of this thing before it is too late we are going to lose our elm trees just as we lost our chestnut.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There is much in what the gentleman says. There have been no experts go out and look into the foliage of the trees and identify the existence of such elm disease in that particular tree. They guess at it ofttimes. This has been one of the effects simply because they were not prepared for that kind of special work. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman that a great deal of the $15,000,000 has been wasted.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman just referred to our distinguished colleague from New Jersey as his beloved and steadfast friend.

Mr. DIRKSEN. He has been a steadfast friend indeed.

Mr. McCORMACK. And the gentleman from New Jersey has always been the steadfast friend of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does not the gentleman from Illinois think, then, that he should be steadfast now to his friend from New Jersey?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to my friend from Massachusetts that I feel under deep obligation to my genial friend from New Jersey, and I just wanted to get the facts clearly before the House so there could be no misapprehension as to the number of trees affected and the amount of money that has been expended, and the fact, as we so beautifully agreed, that a great deal of it has been wasted.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. And, of course, the gentleman wants to emphasize the fact that we are at the danger zone now with 46,000 affected trees.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. We from New England have an additional reason for wanting the Dutch elm beetle removed, if possible, because we lost so many of our fine trees during the hurricane. I went through that section recently. It is very tragic to see our beautiful trees down. We certainly must try in every way possible to save the remaining elm trees.

I earnestly hope our colleague from Illinois will not turn us down in the matter of this small sum.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I hope if this appropriation is made, some way will be found whereby we can get something approaching efficiency in dealing with its expenditure.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. If what the gentleman states is true, that the disease has spread from one tree to 45,000 trees during the period of 8 years, have we not reached the point now which promises complete destruction of our elm trees all over the United States in due time?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the disease continues at the rate it has been going, yes. It has been progressing—shall I say geometrically or arithmetically?

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Astronomically.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It will soon spread to every State in the Union.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. MAHON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I dare say I have planted as many elm trees as anyone on this floor. I am as deeply interested in the preservation of elm trees as any man who has spoken here today could possibly be. That is why I am opposed to this amendment. If I thought the appropriation of this money would contribute in the slightest degree to the solution of this problem I would be the first to advocate it; but the spending of this $100,000 will not save a single tree.

The committee has been investigating this situation since 1934. During that time, down to the close of this fiscal year, the Government has spent a total of $16,383,532, and not a single tree has been saved. Nothing has been accomplished in the expenditure of this vast sum of money except to cut down the trees after they are lost, thus saving the owner the expense of removing them.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. I ask the gentleman, with his influence and prominent position in the House and in this administration, why he does not jack up the Agricultural Department and see that we do get something for our money.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. "How oft would we have saved ye, and ye would not." The Department of Agriculture is spending money every year in scientific research outside of this item. It is doing everything that can be done to find a remedy, and the only thing we have learned definitely is that money spent in this way is wasted. It is agreed that if we would surround these elms with a zone from which all susceptible trees were removed, in the same way in which a fire in the city is stopped by blowing up the buildings ahead of it, we could save our elm trees; but the States do not seem to be interested in this practical method as long as the Federal Government continues to pour out millions of dollars of easy money every year.

This $16,000,000 has been spent with no result except to give work to the unemployed and to remove trees which should have been removed and burned by the owners. We have nothing else to show for the $16,000,000; and if this $100,000 is spent, I ask anyone here what else we will have to show for it.

We are spending this year alone $2,310,489 for the same purpose for which you propose to spend this additional $100,000, and it has not saved a tree or retarded the advance of the disease to the slightest extent.

If since we began to spend money on Dutch elm disease in 1934 we had not spent a penny of this $16,383,352 and every cent of that vast sum was today in the Treasury of the United States or expended in some service to the Government and the people, the disease would be in exactly the situation in which it is today. If no money had ever been expended, the disease would cover precisely the same territory it covers today; the number of elm trees in the United States dead or alive, the number of trees affected and unaffected, the number of trees inoculated and immune in the United States, would be exactly the number today. No one can gainsay this fact. No one can refute this statement.

What then has been gained by this huge disbursement from the Treasury? And, especially, what is to be gained by continuing this headlong dissipation of Government funds at a time when every dollar must be borrowed and added to the national debt? We have already exceeded the national revenues this year, and further expenditures, such as proposed in this amendment, must be raised by the sale of more Government bonds.

And that brings to mind another remarkable phase of this proposed expenditure. There never has been an authorization for these expenditures. This more than $16,000,000 has been spent without legislative authorization. The activity started like the shelter belt started. It was done without consulting Congress. Money was taken from emergency funds. And the bulk of money for this purpose is still being taken from emergency funds. Out of the $16,383,352 spent here, $15,372,872 has been spent without consulting Congress. Fifteen out of every sixteen dollars spent cutting down these trees has been taken from W. P. A. funds.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. This committee has since 1934 investigated this question every year, and every one of these committees in all those years has been unanimous—and the committee is unanimous today—in reporting that no progress has been made, that no trees can be saved by the expenditure of any sum of money in this manner. As a matter of fact, it is the unanimous opinion of the committee which has investigated this subject for 5 years that to agree to this appropriation will delay eradication and retard the control of the disease. It is like a patient suffering from cancer. Somebody insists he has a panacea, "For $2 I will sell you a salve that will cure cancer," and the patient, relying on the statement, pays his $2 and delays legitimate treatment until the malady is past control. As long as we go along spending money this way and getting no results—permitting the blight to spread as it has been spreading unchecked these 5 years—we are allowing the disease to make such progress that the time will eventually come when we cannot control it by any methcd.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The Subcommittee on Agriculture reported for the next fiscal year an appropriation, did it not?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We reported a very small appropriation, in response to earnest importunities from Members of the House, for the purpose of administering the W. P. A. funds which are being spent for this purpose, and over which we have no control; but we indicated at that time, both in our report and by the cutting down of the amount requested that we were convinced, after long study, that this money cannot possibly result in the saving of one single elm tree or the retarding of the advance of the disease by a single day. In order to reach a real solution of this question and to secure the adoption of rational methods before it is too late, we ask you to support the position taken by the House repeatedly on previous occasions. The House, on every proposition that has been made in the last 5 years to increase the amount, has voted down the motion. The committee is unanimous in its recommendation that you vote down the Senate amendment.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Is it not a fact that the Bureau of the Budget has recommended for the next fiscal year an appropriation for this purpose in the amount of over $778,000?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It also recommended millions of dollars for the European corn borer, and not a Member on this floor today can deny that every dollar of those millions was wasted. It recommended millions of dollars for the Mediterranean fruitfly, and Mr. Buchanan, the chairman of the committee, came back from Florida, after studying the matter at close range, and said that in his opinion there had never been a Mediterranean fruitfly down there to begin with.

The real point in this issue is that we have spent over $16,000,000 and no one can show that we are any closer to a remedy for, or control of, the disease than when we began. Surely 5 years and $16,000,000 are time enough and money enough to see that we are on the wrong track. It is so plain that he who runs may read. Is not it time to try a remedy that all agree will do the work in 1 year rather than to continue to spend millions of dollars every year cutting down dead trees while the contagion ravages our forests unchecked?

Let me emphasize again the fact that every committee which has investigated this subject in the last 5 years—both the minority and the majority—are unanimous in this opinion—and in the recommendation that the Senate amendment be voted down.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, the debate thus far has certainly been enlightening, but I ask the Members of the House to refer to the report of the committee, in which there was recommended the sum of $200,000 for this purpose when the bill first came before the House for consideration, which is twice the sum that we are now asked to vote for in connection with the Dutch elm disease control.

The chairman of the committee, who has just spoken, sought to leave the impression that we are not to follow the recommendations of the Budget Bureau and that they have gone big-hearted and are too generous. I cannot believe the Budget Bureau would have approved the appropriation for next year if this was a waste of money.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The House cannot overlook the fact that if we follow the statement of the gentleman from Missouri, everyone who is interested in an appropriation to meet any condition of this kind in any part of the country will have to meet the same objection, because if it applies to this particular appropriation it is going to apply to every other appropriation, whether it concerns Texas, Florida, or any other section of the country, for the argument of the gentleman from Missouri is against all of them.

Mr. MILLER. Leaving the technicalities, what I am interested in is making an additional attempt to save the elm trees from this disease. I know criticism was indicated in the committee to the effect that the States have not spent sufficient of their own money for this purpose, but I call your attention to the fact that throughout this area thousands of owners of private property have spent huge sums trying to fight this disease on elm trees on their own property. The towns throughout New England make appropriations each year and spend them under the direction of their tree wardens and a large part of these town appropriations has been used to fight the Dutch elm tree disease. Now we are faced with the situation where we have appropriated and spent $15,000,000. Whether all or any part of this was wasted I do not know, but I did read the testimony of the Department of Agriculture experts before the Committee on Appropriations and apparently these experts still feel they can eventually do something to ease this situation. Certainly they appeared in favor of this appropriation. I hope that for a sum of $100,000 we will not jeopardize an investment already made amounting to $15,000,000. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I believe we ought to consider in voting on the preferential motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] some of the evidence that has been submitted. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] made the statement that nothing can be done but cut down the trees. I have before me the hearings of the Committee on Appropriations on the deficiency bill and I see from the testimony of Dr. Strong, the Chief of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, that the work of trying to control the Dutch elm beetle is not entirely confined to cutting down the trees. Some of this money is wanted for scouting purposes, for finding where the diseased trees are. They also are anxious to study further the possibility of definite eradication of the disease without destroying the trees. If we deprive them of the funds necessary for any of this work we are simply going to permit a continually growing infestation by the Dutch elm tree beetle. I believe it is a mistake to allow such a situation to develop.

I am not interested so much in the commercial value of elm trees, but I live in a very beautiful area of New England, and everyone interested in the appearance of our section of the country is very much frightened and worried because this disease is getting very near our boundaries. It is already in the northern part of Connecticut and the eastern part of New York. Therefore, the people who want to see the beauties of New England and all other sections of the country preserved do not want to allow this disease to spread. Certainly, the development of means of eradication and the obtaining of information relative to the control of the disease require an appropriation.

We were unfortunate in that the original item of appropriation was stricken out on a point of order. As the Bureau of the Budget, the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, and the other body of Congress all recommend this deficiency appropriation for the remainder of this fiscal year, it seems to me this House would be making a very serious mistake and injuring very materially the attractiveness of an area in which we are all interested by refusing at this time to continue what appears to be a very modest appropriation for a very worthy cause. I certainly hope, and I am speaking in behalf of organizations in my own section of the country, that the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey will prevail and that the House will vote to concur with the Senate on this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). The question is on the preferential motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. EATON of New Jersey) there were—ayes 61, noes 63.

Mr. EATON of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia and Mr. EATON of New Jersey.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 88, noes 57.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-seven Members are present, not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 121, not voting 123, as follows:

ADDITIONAL PRINTING AND BINDING, TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 279, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

House Joint Resolution 279

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, namely:

Printing and binding, Treasury Department: For an additional amount for printing and binding, Treasury Department, fiscal year 1939, including the same objects specified under this head in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1939, $163,000.

Stationery, Treasury Department: For an additional amount for stationery for the Treasury Department, fiscal year 1939, including the same objects specified under this head in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1939, $113,400.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virgina?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This resolution provides for a fund to provide capital stock returns and social-security tax returns, blanks which have to go out before the first of July. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] and I have had hearings on this this afternoon. These are items which should be provided right away. We are in favor of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request for present consideration?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WORK RELIEF (H. DOC. NO. 270)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Six years ago this Nation was confronted with a situation calling for rapid and decisive action. Millions of workers were already jobless, their number was increasing, and the economic structure was threatened with collapse. In this crisis the vast reserves of the Federal Government were promptly made available, and emergency assistance was provided for all classes of the population who were in distress.

Since that time we have moved along a broad front to make permanent provision to meet various phases of the problem of unemployment and need. The Social Security Act provides aid for the aged, the blind, and for dependent children. Unemployment compensation, intended to tide workers over from one job to another, furnishes protection against short-term unemployment of the intermittent variety. Public works have employed many persons.

But there has been, and still is, a vast number of unemployed workers for whom some other protection must be provided.

It is very important to remember that the fundamental decision which was made in connection with the problem of providing for the needy able-bodied unemployed was whether provision should be made through the medium of work or a dole. I have on numerous occasions expressed my conviction that the proper solution was work, but I desire to take this opportunity to reaffirm my conviction in that regard.

In fact, for 6 years it has been the definite national policy to give work to the needy unemployed who are able to work instead of handing out charity to them in the form of food.

It is admitted that the cost per individual of a work program is higher than that of a dole. However, I firmly believe that the advantages which accrue from the maintenance of the morale and self-respect of the worker and the creation of permanent public assets fully justify this increased cost, and that the adoption of the dole as the solution of this problem would be disastrous.

When those who talk glibly and without much information about cutting the cost of relief are pinned down to facts, they are obliged to admit that they can offer only two alternative plans—to cut down the number of needy persons receiving relief or to cut the per capita work payments; or, in other words, make a definite beginning toward the substitution of a dole for work.

It is these same individuals who, picking out a handful of instances in the administration of a huge undertaking, seek to delude the people of this country into the belief that the minor exception is the rule. Let any one of these critics undertake the job of administration himself. That is a challenge which will be avoided but not answered.

There is wide discussion at the present time of various proposals for handling unemployment relief through a system of grants of Federal funds to States with various matching requirements. I believe that such a system has as many disadvantages as there are local political units in the Nation. If grants to States are used for direct relief, we have all the disadvantageous features of the dole which I have previously described. If, on the other hand, such grants are to be used to finance locally conducted work programs, inefficiency and confusion through lack of coordination and uniformity are bound to result. Under either the dole or local work programs the administrative cost will inevitably be much larger than under a federally operated work program.

Furthermore, I am of the opinion that the adoption of a system of direct grants of Federal funds to States would result in the creation of pressure groups striving to increase the amount of such grants, which would bring about a demand for increased appropriations which both the present Congress and future Congresses would find it extremely difficult to resist.

In my message of April 14, 1938, I recommended to the Congress a series of measures designed to check the deflationary processes and the failure of consumers' demand which were occurring at that time. Since the adoption by the Congress of the recovery program outlined in that message, the index of industrial production has increased more than one-quarter. The national income, which amounted to $62,000,000,000 in 1938, is now running at a rate which should increase it to $67,000,000,000 in 1939. This I regard as all important, because, as stated in my message of last April, I believe that if the national income can be increased to $80,000,000,000, our whole economic picture will greatly improve and the problem of unemployment will become much less acute. However, I wish to repeat what I said at that time: I do not believe that this increase in national income can be brought about solely by the expenditure of public funds for relief and recovery purposes.

From the standpoint of private employment, the economic situation has greatly improved. Employment declined steadily and drastically from 1929 to 1932. Improvement began in 1933, and by the early fall of 1937 almost 10,000,000 more persons had jobs than were employed during the month when this administration took office. Average nonagricultural employment during 1937 was within 1,000,000 of the annual average for 1929. After a temporary setback last year we are now regaining the lost ground. There is every reason to believe that average employment during 1939 will be well in excess of that for 1938. I wish to stress the point that when the situation is viewed in terms of employment, the losses sustained from 1929 to 1932 had practically been wiped out by 1937.

We have found, however, that in spite of substantial recovery as indicated by the amount of employment, the volume of unemployment continues at high levels. This is due in large measure to two factors. The first of these is that the net increase in the labor supply, due to the growth of the working population, is in excess of 500,000 workers annually.

The second prime factor in this picture is the increasing output of the individual worker. At the recovery peak in 1937, when industrial production was at approximately the 1929 level, there were still about 8,000,000 unemployed. From this and subsequent experience it is apparent that comparatively high levels of production mean substantially less employment than formerly.

In any consideration of the problem of unemployment relief it must be borne in mind that the program adopted to meet it must be envisioned to extend over a considerable period of time. The reason for this is that this Nation, in common with the entire world, is undergoing a process of readjustment, particularly in connection with the production and distribution of goods. Until our economic machinery can be realined to meet present-day conditions, the problem of unemployment will persist and the measures adopted to deal with it must, therefore, be carefully thought out and their operation planned to extend well into the future.

In determining the numbers of persons for whom work on a Federal program should be provided, it is necessary to consider the number of needy able-bodied unemployed. The total unemployment estimates for the Nation run to very large totals, but it must be remembered that these totals cover all persons who desire a job and include many who do not actually have to have a job. In other words, there are in all the unemployment estimates large numbers of persons who can sustain themselves either by reason of private resources or because they can be supported within the family group to which they belong. It is, of course, to be desired that industry should expand to such a degree as to provide employment for all who desire it, but in meeting the problem of need within the limits of the funds which can reasonably be made available for the purpose, the emphasis must necessarily be placed upon the number of unemployed individuals who are actually in need of wages in order to secure the necessities of life.

For the current fiscal year the Congress has provided for the Works Progress Administration appropriations totaling approximately $2,250,000,000. With these funds the Works Progress Administration has provided employment for a maximum of 3,350,000 persons and is currently employing approximately 2,800,000. The average employment provided for the fiscal year will be approximately 3,000,000 persons.

In my Budget message of January 3, 1939, I stated that "Supplemental estimates of appropriations will be submitted to meet the requirements of the Works Progress Administration, the National Youth Administration, and the Farm Security Administration for the fiscal year 1940," and that $1,750,000,000 was the amount estimated for expenditure by these three agencies. I feel that this amount plus such balances of the appropriation for the current year as remain unobligated on June 30, 1939, should cover not only all obligations to be incurred by these agencies during the fiscal year 1940 but the necessary administrative expenses connected therewith which may be incurred by the General Accounting Office, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, the Treasury, and the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, including compensation payments.

For the fiscal year 1940 I recommend, therefore, that the specific sum of $1,477,000,000 be provided for the Works Progress Administration together with any balances of the appropriation for the current year which may remain unobligated on June 30, 1939. This represents a reduction of one-third below the amount provided in the current fiscal year and will permit the employment of slightly more than an average of 2,000,000 persons during the 12 months beginning July 1, 1939. Barring unforeseen and unpredictable developments, we are justified in expecting an upward trend in the volume of employment between now and June 30, 1940, and the sum just named represents my judgment as to the amount that should be provided on the basis of that expectation.

After a review of the accomplishments of jobless workers employed on Works Progress Administration projects, I am impressed with what can be achieved through a program that not only provides jobs for distressed workers but also stimulates purchasing power and tends to induce further recovery. I commend to your attention the miles of roads and streets that have been built, the number of bridges and public buildings that have been constructed, and the worth-while accomplishments in the fields of education, recreation, sanitation and health, and conservation and flood control. Notwithstanding these accomplishments there is a vast amount of worth-while work remaining to be done. Expenditures in these fields represent permanent, tangible additions to our national wealth.

It is my opinion that the operations of the Works Progress Administration during the next fiscal year should be carried on much as at present, but with the reduction that will be possible because of expected increases in private employment and a consequent decline in the need for work relief. Organizational changes which I expect to be made under the authority granted in the recent Reorganization Act will, I anticipate, make possible important economies resulting from the coordination of the operations of various Federal agencies which are engaged in the carrying out of projects.

I wish to state with emphasis, since the opposite view is frequently expressed, that the program of the Works Progress Administration should, as at present, include some projects of the nonconstruction type to meet the needs of those unemployed workers whose training is such that they are not adapted to employment on construction projects. The provision of work for those people at occupations which will conserve their skills is of prime importance, and the emphasis placed upon construction projects should not obscure the necessity for this portion of the program.

A committee of the House of Representatives, under the authority of an enabling resolution, is now conducting an investigation of the Works Progress Administration. I sincerely hope that this investigation will be guided along constructive lines, and if this is done I feel sure that its outcome will be to demonstrate the wisdom of the measures which have been adopted to meet the needs of the unemployed. In discussions of the projects of the Works Progress Administration there is a tendency to enlarge upon criticism of a few isolated projects to an extent which obscures the real character and value of the program as a whole. In an undertaking of this size there are inevitably individual instances which may be subject to criticism, but when the criticism of a very small fraction of the work being carried on is magnified to such an extent as to obscure the great good that is being achieved on the whole all sense of proportion and relative value is lost.

In my message to the Congress of January 5, 1939, I suggested that a study be made of the methods by which funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration should be distributed. Any formula that may be devised for this purpose and written into legislation should take in account not only the factor of population, but also the constantly changing economic and unemployment conditions in various sections of the country. Allocations should be made on the basis of jobs to be provided and not on the local basis of funds to be distributed. Furthermore, the formula should not be too rigid and should permit a substantial amount of administrative discretion in order to provide sufficient flexibility to meet special situations and relief crises.

The matter of the contributions of sponsors to Works Progress Administration projects has been satisfactorily covered by the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, which placed a limit upon the amount of Federal funds that can be used for purposes other than the payment of wages. I suggest a continuation of this practice rather than the imposition of a percentage basis on which sponsors would be required to participate. With an appropriation made available for an entire fiscal year, negotiations with sponsors can be conducted upon a much more satisfactory basis, and it can be confidently expected that the proportion of sponsors' contributions will be appreciably increased. The complications which have arisen during the current fiscal year from the fact that three separate appropriations have been made to finance the operations of the Works Progress Administration have militated against efficiency of operation and made it difficult to secure the fullest financial participation of sponsors on projects.

The Congress has recently made provisions against improper political activity on the part of persons connected with the work-relief program—provisions affecting not only Federal employees, but all persons who may be in a position to bring improper pressure to bear. Such legislation was recommended in my message of January 5, 1939, and has my hearty endorsement. However, insofar as the administrative employees of the Works Progress Administration and of the other agencies connected with the work-relief program are concerned, I believe that the political provisions just mentioned would be more constructive, and their enforcement would be simpler, if the Congress would place such employees within the classified civil service.

The greatest single resource of this country is its youth, and no progressive government can afford to ignore the needs of its future citizens for adequate schooling and for that useful work which establishes them as a part of its economy. To ignore this need is to undermine the very basis of democracy which requires the constant renewal of its vitality through the absorption of its young people.

The National Youth Administration, as an entity now within the Works Progress Administration, has during the past 4 years developed a program which has proved its effectiveness in meeting this need. Its program is primarily one of work: work to enable needy students to secure an education, and work to enable unemployed needy young people who are out of school to make use of their capacities for public benefit and so in turn to earn a wage and acquire that work experience so essential to future effective employment. The National Youth Administration has supplemented its work program with other services directed toward increasing the effectiveness of young people as workers and securing their placement in regular employment.

It is my belief that we should now give official recognition to the fact that the needs of youth are different from those of unemployed older workers. I further believe that, based on the demonstrated ability of its program to meet these needs at low cost, and our knowledge of the wide and still unmet need among young people for its services, Congress should provide for an expansion of its activities.

For the National Youth Administration I am requesting an appropriation of $123,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940 together with the unobligated balances on June 30, 1939, of the appropriation to that Administration for the current fiscal year.

I am requesting further that the National Youth Administration be established as a separate agency to continue and expand its program for assisting needy young people. This will not increase existing overhead.

While the amount which I am recommending will not meet all the needs of all our young people, it will mean that education, training, work experience, and help toward private employment can be extended to many needy young people who are now eagerly waiting to take their place in our society as responsible workers and citizens.

It has been the function of the Farm Security Administration to provide assistance for hundreds of thousands of destitute and low-income farm families through supervised loans and guidance in sound farming practices, through adjustment of farmers' debts, and, where necessary, by direct subsistence grants. This program has kept thousands of farmers off relief and has enabled them, largely through their own efforts, to become self-supporting American citizens and to assume their rightful place in rural life. Aside from the further development of camps for migratory farm laborers, construction under the resettlement program will have been completed by the close of the current fiscal year, although in a few instances it may be necessary to provide funds for land-development work.

For the foregoing activities of the Farm Security Administration I recommend an appropriation of $123,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940, together with such balances of the current appropriation as may remain unobligated on June 30, 1939.

Owing to the language of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Acts for the last 2 years it has been necessary to use funds allocated to or appropriated to the Department of Agriculture to provide for relief for Indians who come under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. I feel that it would be preferable to have these funds appropriated directly to the department primarily responsible for the welfare of the Indians.

In view of the foregoing, I recommend an appropriation of $1,350,000 for the Indian Service for the fiscal year 1940 to be available for the continuation of Indian rehabilitation and relief projects, including necessary administrative expenses.

For the following agencies, for administrative expenses incident to carrying out the purposes for which the foregoing appropriations have been requested, I recommend the amounts indicated:

(1) Civil Aeronautics Authority		$250,000
(2) General Accounting Office		5,225,000
(3) Treasury Department:
(a) Procurement Division	$5,200,000
(b) Division of Disbursements	2,500,000
(c) Office of the Treasurer	675,000
(d) Secret Service	250,000
(e) Division of Accounts and Deposits	6,000,000
(f) Public Health Service	300,000
(4) U. S. Employees' Compensation Commission		5,250,000

The funds recommended for appropriation to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission are sufficient to provide for the reimbursement of Federal hospitals for hospitalization of persons paid from relief appropriations in the same manner as they are now reimbursed for the hospitalization of other Federal employees paid from regular appropriations. I feel that the necessary authority to make such payments should be included in this year's legislation.

I request also that in connection with the foregoing appropriations, as in the past, provision be made to continue the work of the National Emergency Council, the National Resources Committee, and the rural rehabilitation program of the Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration. For this purpose I recommend the following appropriations for the fiscal year 1940:

(1) National Emergency Council	$1,500,000
(2) National Resources Committee	990,000
(3) Puerto Rico Reconstruction Administration	10,000,000

In order that the agencies concerned may have an opportunity to formulate definite plans for the next fiscal year it is desirable that the necessary legislation be enacted at as early a date as possible and that the funds be made available on the passage of this legislation.

It may be of interest to the Congress to know that through the Department of State we have received many assertions that there are few unemployed persons in the nations which have accepted totalitarian forms of government.

In those nations private employment takes care of a smaller proportion of their employable citizens than private employment does in the United States.

This means that Government employment is responsible for the care of a larger portion of the employable population than in this country—creating, in fact, a Government employment system, based in great part on the manufacture of munitions, which costs far more than our system.

The principal difference is that in the nations to which I refer, this employment is called employment, whereas in the United States it is called relief.

Actually, our system of work relief is relatively far cheaper than the other method and as at present constituted does take care of the great majority of the needy unemployed who are able to work.

I trust that the people will not be deceived by the terminology and will not assume that the totalitarian methods of government are more effective than our own.

The system which we have favored in the United States during the past 6 years is by no means perfect. It can be improved but not at the expense of substituting the dole for work relief nor by turning the management of works projects back to the sole care of the many thousands of local governments. It will be said by history, after much political smoke has cleared away, that the Federal Government's handling of work relief has been one of our most efficient administrative accomplishments.

TRANSCONTINENTAL TOLL ROADS, ETC. (H. DOC. NO. 272)

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Roads and ordered to be printed, with illustrations:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, concurred in by the Secretary of War, enclosing a report of the Bureau of Public Roads, United States Department of Agriculture, on the feasibility of a system of transcontinental toll roads and a master plan for free highway development.

The report, prepared at the request of the Congress, is the first complete assembly of data on the use being made of our national highway network. It points definitely to the corrective measures of greatest urgency and shows that existing improvements may be fully utilized in meeting ultimate highway needs.

It emphasizes the need of a special system of direct interregional highways, with all necessary connections through and around cities, designed to meet the requirements of the national defense and the needs of a growing peacetime traffic of longer range.

It shows that there is need for superhighways, but makes it clear that this need exists only where there is congestion on the existing roads, and mainly in metropolitan areas. Improved facilities, needed for the solution of city street congestion, are shown to occupy a fundamental place in the general replanning of the cities indicated as necessary in the report, Our Cities, issued in September 1937 by the National Resources Committee.

The report also points definitely to difficulties of rights-of-way acquisition as obstacles to a proper development of both rural highways and city streets, and makes important and useful recommendations for dealing with those difficulties.

I call the special attention of the Congress to the discussion of the principle of "excess taking" of land for highways. I lay great emphasis on this, because by adopting the principle of excess taking of land, the ultimate cost to the Government of a great national system of highways will be greatly reduced.

For instance, we all know that it is largely a matter of chance if a new highway is located through one man's land and misses another man's land a few miles away. Yet the man who, by good fortune, sells a narrow right-of-way for a new highway makes, in most cases, a handsome profit through the increase in value of all of the rest of his land. That represents an unearned increment of profit, a profit which comes to a mere handful of lucky citizens and which is denied to the vast majority.

Under the exercise of the principle of excess-taking of land, the Government, which puts up the cost of the highway, buys a wide strip on each side of the highway itself, uses it for the rental of concessions and sells it off over a period of years to home builders and others who wish to live near a main artery of travel. Thus the Government gets the unearned increment and reimburses itself in large part for the building of the road.

In its full discussion of the whole highway problem and the wealth of exact data it supplies, the report indicates the broad outlines of what might be regarded as a master plan for the development of all of the highway and street facilities of the Nation.

I recommend the report for the consideration of the Congress as a basis for needed action to solve our highway problems.

INTERTERRITORIAL FREIGHT RATES (H. DOC. NO. 271)

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Herewith I submit a survey entitled "Supplemental Phases of the Interterritorial Freight Rate Problem of the United States," which survey was conducted by the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, pursuant to Executive Order No. 6161 (June 8, 1933), by which are delegated to it certain powers granted to me by sections 22 and 23 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

I am, also, herewith submitting a letter from the Tennessee Valley Authority, dated the 6th day of February 1939, forwarding the aforesaid survey to me, explaining its relation to the initial report on this subject submitted to the Congress on June 7, 1937, and published as House Document No. 264 (75th Cong., 1st sess.). This letter also restates the views of the Authority on the effects upon our national economy of the regional freight-rate discrimination disclosed in the two reports, and urges the adoption of appropriate legislation to eliminate this discrimination.

I invite the attention of the Congress to the suggestion, contained in the Authority's letter, that the report, with its accompanying tables and charts, be published as an official document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri, Mr. ANDERSON, is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, every thoughtful American is familiar with the life and career of Thomas Jefferson. Probably more than any other man, he is responsible for the first 10 amendments to our Constitution, called the Bill of Rights. He founded a great university at Charlottesville; he was the author of our Declaration of Independence; and his philosophy in recent years has now become the popular political philosophy of all thinking Americans.

On his birthday it is customary for patriotic Americans to visit his tomb and go through the university that he founded and secure inspiration from the historic surroundings of Monticello, his home.

The mayor of the city of St. Louis with some of the high officials of the administration, accompanied by civic, business, and professional leaders of that city, made a pilgrimage to Monticello on April 13. It was a visit made by St. Louisans or from that district which may be determined as Greater St. Louis, and, therefore, did not include residents of the State in general.

Among the 125 men who came by special train were many leading Republicans, patriotic Americans, who, differing in some ways from the present tenets of the Democratic Party, wanted to do homage to the great statesman.

Accompanied by Senator CLARK and Senator TRUMAN, representing the State of Missouri at large, and, of course, this particular district as well, I was present that day, 100 miles away, witnessing a wreath placed on the monument from the President of the United States, flowers from the American Federation of Labor, flowers and wreaths from patriotic organizations throughout the Nation. It was a solemn and inspiring occasion. It made better Americans. People at that grave had the thought of work well done for all Americans.

But for those citizens of St. Louis who made the trip it had a particular significance, because it was through the purchase of Louisiana Territory that Missouri and a number of other States came into the Union. Over the little city of St. Louis flew the flags of Spain, the flags of France, and the flags of the English. It was because of the navigable rivers in this vicinity that St. Louis became the great center of fur trade of the continent and is still the great fur market of the West. From this point came the great conquests of the Southwest over the Santa Fe Trail and the great conquests of the unexplored territory of the Northwest. Here started the first fast delivery of mail to the Pacific coast. None of these things could have been done if it had not been for the forethought and statesmanship of Thomas Jefferson.

The St. Louis visitors then went to the home of Patrick Henry at Williamsburg and to old Jamestown, one of the first white settlements in the New World.

But on this same day, while absent from this Chamber, 100 miles away at the time, accompanied by our Senators and two Congressmen from St. Louis, a Congressman from Kansas took the floor and, on Jefferson's birthday, while civic leaders and officials had their heads bowed in prayer, watching the annual event of historical importance, the gentleman from Kansas indulged in an assault upon the integrity of these men. If I had been present, the answer to the assault would have been made on that day, or maybe, if the St. Louis Representatives had been present, the attack would never have been made. It was only a 1-minute speech, but when printed in the RECORD, occupied 15 or 20 minutes, but unfortunately copies were furnished in advance to Missouri newspapers, which was of no interest to Kansas. It was news to Missouri and was printed there in full.

I hope that the gentleman from Kansas, who on one occasion attacked the Irish-American citizens of the United States on the floor of Congress and then apologized for it, may on some occasion, when he knows the facts, withdraw or apologize for the remarks he made during the absence of the St. Louis Congressmen.

Mr. Speaker, I am positive that both our Senators—Senators CLARK and TRUMAN—would take pleasure and delight in excoriating this Representative if the Senate rules would permit, and I am confident that my two colleagues from St. Louis, Mr. COCHRAN and Mr. HENNINGS, will thoroughly endorse my remarks today. I know they will be sympathetic with what I have to say and that it meets with their approval and, in fact, the approval of all Congressmen from the State of Missouri.

The gentleman from Kansas has made no personal investigation of the situation in St. Louis. He merely asked 1 minute and then placed in the RECORD some canned propaganda casting a probe in the civil government of our metropolitan city and abusing unjustly its civic leaders.

Let me say that I was not a Member of Congress when this Commission was created. I had no voice in it then and have taken no action in regard to it since I have been in the House. This project is wholly outside of my district, and I do not live within the city limits of St. Louis. But I cannot sit here and permit the name of our city, of our mayor, and of our finest citizens to be slandered without the slightest basis in reason or fact.

First, I want to speak not in defense of—for actually he needs no defense—but in deepest respect and appreciation of Mayor Dickmann, of St. Louis. It is to be deplored that he has been made the target for political rapiers and criticism of the most vicious nature. Mayor Dickmann in his two terms as mayor of St. Louis has given the people of that city more for their tax dollar than all his Republican predecessors put together. As a monument to a quarter of a century of Republican rule in St. Louis, there stood the courthouse, one of the finest in America, with rotten wooden steps because funds that had been voted in a bond issue had been squandered and wasted by the Republican city administration. The same thing was true of many other projects throughout the city. This was what Mayor Dickmann faced when he took office. The handling of the city administration by his Republican predecessor was a real and an actual national scandal. Since Mayor Dickmann has been in power all of these projects have been completed. Thousands of miles of streets have been paved and improved; hundreds of street lights have been erected; and all at no additional cost to the property owners. In addition to these visible and tangible accomplishments of Mayor Dickmann's administration, everyone realizes that the national significance of St. Louis has been brought to the fore by our mayor, who enjoys the greatest popular support and approval of any mayor in the history of St. Louis.

Now, let us discuss the pilgrimage and a few of the men who made it. Let us take a look at them and see that they are not, as you are asked to believe, a group of Democratic ward politicians. I was going to ask that the entire list of those names be placed in the RECORD, but the gentleman from Kansas has already relieved me of that task. The names appear on page 4236 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 13, 1939. That is the very day the gentleman took advantage of the St. Louis Representatives being in Monticello to launch his attack, knowing that we were not here to give answer.

I urge you all to read this list of names. There are, of course, members of the city administration. But does the gentleman know that a great many of his party kinsmen were in that group? Does he infer that these fine business and professional men are aiding and abetting in what only he believes is a great national scandal? I wonder if the gentleman knows that the Honorable Robert W. Otto, a former judge of the Missouri Supreme Court and attorney general of our State, and one of the Republican leaders of Missouri, was a part of that pilgrimage.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri is making a very fine speech. I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Why delay this fine speech when it is obvious there are 414 Members on the floor of the House? I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, in deference to the gentleman from Wisconsin I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have personal knowledge that a great many of the men on that pilgrimage are opposed to the Jefferson Memorial project in St. Louis. If you will but read the list of names that the gentleman from Kansas has placed in the RECORD, you will observe such men as James Dunbar, president of the Tower Grove Bank; Thomas N. Dysart, president of the Chamber of Commerce; Sidney Maestre, president of the Mississippi Valley Trust Co.; Milton N. Johnson, of the Ford Motor Co.; E. E. Pershall, of the Moss Tie Co.; P. J. Watson, president of the Terminal Railroad Association; and many others. These men are among the outstanding business leaders not only in St. Louis but of the Nation. In addition, if they are not devoted Republicans, they are independents in the fullest sense of that word.

I regret deeply that a Member of this body totally unacquainted with St. Louis would have the temerity to berate a group of our most distinguished citizens as representatives of bossism and political corruption. I regret that the necessity has been created whereby I am called to the defense of these men, whose sole purpose in making the pilgrimage to Monticello was to pay respect to the memory of Thomas Jefferson.

Proceeding on from the pilgrimage, let us observe for a moment the Commission created by Congress to consider and supervise the Jefferson Memorial project. It is plainly the most distinguished group of men you might hope to get together in a common purpose. Three members were appointed by the President of the United States. They are J. Lionberger Davis, of St. Louis; Gen. Jefferson Randolph Kean, of Washington, D. C.; and William Thornton Kemper, of Kansas City. Three members were appointed by the President of the Senate. They are Senator BARKLEY, of Kentucky; Senator DAVIS, of Pennsylvania; and Senator VAN NUYS, of Indiana. The Speaker of this House appointed three members. There are now two vacancies, and Mr. KELLER, of Illinois, is still serving. The Jefferson National Memorial Expansion Association appointed Hon. Newton D. Baker, of Ohio; Amon Carter, of Texas; Charles Merriam, of Chicago; Matthew Woll, of New York; Luther Ely Smith, of St. Louis; and the greatest Kansan of them all, William Allen White. The executive committee is composed of Luther Ely Smith, of St. Louis; J. Lionberger Davis, of St. Louis; and William Allen White, of Kansas. I wonder if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] desires to convey the thought that Mr. White, the greatest citizen Kansas ever produced, is a disciple of political corruption and bossism.

Hon. Charles Nagel, of St. Louis, who served in President Taft's Cabinet, is honorary vice chairman of the Commission.

If this project in St. Louis is the shameful and wanton public scandal that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON] would have you believe, do you think for one moment that the distinguished members of this Commission would remain silent and permit their names to be linked with this project? The fact that this group of distinguished Americans, including Members of the House and Senate and two former members of the Cabinet, have served and are continuing to serve on this Commission seems to evaluate properly whatever the gentleman from Kansas might say.

In conclusion I want to repeat that I was not in Congress when this Commission was created. I have never had an opportunity of taking any kind of action with regard to this project; I do not live within the city limits of St. Louis, and this proposed memorial is entirely outside of my district. Furthermore, when I sought the nomination to this office in 1936, the city administration of St. Louis was arrayed solidly against me.

My only interest in this whole matter is to see that men who live in my district are protected from false and slanderous malignment on this floor; to see that the mayor of St. Louis is given the respect to which he is entitled; and to see that the names of the great men who compose the United States Territorial Memorial Expansion Commission are not bantered about in these Halls in a category with purveyors of vice and political corruption. [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks to include a letter I have received from Mr. Luther Ely Smith, chairman of the executive committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

JEFFERSON NATIONAL-EXPANSION MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION,
St. Louis, Mo., April 21, 1939.

Hon. C. ARTHUR ANDERSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ANDERSON: I would like to urge your support of the amendment offered by Senator BENNETT C. CLARK to the Interior Department Appropriations bill, reappropriating the fund for the United States Territorial Expansion Memorial on the western bank of the Mississippi River on the site of "Old St. Louis." To the fund totaling $9,000,000 the United States contributed three-fourths or $6,750,000. St. Louis paid into the United States Treasury on May 16, 1936, one-fourth or $2,250,000 (proceeds of bonds voted by the citizens of St. Louis under a State enabling act, Laws of Missouri (1935, p. 193), thereby fully performing its part under Executive Order No. 7253, December 21, 1935 (as held in Balter v. Ickes (89 F. (2d) 856)).

This great national project was planned and is sponsored by a Federal Commission known as the United States Territorial Expansion Memorial Commission created by act of Congress of June 15, 1934. The project has been national in its scope, supported from the beginning on civic, educational, and patriotic grounds by highly representative citizens of the Nation at large as well as of the Louisiana Purchase, Missouri, and St. Louis. It has been and is wholly nonpartisan and nonpolitical. Republicans as well as Democrats (as it happens, in approximately equal numbers), have been and are working earnestly for its success.

Charges, arising from misinformation, but which in fact are wholly unfounded, have been made that this project is a real-estate conspiracy.

There has been, and, under the law, can be no scheme or successful plot to unload real estate at inflated prices. No land has been or will be acquired except by condemnation proceedings filed in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Missouri, presided over by three able judges, namely: Charles B. Davis, George H. Moore, and J. Caskie Collet, and no prices will be paid except at figures approved by the court upon valuations fixed by commissioners appointed by these judges, or at lower prices, where (as in many cases) title can be acquired by direct negotiation after condemnation.

The proceedings have been tested in the courts: Missouri Supreme Court (Vrooman v. St. Louis, 337 Mo. 933, 89 S. W. (2d) 189), opinion by Judge Collet; United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia (Balter v. Ickes, 89 F. (2d) 856), opinion by Justice Van Orsdel (certiorari denied, 57 S. Ct. 941); United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, January 27, 1939 (Barnidge v. U. S., 101 F. (2d) 295), opinion by Judge A. K. Gardner, Judges Kimbrough Stone and Seth Thomas concurring. Excluding the unappealed condemnation cases, there have been 17 suits and appeals testing the validity of the proceedings. All have been won by the Government. The objections now urged were pressed upon the courts in those cases—to no avail. The case of Franklin Township v. Tugwell, recently cited by opponents, was repeatedly pressed upon the court by appellants in Barnidge v. U. S. as requiring reversal—without success.

The funds have been scrupulously conserved in the strictest economy. No expenditures have been made except for administrative purposes, and these, notwithstanding obstructive delays, total substantially less than 10 percent of the St. Louis contribution.

No person can charge iniquity, fraud, or corruption against the sponsors of the project, or any step that they have taken, without ignoring or distorting the facts.

The national character and historic significance of the area and the project have been considered and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, by the President, and by a special committee of the National Historic Sites Commission. The courts, after full consideration of the objections now urged, refused to disturb their action (Barnidge v. U. S., 101 F. (2d) 295).

This is a memorial not to any one man, but to the territorial expansion of our great country and to the men who made it possibe, from Thomas Jefferson, and Lewis and Clark, the fur traders; Daniel Boone, Father de Smet, Zebulon Pike, Moses and Stephen Austin; and Robert E. Lee, on through John C. Fremont, Abraham Lincoln, Ulysses S. Grant, to the pioneers of later years.

The area in question is sacred soil and the country is fortunate in being able to acquire and develop it as a national heritage. The original membership of the United States Commission included Members from the House appointed by the late Speaker Henry T. Rainey (Hon. Lloyd Thurston, of Iowa; Hon. John N. Sandlin, of Louisiana; and Hon. Kent E. Keller, of Illinois), three Senators appointed by Vice President Garner (Hon. Alben W. Barkley, of Kentucky; Hon. Frederick Van Nuys, of Indiana; and Hon. James J. Davis, of Pennsylvania), three appointed by the President (Gen. Jefferson Randolph Kean, of Washington, D. C.; Mr. William T. Kemper, of Kansas City; and Mr. J. Lionberger Davis, of St. Louis), and six appointed by the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association of St. Louis (Mr. William Allen White, of Emporia, Kans.; Mr. Newton D. Baker, of Cleveland, Ohio; Mr. Amon G. Carter, of Fort Worth, Tex.; Dr. Charles E. Merriam, of Chicago, Ill.; Mr. Matthew Woll, of New York; and the undersigned). Mr. Kemper and Mr. Baker have died and the terms of Mr. Thurston and Judge Sandlin have expired. Col. James M. Thomson, of New Orleans, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Kemper.

This is in no sense a partisan measure. It is entirely free from political implications. It is national. Your support will be deeply appreciated.

Cordially yours,

LUTHER ELY SMITH,
Chairman Executive of United States Territorial Expansion Memorial Commission.

The executive committee consists of William Allen White, J. Lionberger Davis, and Luther Ely Smith, chairman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHEPPARD). Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an editorial published in the Pottsville, Pa., Republican on Wednesday, April 26, 1939, entitled "Still a Soldier." This editorial refers to our colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON], a distinguished soldier and a conscientious and able legislator.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEINKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address made by me on April 22, 1939.

On this occasion the Nebraska delegation in Congress and Nebraskans planted an elm tree from Arbor Lodge State Park at Nebraska City in honor of J. Sterling Morton, author of Arbor Day. The tree is planted at the northeast corner of the grounds occupied by the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

THE DESTINY OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the remarks I make this afternoon are addressed to one theme. This theme is that the destiny of democracy may well lie in the hands of this House and the body at the other end of the Capitol.

I am convinced that there is at present introduced in the House legislation whose passage would demonstrate once and for all the effectiveness of parliamentary government in dealing with difficult economic situations and would put us on the road toward proving the superiority of our democratic system over that of any other in the world.

Our problem in a nutshell, Mr. Speaker, is that we apparently have too many producers and too few effective consumers; that we have too much value in goods and services produced and not enough active demand; and that we have more income paid out by industry and other kinds of producers than we can have dollars coming back to these same producers.

REASON FOR SYSTEM OF RETIREMENT PENSIONS

The old idea—and it was a sound one—was that in order for a man to be entitled to consume he must first have taken part in production. Certainly it was a happy and successful time when this rule could be universally applied with justice. With the development of machine industry, unfortunately, with the development of financial monopoly control, we have a situation in which this principle can no longer be universally applied for the reason that millions of people are denied through no fault of their own the opportunity of taking part in production at all.

Under the circumstances we have a growth of public employment, together with a certain amount of relief which nobody likes very much and very few people want to receive if they can avoid it, but which we know to be necessary as a very minimum and paltry kind of justice to those citizens who find themselves without work or income. Under these circumstances it appears to me that the only decent and reasonable answer to the problem lies in the establishment of a system of retirement pensions for persons who have passed the age where they can reasonably expect employment, who have earned the right by their production in the past to be consumers although they do not currently take part in production, and who by such a system might be given the opportunity to continue to consume their share of the national production without taking part in it or competing for the jobs. This is the just, the socially sound method of bringing about a balance between producers and consumers. It is the Christian thing to do, as well, I believe, as the economically necessary thing to do.

I am somewhat disappointed over the fact it has so far proven difficult to unify and unite the Members of the House who are in one way or another committed to this cause, for I believe by such uniting together, with a sincere determination to carry through with the substantial pledges that many people have made in connection with their election, a real progress along this line could be made at this session of the Congress. For my part though my first interest is in H. R. 11, I feel so deeply on this subject that even if I cannot have a measure which I believe to be 100 percent perfect, I stand ready to cooperate in any way I can for the passage of a pension bill.

To establish such a system would mean fewer producers and more consumers. It would mean much larger active demand, and the machine age certainly requires this, as I pointed out. We are, of course, faced with the problem of where the money shall be raised, various answers to which have been given in a number of different proposals contained in certain bills and in the speeches of various individuals.

My own preference is that funds for the pension be raised by income taxes so levied that they will operate to reduce the volume of what would otherwise be idle surplus savings. But I am willing to accept some other sound method of raising this money if need be to establish the principle of general Federal pensions to our people over 60 as a matter of right and on the basis of age rather than charity.

The junior Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] made a speech in the Senate on April 7 which to me was a very challenging speech. The burden of that speech was to the effect there had to be a substitution of a system of retirement pensions in this country for that portion of surplus savings which now lie idle and do not return to the producers of goods and services in the form of active demand. I wish to acknowledge a very real debt to Mr. DOWNEY for the help that speech has been to my own thinking.

THE HISTORY OF "GOVERNMENT SPENDING"

Let us look for a moment at our national record. The New Deal has been criticized for its spending program. In the next few minutes I will show that, as a matter of fact, there has always been some kind of a spending program in effect in this country at any time, when there has been a reasonably prosperous condition. I believe it can be demonstrated that only at times of rising prices and property values, inflation of debt, and substantial additions to the buying power to some or all groups in the population have we had prosperity. The real reason for the attacks on the New Deal spending is that it has been carried on largely by payment of wages to poor people—plus, of course, the natural concern over increasing debt. I think it is a fundamental deception of the people for anyone to lead them to forget the whole experience of the 1920's and try to persuade them that the mere abolition of the progressive measures that have been passed in the last few years is going to reemploy our people.

CAPITAL-GOODS EXPANSION AND INVESTMENT CANNOT SOLVE PROBLEM

We have at present a very large volume of unused productive capacity in this country, and until we have a very marked increase in the volume of consuming purchasing power this unused capacity will not be used, let alone a large amount of money expended to add to plant capacity. I have here one of the confidential news letters for business executives, that are sent out from Washington, D. C., which is supposed to give the news of the situation in the National Capital. I find here a very significant sentence which says:

> Inventories are not low relative to consumption, and any worsening in the prospects would cause processors and dealers to lighten up on their inventories.

Which is to say that even at present the volume of consuming power is not keeping up with current production.

The only value there can be in capital goods, after all, is that somewhere, somehow, some consumers will buy the products produced by the capital goods. Unless you have that consuming power present the investment in those capital goods itself is not a sound investment. The analysis which has underlain the New Deal has been briefly that the depression beginning in 1929 was caused by the failure of consuming power to keep pace with the increases in inventory. Installment buying held up production for a while but eventually the whole structure of it collapsed of its own weight. That is to say, that in attempting to keep up with production the consumers of the Nation acquired so large a volume of installment debt that they could not continue to carry it. Furthermore, these installment purchases represented the attempt of the Nation to make up for the large percentage of income paid out by industry which was set aside into surplus savings during this period. We found the gap widening between the amount of production the consuming power of the people could sustain and the amount of production that industry had to achieve to run profitably. So, beginning with 1933, various devices have been used to increase the consuming power of the people. For example, the P. W. A., the farm program, the W. P. A., the various lending agencies, the C. C. C., and many others.

I think it is fundamentally true that in this field of increased consuming power lies the mainspring to production of all sorts and at all times. I believe this analysis has been right. I point out that improvement was continuous until the year 1937, when, as a matter of fact, that program was substantially changed, temporarily at least, and an attempt at retrenchment made with what amounted to disastrous consequences.

ADDITIONS TO TOTAL VOLUME OF CONSUMER BUYING POWER BY GOVERNMENT ARE NOT NEW

It seems to me that there is no difference essentially between what the New Deal has been doing and what has happened in this country before, and I will now address myself to attempting to prove that point. There has been this one difference, however. In the case of the New Deal a conscious effort has been made to see that the consuming power was increased at the point where it was most needed. Otherwise I would say that a net addition to the buying power of the people over and above that currently distributed by industry has been necessary throughout the whole period of American history in order to secure anything like decent prosperity.

Let us examine the record. In the first place, we had over a long period of time the phenomena of westward expansion. Free land was being given away or sold at a very cheap cost upon which to settle. While this was happening, new cities were growing up, new lands being settled, and we find that the banks were constantly monetizing the anticipated increase in value of property, by which I mean that new debts were being created on the basis, not of current values, but of anticipated future values, and the contraction of those new debts was constantly putting into circulation an additional amount of purchasing power over and above what industry at that time was able to pay out.

We have heard numerous criticisms that by the present increase in the national debt we are spending future income. Indeed, the people of 1850 or 1870 were doing precisely that same thing, because, as I have said, they were monetizing in the form of an additional contraction of debt the anticipated value of property in the future.

May I say at this point it is my fundamental conviction that unless the Government exercises its sovereign right to bring an added volume of money into circulation to keep pace with additional production, new debt must always be contracted to equal current withdrawals from the purchasing power stream by savings or investment, and unless we are to anticipate an increase in that indebtedness or accept depression as permanent, we must look to the field of monetary reform, and particularly to the field of restoration to the Government and to the Congress of the right to bring its money into circulation, if we are to have a solution to the problem.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to my very good friend from Iowa.

Mr. HARRINGTON. The bill the gentleman has introduced along that line has for an objective that very thing; is that not true?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right.

Mr. HARRINGTON. The theory under this bill is that bringing into being an increased amount of money will enable us to enjoy a national income of upward of $100,000,000,000?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Exactly. I believe the reason prosperity has always been choked off after it had gone so far is because the Nation or its people has always been trying to borrow into circulation the amount of new purchasing power necessary to keep pace with the growth of production and to compensate for idle savings and for the amount of current income stored up in new capital formation. I do not believe we can continue that forever. I am grateful to the gentleman because that bill—H. R. 4931—is one about which I care a great deal.

I should like to say that certain features of the bill, such as the establishment of 100-percent reserves behind the demand deposits in the banks, are included in order to make it perfectly safe and sound for us to bring into circulation that additional volume of consuming power through Government action and debt-free, which it might not be safe to do if, as at present, we were running the risk every time we brought a new dollar into circulation of having a six for one expansion of bank credit on the basis of the additional reserves created.

I should like to say further that this bill does not provide just a hit-or-miss increase in the volume of money, but provides that the increase shall keep pace with the increase in productive capacity and population of the Nation, and shall be so geared to it as to give us a dollar of constant purchasing and debt-paying power whose value in terms of goods will not seriously fluctuate.

Now, as we got out of the period when westward expansion was a means of putting into circulation an additional volume of consuming power, we might have had the situation with which we are now confronted had it not been for the coming of the World War. But with the coming of the World War a considerable number of producers were taken out of the possibility of continuing production to become soldiers and a great destruction of wealth took place, so that a balance was reached between production and consumption and we had prosperity. I do not think it makes sense but that is what happened, and it is illustrative of the fact that what we do not know how to do is to keep our consumptive power in line with our power to produce wealth and that the only time we have our people continuously employed is when we have an artificial destruction going on, such as war.

The Government was adding tremendously, of course, to current consuming power at that time, but once again on the basis of additional debt. It is my hope that we in this Congress are not going to condemn our sons to a hero's death because we refuse to establish promptly a system of decent retirement pensions for the veterans of American agriculture and industry, and to lay patriotic hands on the private financial monopoly which now exercises the right to monetize our national growth, our people's property, and the resourcefulness of our people.

With the close of the World War we were confronted with another period where production might well have speedily outrun consumption had it not been for a new and ingenious device, namely, the device of marketing questionable foreign bonds in this country in very large amounts. That, plus the World War debts that were outstanding, meant that America contributed literally $22,000,000,000 to foreign purchasers of goods in the period 1914 to 1929. The bubble burst when it became evident that those debts were not going to be repaid and when the installment-debt burden of the American people domestically became so great as to be no longer able to be carried. Then we had the depression of 1929, which deepened continuously as long as a deflationary policy was followed and was only checked with the coming into power of the New Deal and President Roosevelt in 1933.

Why is it necessary in order to have prosperity to increase the total volume of active buying power of the consumers of the Nation over and above that amount which industry is able to currently pay out? It is of course true that real buying power is equivalent to the goods and services produced, but the right to exercise that buying power is expressed in money. Since some people do not exercise that right but instead of spending currently their income save a portion of it, that amount must be subtracted and industry does not recover it. Since further an additional amount is invested in new capital equipment—that is, put into increase of productive capacity—therefore we have once again another item from the currently paid-out income which cannot return to industry again in the purchase of its goods.

In 1929 we find the following figures: There was a realized national produced income of over $81,000,000,000. There was a paid-out national income of $78,500,000,000, the difference being represented by corporate savings. We also find that in that year total savings of individuals and corporations amounted to $20,000,000,000 and gross capital formation to $11,000,000,000. The depression resulted because the debt-formation bubble burst, because the foreign bonds bubble burst, and because installment debt contraction had reached its limit. The depression came further for two more basic reasons: First because we had no machinery for compensating without increase in debt and by a direct increase in the volume of actively circulating consumer demand for the $11,000,000,000 of new capital formation insofar as that represented not merely the payment of wages to create this new capital formation but the actual storing up in new machinery of production of a portion of the income paid out by industry.

In the second place, the depression came because excess savings represented idle and inactive buying power not used in the purchase of the goods and services that the American people had produced. Perhaps the major cause of these surplus savings was and still is the power of monopoly to exact an undue share of the total buying power of the people. But this is a problem too great for me to more than mention today.

I point out again that in order to avoid depression, industry and agriculture must recover for every dollar paid out a dollar which must come back to them in order to cover their cost. So I say that I believe there are two essential adjustments that have to be made; first, that we have to make it possible through governmental action to bring an additional volume of active consuming power into circulation to match that portion of investment which does not go to wages in construction but is stored up in the value of new equipment itself; and second, that we have to reduce surplus savings to the point where they will equal only the amount of needed capital equipment; and in order to do that it is evidently necessary that we have a system of old-age-retirement pensions. At a later date I shall set forth in more detail how I believe we should constructively attack this central problem. [Applause.]

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee on the truth-in-fabrics bill of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce may sit next Tuesday afternoon during sessions of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that agreeable to the Republican Members of the subcommittee?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. This was an understanding had with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has reached an agreement with him and this is satisfactory to him?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter just received from Ruth Steed, of Portland, Ind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

SHOULD AMERICA TAKE SIDES IN EUROPEAN WARS?

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, on April 14 last, a significant event took place at Mount Vernon. The President of the United States and other officials, together with many citizens, gathered at Washington's home to celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of his notification of election as first President of the United States of America. As we sat on the broad verandas of this historic mansion, looking out over the Potomac River and the lovely landscape which was dear to the heart of Washington, our thoughts instinctively went back to that memorable day in our Nation's history when Washington took over the Presidency of the new Republic. It was Washington upon whom the burden fell of guiding our destinies in the conflict between the American Colonies and the mother country from which came the new Nation and our liberty, and it was Washington who had the burden of making a democracy work. One could not but wonder what Washington, if he were with us now, would say with reference to the part we should take in the impending conflicts in the Old World. After guiding the destinies of America for 8 years, Washington voluntarily surrendered his office and in doing so laid down a plan for the guidance of America in its foreign relations which has been our course for 150 years, with one exception. It is important that we consider again what Washington said in determining for ourselves whether his advice is applicable to our times and conditions.

NO FOREIGN ENTANGLEMENTS

George Washington, in his Farewell Address, said:

> Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens), the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.
> The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.
> Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.
> Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Our foreign policy, with one exception, has always been directed along the lines of the admonition of the Father of his Country. George Washington, perhaps more than any other man in our Nation's history, was familiar with the history of foreign nations and with the wiles, intrigues, and subtle influences, desires, and motives that controlled their actions in their relationships with one another. He had led the struggling, infant nation through the trials and vicissitudes of the Revolution to gain our independence. Out of this wealth of experience he said:

> Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens) the jealousy of a free country ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government.

Washington realized, as we should realize today, that our natural advantages, by reason of our detached geographical position, protected by two great oceans, and separated by 3,000 miles or more from the warring nations of Europe and Asia, are our first line of defense. In his words:

> Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?
> It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world.

Thomas Jefferson adhered to and advised this same course. He said, in his inaugural address, we should maintain "peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none."

SHOULD WASHINGTON'S ADVICE, "AVOID ENTANGLING ALLIANCES," BE DISCARDED?

Mr. Speaker, America today is at the crossroads. We have come down through a century and a half of development and expansion observing the advice of the Father of his Country. During that short span, as the history of nations is reckoned, we have become a great nation and occupy a commanding position in the family of nations. We have developed in power, influence, and in the material possessions and advantages of our people more than any nation of the world in a like period. Should we now abandon our foreign policy which we have followed through the years and enter into combinations and commitments with Old World nations? Should we abandon our time-honored, independent position and assume the roll of world policeman to settle the disputes of Europe?

The one time we departed from Washington's advice, when we joined in the World War, we proceeded on the false premise that by so doing we could preserve democracy and, as the slogan said, "Make the world safe for democracy." Our American boys, 2,000,000 strong, crossed the seas following the mirage that it was a "war to end war." Instead of accomplishing those great objectives the nations of Europe, after that struggle of death, were bankrupted and thrown into a welter of turmoil, dissension, jealousies, conquests, wars, and rumors of wars, in keeping with the history of European nations for more than 2,000 years.

As a result there has now developed in Europe the Berlin-Rome axis. This combination, together with Japan, has been remaking the map of the Eastern Hemisphere. We have witnessed the conquest of Ethiopia and China, the dismemberment of Czechoslovakia, the taking over of Albania, and the threatened invasion of many other nations in the field of operations of these European powers. Opposed to Germany, Italy, and Japan are England, France, and Russia, with whom other smaller European nations are allied or in the process of alinement. The armed forces of the world are better prepared with armaments for conflict than at any other time in the world's history, and they stand ready for mobilization and ready to strike. They only await the order.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that this threatened conflict is one between the democracies and the totalitarian governments to determine which shall survive and rule the world. When we examine the alinement of these forces and the motivating causes of the unrest, we find this to be untenable. Certainly Russia, standing with England and France, cannot be fighting for the preservation of democracy. The dividing line between these two groups of armed countries is not the line between the democracies and the totalitarian governments. The bones of contention today, as they have always been throughout European history, are territory for expansion and development, boundary lines, natural resources, raw materials, property and property rights, trade lanes, and routes of commerce, all climaxed with selfishness, the urge for conquest, and the greed for spoils and power.

The struggle today is the same that has been going on for 20 centuries for the control of the balance of power in Europe. It involves the control of the Mediterranean and Gibraltar, the Suez Canal and the Dardanelles, the control of Spain and the lands rich in natural resources lying east of Germany and Italy, giving an outlet to these nations to the Black Sea and the East. Such a control cuts across the life lines of England and its world-wide colonial possessions and leaves France exposed to crushing attacks from every side but the Atlantic. Its accomplishment would mean the destruction of the Balkan entente consisting of Rumania, Greece, Yugoslavia, and Turkey.

The conflict was aptly stated in the Washington Post of April 23 last, as follows:

THE RACE FOR SUPREMACY IN THE MEDITERRANEAN

Two great powers—Great Britain (with the aid of France) and Italy (with the support of Germany)—are today engaged in a vital race for supremacy in the Mediterranean.

Not since the galleys of ancient Greece sailed to the destruction of Troy has there been such a concentration of might in that strategic sea. The major powers are strengthening their naval and air bases to protect their "life lines" in the event of war.

Control of the Mediterranean is vital to Great Britain to maintain its commerce with South Africa, India, and Australia. Italy seeks to keep in contact with its north African territory and with Ethiopia and Italian Somaliland on the east coast of Africa.

France, in addition to its territory in north Africa, also has colonies in east-central Africa. Germany has no colonies affected by control of the Mediterranean but it has colonial ambitions and is united with Italy in combating Britain and France.

In the glory of their empire, Romans called the Mediterranean Mare Nostrum (our sea), and it was long a Roman sea. But by the seventeenth century Britain's men-of-war had begun to rule the seas, and soon after the French dug the Suez Canal in 1869, Britain had control of the Mediterranean at both ends and later in the middle.

Britain, backed by France, seemed impregnable—with mighty fortifications at Gibraltar on the west, the even less vulnerable Suez Canal on the east (the nearest Italian base is 400 miles away), and the heavily fortified island of Malta between Italian Sicily and French Tunisia.

But today Fascist Italy threatens this domination. It now controls the Dodecanese Islands, the island of Rhodes, and the colony of Libya in North Africa. It has fortified the small island of Pantellaria to checkmate Malta's grip on the bottleneck between Sicily and Tunisia. With Italy's help, Gen. Francisco Franco's Spanish regime planted German guns in north Africa commanding Gibraltar.

It's a game of strategic moves to control the Mediterranean—with the loser's lifeline strangled in the case of war.

It is urged that the United States should join with England, France, and Russia in this impending conflict. Such an alinement means a Washington-London-Paris-Moscow axis opposing the Berlin-Rome axis. Such a policy is in direct opposition to the foreign policy we have always followed, and the one promulgated by Washington. It is maintained by the supporters of this contention that we should take a part in world affairs; that while we should not necessarily engage in actual war for the purpose of protecting world democracies, nevertheless, we should do everything short of war necessary to accomplish these ends.

WASHINGTON KNEW OLD-WORLD CONFLICTS

In determining our course of action as to whether or not we should follow Washington's and Jefferson's advice, and avoid entangling alliances, or whether we should join with England, France, and Russia in their impending conflicts with totalitarian governments, it is important to review the considerations which must have been uppermost in the mind of Washington when he delivered his Farewell Address. He spoke of the "insidious wiles of foreign influence," "the baneful foe of republican government," and also:

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote, relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

He said:

Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice? It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world.

In considering the European rivalries which motivated Washington in advising this course for young America, it is of interest to refer to the history of the European countries with which it is now contended we should aline ourselves in a world-wide movement for the protection of democracy and the policing of the world. In doing so it is not my purpose to criticize the nations referred to, but to ascertain, if we may, the basis for Washington's statement that Europe had a set of primary interests which had a very remote relationship to our own, and that she was engaged in frequent controveries, the causes of which were essentially foreign to our concerns, and also to determine if these same fundamental differences obtain today. History teaches that what has happened will happen again. The student of world affairs finds no assurance that there will not continue to arise in Europe and the Old World controversies which will embroil those countries in warfare.

ENGLAND AND EUROPEAN CONFLICTS

Mr. Speaker, I have great admiration for the English Nation and its people; in fact, my own paternal American forebear came from England and settled with Roger Williams in Rhode Island early in the sixteenth century. I want to see the British Empire and the French Republic prosper and go forward in the march of civilization. They are a great civilizing force in the world. Neither do I have any words of praise for the powerful totalitarian nations that have crushed to earth their smaller rivals, torn up their treaties, and have stamped out all vestage of civil rights and personal liberties. But what I am saying with reference to England and France and the other countries of Europe is for the sole purpose of ascertaining if Washington's and Jefferson's advice was sound when given and is equally sound today, and should be followed in that we should avoid entangling alliances with European nations. We are confronted with grave domestic problems today as was Washington. We are far removed from the Old World, and our first duty is to our own people. Let us consider the history of England and the controversies in which she has been engaged and which, no doubt, were in Washington's mind when he delivered his Farewell Address.

England, up until about the year 1035, was the victim of many aggressors. Celt, Roman, Caledonian, Jute, Saxon, Angle, Dane, and Norman in turn had invaded her country. Thereafter England, instead of remaining the victim of aggressors, took part in numerous conflicts as a result of which her dominion was extended until at the present time the British Empire covers approximately one-quarter of the world's habitable land area, and according to the last census figures, its aggregate population is some 15,000,000 more than one-quarter of the world's inhabitants. The British dominions and population are distributed over the world's area as follows:

	Population
British Isles	46,189,176
Europe	3,572,839
Asia	356,957,089
Africa	58,561,068
North America	10,665,922
Central America	51,347
West Indies	2,050,351
South America	314,034
Australia	8,956,179
Oceania	412,536

The British Empire has a total population of 494,870,104 and a territory of 13,253,240 square miles. By contrast the United States has a population of some one hundred and thirty millions, being only 7 percent of the world's population, and has only 6 percent of the world's area.

FRANCE AND WORLD CONFLICTS

No doubt Washington, in advising the new republic against foreign entanglements, also had in mind the contests in which France, one of the great European nations of his day, had engaged. In 481 the French Monarchy was established, and Paris was made its capital in 510. Down through the centuries France has been engaged in conflicts and warfare with the various nations of the Old World. Her territory has been overrun and she has been crushed to earth on many occasions, only to rise again and throw off her conquerors and extend her boundaries and dominions.

Today France holds a mandate over Syria, with 2,800,000 population. Her colonists in French India number 286,000. In French Indochina she has 21,500,000 under French rule. Her dependents in Asia number nearly 25,000,000 people. In Africa she has a protectorate over Morocco with 6,000,000; she controls Algeria, with 7,000,000; Tunisia, with 2,600,000; French West Africa, with fourteen and a half million; and holds a mandate over Togoland and Cameroon, and also rules 3,000,000 people in the Congo in French Equatorial Africa. Her other African possessions are Madagascar, Comoro Islands, and Somaliland.

In addition to 24,000,000 subjects in Asia, France rules 38,000,000 in Africa. The possessions of France in America are relatively small. St. Pierre, Miquelon, Guadeloupe, Martinique, and French Guiana number approximately 525,000. In Oceania, New Caledonia, and Tahiti she rules around 100,000. In all, France has 42,000,000 population at home and some 60,000,000 in her colonies.

The histories of all other European countries are of like tenor. I have discussed only England and France because it is contended we should form a military alliance with them or come to their aid in case of a European war.

When we consider the contests in which England and France had engaged up to the time of Washington, we and the far-flung possessions and interests of these two nations alone at once see the meaning of his admonition when he said that Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have a very remote relation and that she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are foreign to our concerns. Considering the history of these two nations, can there be any doubt that the advice of Washington was sound?

OUR BITTER EXPERIENCE IN THE WORLD WAR

Mr. Speaker, as I have stated, only once in a century and a half since Washington's time have we failed to follow his advice and have joined hands with the Old World powers in an endeavor to settle a controversy which was not of our making and with which we should not have concerned ourselves. In entering that conflict it is true we were deluded into believing we were fighting to protect our ideals, our democracy, and to make the world safe for democracy. We were told it was a war to end war. In considering our foreign policy, which is now threatening to embroil us again in a new European war, it is of interest to stop and take note of the price we paid in money, suffering, sacrifice, and human life for our part in the one great war of the Old World in which we took part. Let us look at this record; it should keep us out of any other foreign war.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS AND CASUALTIES IN THE WORLD WAR

From official sources I have secured compilations of the number of Americans who engaged in the World War, number of casualties resulting therefrom, costs accruing to the United States, the disabled veterans receiving compensation, the monetary cost of the war to the United States, and the obligations still outstanding owing to us by foreign countries, growing out of this world conflict.

According to the records of the War Department altogether 4,057,101 individuals served in the United States Army during the World War, of whom 2,059,629 served overseas. A classification of the total number of deaths among the World War Army personnel by cause is as follows:

Battle deaths:
Killed in action	37,568
Died of wounds received in action	12,942
Total battle deaths	50,510
Died of disease	62,670
Accidental and other deaths	6,776
Total deaths	119,956
Individuals wounded not mortally	182,674

This compilation does not include members of the United States Marine Corps who served with the Army in France.

According to the records of the Navy Department, 47,315 officers and 551,736 enlisted men served in the United States Navy and Naval Reserve force in the World War, and the total expenditures of the Navy from April 1917 through November 1918 were $2,124,558,689.

The estimated money cost of the World War to the United States to June 30, 1934, as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, is as follows:

To June 30, 1921 (revised)	$25,729,000,000
Continuing costs:
Veterans' Administration	6,391,000,000
Interest on war debt	9,557,000,000
Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928	88,000,000
Total to June 30, 1934	41,765,000,000

The President, under proclamation dated November 14, 1921, declared the end of the war with Germany to be July 2, 1921, the date on which the joint resolution of Congress terminating the state of war was approved. The figures contained herein are on the basis of warrants issued. They make allowance for estimated normal expenditures under the War and Navy Departments on a peacetime basis; receipts on account of the sale of war supplies and surplus Government property, and assets held on June 30, 1921, a large part of which has subsequently been converted into cash and covered into the Treasury. Necessarily some of the figures represent approximations, since no cost records relating to the war were maintained.

COMPENSATION BENEFITS TO WORLD WAR VETERANS AND DEPENDENTS

The total living World War veterans and deceased veterans whose dependents were receiving compensation or pension benefits, on the roll as of February 28, 1939, and the amounts disbursed for these benefits to January 31, 1939, are as follows:

	Number on roll Feb. 28, 1939	Total disbursements to Jan. 31, 1939
Living veterans:
Service-connected disability	341,421	$2,810,896,148.61
Nonservice connected	50,524	263,133,637.29
Emergency officers' retirement pay	1,818	64,661,453.78
Total living veterans	393,763	3,138,691,239.68
Deceased veterans:
Service connected	98,334	588,599,676.72
Nonservice connected	10,838	8,752,490.18
Total deceased veterans	109,172	597,352,166.90
Grand total World War veterans	502,935	3,736,043,406.58

The nonservice-connected item includes amounts disbursed for disability allowance under the amendment of July 3, 1930, to the World War Veterans' Act and discontinued by the act of March 20, 1933.

As of February 28, 1939, benefits under term and automatic insurance were being paid in monthly installments to 12,525 permanently and totally disabled veterans and to the beneficiaries of 26,907 deceased veterans. In addition, lump-sum payments had been made to beneficiaries of 47,392 deceased veterans and payments of 240 monthly installments were completed in 93,041 cases.

The total amount disbursed for military and naval insurance was $2,116,678,040.73 as of January 31, 1939.

The anticipated amount that will be required for compensation and pension benefits to World War veterans or their dependents during the fiscal year 1940 is approximately $246,665,000, and for military and naval insurance $26,791,000.

In considering the total money cost of the World War to the United States account must be taken of the loans which were made to foreign governments. This indebtedness as of March 1, 1939, as shown by the records of the Treasury Department, is set forth in the following table:

The Government of Germany is indebted to the United States on account of the costs of the American army of occupation and the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission of the United States and Germany. This indebtedness is not included in the tables I have given. Under the armistice convention of November 11, 1918, the Government of Germany agreed to reimburse the Allied and United States Governments for the upkeep of the troops of occupation in the Rhine districts. The Versailles Treaty provides that the German Government shall pay the total costs of all armies of the Allied and associated powers in occupied German territory from November 11, 1918. This indebtedness, as of January 31, 1938, is shown by the following table:

In considering the financial contribution of America toward the cost of the World War, it should be remembered that when our soldiers began landing on French soil we were required to pay duty on all of the food, war supplies, munitions, and merchandise which were shipped to France to help in the prosecution of that war. Many of our soldiers were carried in foreign transports and we paid from $140 to $180 for each man thus landed on French soil. We paid damages to the French for injury to the ground on which our American armies fought and we paid France for the French property destroyed in the prosecution of the war. At our own expense we dredged harbors, built docks, erected thousands of miles of telephone and telegraph lines and railroads, all of which was left behind when our soldiers came home as the permanent property of the French Government.

The immense sums of money which America poured into some 20 or more European countries to provide them with the sinews of war for carrying on that great contest were loaned on the express agreement that they would be repaid with interest. The moneys loaned by our Government were borrowed from American citizens, often at great sacrifice and privation to the lenders. We are still paying interest on these borrowed funds which have not been repaid because the foreign governments have not paid us. We now find that these countries, who were so eager to have us join as an ally in the prosecution of the war which was not of our making and did not directly involve America, and who so eagerly received immense loans advanced by the American people, have repudiated their obligations, broken their word to America, and have allowed the advances to go unpaid. We have even been characterized as a "shylock" nation when we called attention to the overdue installments. It should be noted, however, that the little country of Finland has kept her promise and is repaying her loan. Also Cuba and Liberia paid their loans in full with interest. Their good faith and honesty are to be commended.

It should be remembered that after the war ended the United States continued to advance great sums of money to the various nations for rehabilitation, the feeding of their people, and, in many instances, for taking care of cash payments which these nations were obliged to make on war obligations.

Over $13,000,000,000, which came from the earnings of American citizens as a result of heroic sacrifice and privation, have been confiscated by these foreign powers. These countries, instead of using their earnings for meeting their obligations with us, have expended infinitely larger sums for battleships, airships, submarines, and other instruments of war, preparing to again engage in a world conflict.

The Saturday Evening Post of April 22 last discussed the foreign-debt problem. I desire to quote from that editorial:

So it was that, beside lending Europe money for every other conceivable purpose, we lent her the money to pay all that she ever did pay on account of her war debts to the United States Treasury. When at last she had borrowed the American purse empty, and every big and little American bank's investment portfolio was stuffed with her bonds, she stopped paying anything. That was of all Europe, save only for one little honorable state named Finland.

Between cause and effect there was no decent delay. As soon as the stream of American loans stopped, Germany purposely went bankrupt again, the payment of war reparations stopped, our European war debtors treated their bonds in the United States Treasury with satire, and in American banks from Maine to California foreign securities were tied up in bundles like old newspapers and kicked into the cellar.

To save less than $200,000,000 a year Great Britain dishonored her bond at the United States Treasury. How many times that sum does she spend on new armament?

For $125,000,000 a year France dishonored her bond at the United States Treasury. Yet now she can find the cash to buy a fleet of bombing planes in the United States.

The value of Italy's word is known. It is worth less than $20,000,000 a year.

Germany's word was not worth writing.

British word, French word, Nazi, or Fascist—which will you take on a bond? If you will not take it on a bond, what will you take it for? On a treaty, perhaps.

The idea that united them worked. Victor and vanquished together, they made the Americans pay.

Item, the cost of our own military exertions in the World War; item, the war and postarmistice loans made to the governments of Europe by the United States Treasury; item, the loss on European loans made from the private American purse; item, accrued interest—add it all up and it comes to this: That our passion to save Europe has already cost us more than $50,000,000,000.

What have we learned? The righteous warrior dream now is 22 years old and we are still asleep.

Again the fires of revenge are lighted. Again the tracings of scar tissue on the map of Europe are tumescent and red. The aggressor is loose and heavily armed—more heavily than ever before, thanks to not having paid his American debts. The nonaggressors also are heavily armed—more heavily than ever before, thanks to not having paid their American debts—and yet, as they think, not heavily enough. Again France and England are calling to America for help. To help them? No, no. To help them save for mankind the priceless legacy that is Europe.

Well, what more shall be again?

My colleagues, I do not know what lesson you take from these pages of history. To me they point the way. For my own part our course seems clear. Not another penny should be advanced to any of our debtor nations who have repudiated their obligations. They should pay their just debts to us. The war chorus should be silenced and made to understand that no amount of war-inspired hysteria and propaganda will budge us from our fixed purpose to make no alliances with European countries, to enter no war except a war of defense, and never again to send our soldier boys abroad to be slaughtered. We want to remain at peace with the world and be permitted to mind our own business and work out our own destiny. Other nations should be granted the same rights free from our intermeddling. The American people are determined that come what may in Europe, America must keep out, and take no part, directly or indirectly, in European entanglements. We must maintain absolute neutrality with all foreign nations to the end that we be not led into war. We must make no commitments, nor enter into any relationships, understandings, or agreements with any foreign nation with respect to Old World affairs. Furthermore, we should refuse to furnish a single American dollar for another foreign war.

We must preserve and maintain the Monroe Doctrine, limited as it is to the Western Hemisphere, which is a command to the nations of the Old World "Hands off America," a domestic policy of self-defense. Likewise, we must not meddle in European affairs. We cannot say to foreign nations, "Keep out of the Western Hemisphere," and in the same breath seek to inject ourselves into their world and attempt to influence and direct the decisions that they shall make. Our concern is to preserve, maintain, and perfect American democracy, and make it work. This should be done here, in our own country and for our own people. Except by example, we should not attempt to project our democracy or ideology into the governments of other nations.

Whenever we shall, by commitments, collaboration, embargoes, commercial restrictions, quarantine of aggressors, or any other means, endeavor to shape the course of European affairs, we are taking the first step toward war which will ultimately lead us into full and complete participation therein. We should mind our own business, maintain strict neutrality, hold aloof from European turmoil, and not take this first step toward war. Once started down the war road there will be no turning back. We must not under any circumstances become a party to a foreign war.

There is one thing that has caused more heartache and misery in the world than any other, and that is war. The sole objective of war is destruction. Brute force is its mainspring; the dead and the maimed are its harvest. It not only bankrupts nations in their material welfare but it robs them as well of all spiritual values. It not only sets nation against nation but breeds in the hearts of men, hate and the desire to destroy and tear down. It never builds; it never ennobles. Worst of all, its fruitage is the death and maiming of the young manhood of the country. It feeds not upon the old and the maimed but devours the flower of the youth of the country and leaves the living impoverished, sickened, and spiritually weakened for generations, and casts its spell and its burdens upon generations yet unborn. Over 10,000,000 soldiers were killed or died in the World War and over 20,000,000 wounded. It is estimated that it cost the United States to date over $60,000,000,000 and the nations engaged in it over three hundred and thirty-eight billions. Nothing truer was ever said than the words of Washington in his Farewell Address, that America should avoid entangling alliances. America should adopt as an unalterable policy that it shall never again engage in war upon a foreign soil; that our soldier boys, if fight they must, shall spill their life blood only on American soil in the defense of America and the liberties of our democracy which have made us a great Nation.

We are being importuned again to go to the relief of some of these same nations as the war clouds gather over them. If we yield to the call, it will only mean one thing should war break over Europe, and that will be that we will be thrown again into the maelstrom of a war-mad world with all our resources and our American youth. With a $40,000,000,000 debt to start with, we could not finance another world conflict. We will be bled white and our own democracy may be destroyed. American blood will again run on foreign soil. Thousands, and perhaps millions, more of the little white crosses pointing heavenward will be added to those now standing in the poppy fields on distant shores—saying to the world they, our boys, made the supreme sacrifice; here they lie to > Sleep the sleep that knows no breaking

> Morn of toil or night of waking.

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks and to include therein certain tables from Federal departments with reference to the World War and the World War debts, and also quotations from the Saturday Evening Post, the Washington Post, and Washington's Farewell Address.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 1, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou desire of nations, by whom of old the prophets spake, for whom our fathers longed, and to whom they ever prayed for guidance: Grant unto us such prudence, sagacity, and moderation as characterized the life of the Father of his Country, and may we also have courage that never falters, patience that never wearies, an overruling judgment, truth that disdains all artifice, and magnanimity without alloy.

May we know no glory but our country's good, as again we pledge, at this altar of devotion, integrity of character and firmness of purpose in the fulfillment of this high and holy calling as servants of the Republic. Make us, therefore, willing to be what we were meant to be, by losing ourselves in Thy being, and by finding our joy and peace in the doing of Thy will. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

[Translation]

APOSTOLIC NUNCIATURE OF ITALY,
Rome, April 5, 1939.

To His Excellency Mr. WILLIAM PHILLIPS,
Ambassador of the United States of America, Rome.

EXCELLENCY: In my respectful note of March 14 last I informed your excellency that I had transmitted to the Most Eminent Cardinal Luigi Maglione, secretary of state of His Holiness, the text of the resolution of condolence voted by the American Senate on the occasion of the death of the Holy Father Pius XI.

I have had the honor of being entrusted by the Holy See to request Your Excellency, who so worthily represents the noble American Nation in Italy, to communicate to your Government the profound gratitude of the Holy See.

I avail myself of this opportunity to express to Your Excellency the assurances of my high esteem and consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the sale of the monthly document prepared by the Treasury Department entitled "Bulletin of the Treasury Department," which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RATIFICATION BY CONNECTICUT OF BILL OF RIGHTS AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolution ratifying articles of the amendments 1 to 10, inclusive, of the Constitution of the United States of America

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, That articles 1 to 10, inclusive, of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States of America be, and the same are hereby, ratified by the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut; and

Resolved, That certified copies of the foregoing resolution be forwarded by the Governor of the State of Connecticut to the President of the United States, the Secretary of State of the United States, the President of the Senate of the United States, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States.

EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION TO SENATORS KING AND TYDINGS—SUGAR QUOTAS AND HAWAII

Mr. TYDINGS presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Concurrent resolution

Whereas there is every indication that the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America is unwilling to consider favorably the Ellender bill, which, if passed, would be detrimental to Hawaii's chief industry; and

Whereas opposition by the administration in Washington to legislation on the subject of the production of sugar which would be harmful to home industry is becoming increasingly pronounced, so that there is reason to believe that no such harmful legislation will be enacted during the present session of the Congress of the United States; and

Whereas not only has our Delegate in Congress worked unceasingly to protect the best interests of Hawaii, but has enlisted the support of others, among whom are Senator W. H. KING and Senator MILLARD TYDINGS; and

Whereas, as always, Senator KING and Senator TYDINGS have come to the aid of Hawaii; and

Whereas the efforts of these gentlemen have resulted in great good to our people: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twentieth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That we do hereby give expression of our appreciation of the friendship of Senators KING and TYDINGS, manifested in their consistently effective efforts in the interests of Hawaii; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the Delegate in Congress from Hawaii and to the Honorable W. H. KING and to the Honorable MILLARD TYDINGS.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Concurrent resolution relating to the return of a Confederate cannon

Whereas there is located at Madison Barracks, N. Y., a Regular Army post, a cannon used by the Confederate Army and cast in Columbia, S. C., in 1862 at Congaree Iron Works: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the United States Senators and Congressmen from South Carolina be, and they are hereby, requested to make proper application to the War Department or such authorities as may be necessary to have said cannon returned to this State; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Honorable ELLISON D. SMITH and the Honorable JAMES F. BYRNES, Senators in Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

House Concurrent Resolution 27

Concurrent resolution respectfully memorializing the Congress of the United States, the President of the United States, and the Secretary of Agriculture to grant immediate remedy and adjustment, by correlating the estimate of consumption to actual needs, based upon the actual consumption of 1938 and the extraordinarily large carry-over inventory of sugar as of January 1, 1939, and that the Sugar Act be amended to provide a larger share of the American sugar market for the American farmer

Whereas the fact that in the continental United States we produce less than 30 percent of the sugar we consume, and sugar is practically the only nonsurplus agricultural product of the United States; and every acre of land utilized in the production of sugar, either from beets or cane, invariably takes such acreage out of the production of some surplus agricultural product such as cotton, rice, wheat, corn, beans, etc.; and

Whereas the production of sugar on our continental farms, especially the production of sugar from sugar beets, is conducive to the employment of labor on a large scale at profitable wages or rates, and the increased employment of labor on a larger scale in the production of sugar in the continental United States would be a great stimulus to prosperity and the general welfare of such sugar-producing areas, and the United States as a whole. The increased prosperity of the sugar-producing farmer would enable him to purchase much needed agricultural machinery, tractors, trucks, etc., and would reflect directly in increased employment in industry producing such agricultural machinery; and

Whereas we believe it is the inherent fundamental economic right of the American farmer to produce nonsurplus agricultural products, such as sugar, up to the limit of his ability, without restriction, and such production should be protected in our United States market so that sugar will sell at a price comparable or equivalent to the index value of all foods. Foreign sugars should not be permitted to enter the United States market in excess of the amount which, when added to our production of sugar, the total will equal our consumption, so that both the interest of producers and consumers of sugar in the continental United States will be adequately protected, and the production of sugar in the continental United States fostered on a basis of common defense and general welfare, so that regardless of peace or war the citizens of the United States will be protected in their supply of such an essential food as sugar; and

Whereas we believe that the Sugar Act of 1937 was a step in the right direction, but with the removal of restrictions on United States production of sugar, coupled with a proper administration of the act, the sugar industry of the United States can go forward on a sane, sound basis for the best interests of the United States as a whole; and

Whereas excessive sugar consumption estimates out of all proportion to the actual consumption have been made since the adoption of the act, thereby permitting increased importation of foreign sugars, which has depressed prices in the sugar market to its all-time low. There is now available upward of 600,000 tons of cane sugar out of the 1938 quotas, which sugars are mainly the product of foreign countries, and a consumption estimate for 1939 by the Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. Henry A. Wallace, of 6,755,000 tons permits the importation of 3,000,000 tons of foreign sugar to further glut and complicate our American sugar market. It is estimated that on December 31, 1939, the end of the current year for sugar quotas, there will be upward of 800,000 tons of foreign sugars available, over and above our current needs, which sugars are all eligible to be marketed in the continental United States. This in view of the fact that in 1938 a kindly providence, on a limited acreage, saw fit to give us one-quarter million tons of beet sugar and 150,000 tons of Louisiana and Florida cane sugar over and above our Government marketing allotments for 1939, and this practically 400,000 tons of sugar produced by American farmers in 1938 constitutes a further surplus of sugar. Also, the recommendation of the United States Department of Agriculture is that certain districts, some of them in Michigan, shall not be permitted to market in 1939 a single pound of sugar produced in 1939. This situation, if not remedied in the near future, will destroy the sugar industry of the United States. The enforced carry-over to 1940 of practically 400,000 tons of continental beet and cane sugar produced in 1938 will have the immediate effect of eliminating the opportunity for 64,000,000 hours of labor directly utilized in the sugar industry, and possibly several times that number indirectly employed. Unless immediate adjustment is made on the recommended sugar-marketing allotments at least one and possibly more Michigan sugar plants, it appears, will be unable to operate this year, thus throwing more American laborers out of work and depriving more American farmers from marketing beets and producing sugar, which is our only nonsurplus agricultural product, at a profit: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Michigan hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States, the President of the United States, and the Secretary of Agriculture to grant immediate remedy and adjustment by correlating the estimate of consumption to actual needs, based upon the actual consumption of 1938 and the extraordinarily large carry-over inventory of sugar as of January 1, 1939, and that the Sugar Act be amended to provide a larger share of the American sugar market for the American farmer; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to all Senators and Congressmen from Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Legislative Resolution 25

Whereas it is the sense of this legislature that the granting of equal transit privileges as between localities where mills and other processors are located or where grain is stored, cleaned, or otherwise handled, is essential to prevent discrimination and prejudice in the transportation of grain and grain products and the successful conduct of the grain and milling business; and

Whereas it is the belief of the legislature that the Interstate Commerce Act should include in section 3 a specific inhibition against discrimination or prejudice by reason of inequality in the granting of transit privileges as among such localities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States is respectfully requested to amend subdivision (1) of section 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended February 28, 1920, March 4, 1927, August 9, 1935, and August 12, 1935, by striking the period, inserting a semicolon, and adding the following language:

"The granting of transit privileges to any locality, port, port district, gateway, or transit point, upon any route over which through rates have been or shall be established, and the denial of like transit privileges to any other locality, port, port district, gateway, or transit point upon said route under the same through rate, shall be deemed to be an undue and unreasonable prejudice and disadvantage to the locality, port, port district, gateway, or transit point denied such privilege."

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twentieth Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, requested to amend the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act so as to make possible the benefits of such act being applicable to holders of homesteads in the Territory of Hawaii; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Delegate in Congress from Hawaii.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Senate Resolution 52

Whereas it has come to the attention of the people of Hawaii, through the press of the Territory and otherwise, that the term of office of the Honorable James Leslie Coke as chief justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii has expired; and

Whereas the Honorable James Leslie Coke has become a native son of Hawaii by adoption and by his brilliant career as a senator from the third senatorial district from the year 1913 to the year 1915, and by his enviable record as an eminent and distinguished jurist from the year 1916 to the present date; and

Whereas the Honorable James Leslie Coke has always been a loyal citizen of the Territory of Hawaii and a steadfast defender of the constitutional rights of all of the people; and

Whereas the social, political, and economical progress of any American community is dependent in no small measure on the efficiency of the judiciary; and

Whereas, for the best interest of all the people of the Territory of Hawaii, it is most desirable and urgent that the Honorable James Leslie Coke be reappointed to the office of chief justice: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii, That we do by this means beg the President of the United States, the Senate of the Congress of the United States, and the Attorney General of the United States to seriously consider the reappointment of the Honorable James Leslie Coke; and be it further

Resolved, That we do by this means extend to the Honorable James Leslie Coke our sincerest and heartiest congratulations and aloha upon the completion of his very successful and enviable term as chief justice, and do also by this means acknowledge his efforts in behalf of justice; and be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Senate of the Congress of the United States, the Attorney General of the United States, and to Hawaii's great chief justice, the Honorable James Leslie Coke.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

Senate Resolution 58

Memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to amend the Hawaiian organic act to provide for reapportionment of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii and to create districts from which such senators and representatives shall be elected

Whereas section 55 of the Hawaiian organic act reads, in part, as follows:

"The legislature, at its first regular session after the census enumeration shall be ascertained, and from time to time thereafter, shall reapportion the membership in the senate and house of representatives among the senatorial and representative districts on the basis of the population in each of said districts who are citizens of the Territory"; and

Whereas no succeeding Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii has been enabled to reapportion the membership of the senate and house on the aforesaid basis because the Federal decennial censuses have failed to enumerate the numbers of citizens domiciled in each of the six representative districts listed in section 38 of said Hawaiian organic act; and

Whereas the report of the joint committee on Hawaii rendered to the Congress on February 15, 1938, made certain recommendations to the Legislature of said Territory regarding reapportionment of the membership of said legislature: Now, therefore, in accordance with said recommendations, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii of the Twentieth Regular Session of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it hereby is, respectfully requested and urged to amend the Hawaiian organic act by enacting a bill containing in substance the following words and figures:

"An act to amend the Hawaiian organic act so as to provide for reapportionment of the membership of the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, and to create districts from which said representatives shall be elected, and to provide for reapportionment within each county of the membership of the senate of said legislature

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Y., praying for the enactment of Senate Joint Resolution 64 and House Joint Resolution 168, authorizing the admission to the United States of 10,000 refugee children each year, in 1939 and 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Hawaiian Civic Club, of Honolulu, T. H., favoring the reappointment of Hon. James Leslie Coke, to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution adopted at a rally and mass meeting held in the Old South Meeting House, Boston, Mass., favoring a policy of nonparticipation in Japanese aggression in China, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MEAD presented a resolution of the Mayor and City Council of Newburgh, N. Y., favoring extension of the W. P. A. rules to permit deserving taxpayers to be registered and employed on W. P. A. projects, which was referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Unemployment and Relief.

Mr. JOHNSON of California presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of California, which was referred to the Committee on Claims:

Assembly Joint Resolution 28

Relative to memorializing Congress to enact proposed legislation directing the allowance and payment of travel and other expenses to certain soldiers of the Spanish-American War in the Philippine Islands

Whereas certain members of the Regular Army of the United States, who enlisted therein for the duration of the War with Spain, were honorably discharged from such enlistment while serving in the Philippines and were unable to secure transportation therefrom to the continental limits of the United States by Government transport for a period of approximately 3 months thereafter; and

Whereas the cost of such transportation by private carrier was prohibitive to men of limited funds such as newly discharged veterans; and

Whereas the cost of lodging and subsistence in the Philippines pending such governmental transportation, necessitated a financial outlay which such veterans could not have been expected to bear, but did bear; and

Whereas the expression by such veterans of their patriotism as manifested by such enlistment, could fittingly be met by a similar expression of thankfulness on the part of the people of the United States by authorizing the War Department, upon application to it by such former members of the Regular Army of the United States, under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall prescribe, to allow and pay their actual necessary expenses, if any, for lodging and subsistence in the Philippines for the period, not exceeding 3 months, during which they awaited transportation by Government transport and, in addition, for the distance from Manila, P. I., to San Francisco, Calif., the travel pay and commutation of subsistence formerly allowed under sections 1 to 90, Revised Statutes of the United States, to soldiers of the Regular Army honorably discharged which comprises all enlisted men, less any sum or sums of money actually paid by the Government to such persons respectively, at the time of such discharge or subsequent thereto by way of travel pay or allowances for transportation and subsistence between said places; and

Whereas a House Resolution No. 2197 has been introduced in the Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, so providing: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully urged to enact such legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation.

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of California, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Assembly Joint Resolution 18

Relative to memorializing the President and Congress to provide for Kern River flood control

Whereas floods on the Kern River from time to time constitute a serious menace, causing erosion, damage to homes and farms, destruction of farm crops, and the necessity of maintaining expensive constructions and levees to protect the city of Bakersfield; and

Whereas the construction of dams for storage and to control the waters of the river would create a supply of stored waters which could be used to irrigate a large acreage of very fertile land in Kern County; and

Whereas the present system of storage in the open valley results in a high percentage of evaporation of the waters so stored which are thereby lost for use for purposes of irrigation; and

Whereas construction of storage reservoirs and hydroelectric power plants in connection therewith would furnish power during the growing season, which power would lower the cost of pumping in those districts where pumping is done, and at the same time would eventually pay the entire cost of all the storage dams, reservoirs, and power plants in connection therewith; and

Whereas the construction of such storage reservoirs and hydroelectric power plants is of such an extensive and intricate nature as to require handling as a Federal project: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and Congress of the United States be memorialized to include the construction of dams and hydroelectric power plants in connection therewith on the Kern River as one of the Federal construction projects and that Federal moneys be appropriated in sums sufficient to complete the construction of the dams and other works in connection therewith at the earliest possible moment; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to each Senator or Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that the Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully requested to urge such action.

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of California, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Assembly Joint Resolution 36

Relative to construction of railway connecting link along northern California coast

Whereas the vitally important stretch of the Pacific coast from Eureka, Calif., north through the rich, productive, but utterly defenseless area of California and Oregon to Marshfield, Oreg., sometimes called "the last frontier," is unserved by any coast-line railway and forms a hiatus in the otherwise continuous coast-line rail route for the Pacific coast; and

Whereas the connecting of these two points by a coast-line railway would, from an economic standpoint, be justified in that—

1. It would afford adequate service for the natural passenger and freight traffic flow between Washington, Oregon, and California cities;

2. It would permit the development of millions of acres of virgin territory for homes, business opportunities, agriculture, lumbering, and mining activities; and

3. It would afford adequate facilities for the marketing of extensive natural lumber and mineral resources of a territory nearly as large as the State of Oregon; and

Whereas the existing state of world affairs has required the Government of the United States to take measures designed to provide adequate means to defend the Nation; and

Whereas the defense of the California coast is of utmost importance and the exigencies of natural defense of the Pacific coast and, of necessity, the United States requires that there be an unbroken rail route paralleling and adjacent to the coast line as essential in order to assure—

1. Rapid troop, supply, and material movements to point of threatened invasion;

2. The maintenance of the only practical and, in most cases, possible means for transportation of artillery, munitions, and other heavy military tonnage;

3. The only practical means of transport of all classes of supplies to army, corps, and divisional railheads;

4. Defeat of attempts by enemy forces to effect landings, cut inland communication lines, and reduce coast-defense fortifications;

5. Availability for troop and supply transportation all the transcontinental railway lines to the Pacific coast, two-thirds of which approach through the Columbia River Basin; and

6. Access to the vast supplies of essential timber and mineral wealth of the area for wartime need; and

Whereas the construction of such connecting link is actively desired by the coastal cities and counties of this State from San Francisco north and by the Governors of the Pacific Coast States and other important substantial public leaders of such States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate on the State of California jointly, That the President and Congress of the United States be memorialized to allocate, from funds available and which may become available for national defense, for the purpose of assisting in the construction of, or of constructing, such a railroad project, such moneys as shall be necessary to assure the initiation and completion thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be instructed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and to each Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that the Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully requested to urge such action.

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of California, which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Assembly Joint Resolution 19 relative to memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to continue the Works Progress Administration Federal art project

Whereas the Works Progress Administration Federal art project has been in existence over a period of 3 years, providing employment for workers of all arts crafts; and

Whereas the number employed on the Federal art project has tended to relieve, to a certain extent, long periods of unemployment for a great number of artists of all the arts; and

Whereas the Federal art project has given to many workers in the fine arts and crafts a chance to rehabilitate themselves for future employment in this industrial world; and

Whereas private enterprise is now unable to absorb musicians, actors, painters, and workers of other art crafts because of technological development and mechanical devices which reproduce and supplant the necessity for their personal presence; and

Whereas art of all phases in itself is a necessity for upright, honest, sincere, wholesome, and enjoyable living: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby respectfully urges, requests, and memorializes the President and the Congress of the United States to pass such legislation as will make it imperative that the Works Progress Administration Federal art project be continued in its present form; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of California also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of California, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Assembly Joint Resolution 20, relative to Federal aid to State or Territorial veterans' homes

Whereas there exists in the State of California one of the outstanding State homes of the Nation for the care of disabled veterans, who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living; and

Whereas the per-capita cost for maintaining such veterans has greatly increased due to advancing age and physical disabilities; and

Whereas the State of California is deluged with veterans who came from other States who become disabled and by reason of their becoming legal residents, must be cared for in California; and

Whereas the $120 per year per capita Federal aid represents a very small part of the total cost of maintaining a veteran in the California State facility: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States are respectfully urged to enact legislation that will result in increasing the Federal aid: Provided, That any State shall not be paid a sum exceeding one-half the per-capita cost of maintaining a veteran; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in Congress.

ADVERTISING OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES BY RADIO—PETITIONS

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask permission to present sundry and numerous petitions; and I should like to read a portion of one of the petitions, in order that it may be understood and properly designated:

To the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned citizens of Nampa of the county of Canyon of the State of Idaho, do respectfully petition you to help promote the general welfare of the people of the United States by securing the passage of legislation which will stop, so far as is possible by Federal law, the great advertising campaign for the sale of alcoholic beverages now going on by press and radio.

The States cannot adequately regulate or prohibit the advertising of liquor so long as Congress permits such advertising through the medium of interstate commerce. Therefore, we must earnestly urge your assistance in securing this proposed legislation in order that State regulations and laws upon the subject may thereby be made more adequate and effective and that radio advertising of alcoholic beverages may be stopped entirely.

I presume the petitions should lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct, as the bill in question was reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce during the last adjournment under authority of the order of the Senate of the 27th ultimo.

Mr. BORAH. And the Senate will observe that this is another form of stream pollution, the subject dealt with by the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions presented by the Senator from Idaho will be received and lie on the table.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34 to the bill (H. The motion was agreed to.

CALLING OF CALENDAR DISPENSED WITH

The VICE PRESIDENT. Routine morning business having been concluded, the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the calling of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in connection with the calendar, I should like to address an inquiry to the able majority leader [Mr. BARKLEY]. One of the new bills that is now upon the calendar is order No. 349, which relates to the Florida ship canal. The bill comes to the Senate from the Committee on Commerce without recommendation, thank God. I should like to inquire if it is the intention to take this bill up during the course of the present week?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I cannot answer his question now, because I have not conferred with the author of the bill and the chairman of the committee about it. I will say that, so far as I am concerned, it would be entirely agreeable to do so, because we are a little slack in business this week, anyway. But I will be glad to advise the Senator later in the day.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It is perfectly agreeable to me to go ahead with it so long as I know 1 day in advance what is to be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will see that the Senator has that information.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

STREAM-POLLUTION CONTROL

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the stream-pollution control bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 685) to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, in the debate on Senate bill 685, which has to do with an attempt to prevent or regulate the pollution of the navigable streams of our country, I rise to speak in favor of the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

The matter of stream pollution was an issue in the recent election in Oregon, and I had the honor of being president of the Oregon Stream Purification League. Just as in the Senate, so there, during the discussion of various proposals, the voices raised in protest against any remedial legislation were so numerous that a spectator might believe public opinion was against any progressive measures aimed at the purification of our streams.

It has always appeared strange to me that many of those who are individually clean and favorable to sanitation are favorable to a continuance of filthy and insanitary conditions when the subject is considered as a social question. The point I want to make at the moment is that when this question is put to the people themselves, as it was put to the people in Oregon, we find that there is overwhelming public support for sanitation, cleanliness, and the preservation of natural values.

At the general election in Oregon on November 8, 1939, the voters of Oregon overwhelmingly approved a bill for water purification and prevention of stream pollution. We had no campaign funds. I myself individually carried the financial responsibility of the campaign, and nobody has ever accused me of being careless of my money. Approximately 77 percent, or a ratio of over 3 to 1, of the persons voting registered their approval of the bill, and I am convinced that the same percentage of the people of the Nation would do the same thing if they had an opportunity to vote upon the principle of sanitation and cleanliness and the restoration of the natural conditions of our streams.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCARRAN. At the outset of the Senator's remarks I understood him to say that this was a bill for the prevention of pollution of navigable streams. Does the Senator understand that the bill is confined to navigable streams?

Mr. HOLMAN. Navigable in the broad sense and character, out to the *n*th degree, so far as the law will stretch. That will cover the waters of the country.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does not the Senator understand that the bill relates to all streams that may be interstate?

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that, yes; but in our section of the country we call a navigable stream one that will float a shinglebolt. Does the Senator know what a shinglebolt is? It is something about as large as a piece of unsplit stove wood.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say to the Senator that that definition is not acceptable to the War Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. My understanding of the bill is, as I say, that it covers streams in the broadest sense, whatever the interpretation of that term may be. So far as I am concerned, I would go clear back to the springs.

Does the Senator wish to ask me any further questions?

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish the Senator from Oregon to understand that I did not interrupt him save and except to protect the record as he goes along, because in this bill we are not dealing with navigable streams. We are dealing with streams within the confines of a law as the Federal Government may apply the law. There may be some question as to whether the Federal Government may apply the law to an intrastate stream entirely within a State; but it may apply the law, whether it be the Clark amendment or the original bill, to an interstate stream. So when the Senator used the words "navigable stream" he aroused my interest, because the Senator knows that many streams in the West are interstate, but are not necessarily, nor indeed possibly, navigable.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the distinguished Senator from Nevada for elucidating that idea and amplifying my remark, and making clear to all present the great extent of spread in the meaning of the bill.

I have been advised by reliable authority that the Army engineers are ready to proceed pursuant to the provisions of the Clark bill, Senate bill 1691, under which we would be taking an effective step toward the accomplishment of stream purification. I am not opposed to the bill of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]; but I favor the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], because it goes further into the subject, and would be more effective in accomplishing the regulation of the apparently unregulated contamination of our streams, and would ultimately effectuate a degree of purification that is vital to the public health, and preservative of fish life and the restoration of material and recreational values in our streams.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for the purpose of offering two perfecting amendments to my amendment in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I desire to modify my amendment in two particulars by two amendments, which I send to the desk.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the author of the original bill, with the attention of the Senator from Missouri? Are we not driving at the same point by both of these measures, the original bill and the substitute? In other words, the original bill proposes to put the control of this matter in one hand, and the substitute proposes to put it in—if I may use a homely expression—a broader spread of authority. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. In a sense the Senator is correct. Both bills—the original bill and the substitute—aim at the same thing, and that is to clean up the pollution in our streams. The main differences between the two bills are these: The substitute proposes to put this work under the Army engineers, while the original bill puts it in the Public Health Service. The substitute also empowers the Federal Government to bring injunction suits against cities, towns, and individuals in order to abate what is called a nuisance in the event that they are notified to do so by the Chief of Engineers, or the board set up under him, and fail to do so. Those are the main differences between the two bills.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in elaboration of my question let me say that I am interested in that which I think the Federal Government may without serious objection accomplish, namely, interstate activity for the elimination of pollution. In other words, I think a question might be raised as to an intrastate stream; but, in my judgment, in the case of an interstate stream the Government may always step in to clear up the stream. I am interested in such a body of water, whether it be a navigable stream or a nonnavigable stream, because in any event the water is used by humanity.

What I have in mind is that there should be a central authority to carry out the provisions of the bill. The authority itself may bring into its general scope all the other agencies of the Government. So, with that in mind, I had hoped that the author of the bill—and I commend the author of the bill and I commend the policy of the bill—might get together with the author of the substitute, so that we might go ahead with this worthy project.

Mr. BARKLEY. Unfortunately, there is an irreconcilable difference between the two bills. I shall explain the difference a little later, when I address the Senate in opposition to the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, I think he and I will agree on the statement that the only irreconcilable difference between our bills is in the matter of enforcement. My bill contains an ultimately drastic enforcement provision. The bill of the Senator from Kentucky does not. I do not think the question of agency is of such tremendous importance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Nevada that the bill I introduced originally, which is the bill now being considered, contemplates cooperation between the Federal Government and the States. It takes into consideration not only navigable streams but tributaries to navigable streams from which polluting substance may find its way into navigable streams. I do not think that the authority of the Federal Government in dealing with a sanitary health matter of this sort is necessarily limited to the portions of streams which may be navigable.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree with that statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. It can and does deal with tributaries which may pollute navigable streams, although there may be no discharge into the navigable part of the stream itself which would pollute the water.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. The reason for my question grew out of a remark of the able Senator from Oregon. I did not want the RECORD to show that we were dealing entirely with navigable streams.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true; the bill does not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me to interrupt him just a moment on that point—and I do not wish to interfere with the statement of the Senator from Kentucky—it is my thought in connection with this matter that since the Government of the United States has recognized, for instance, in the case of flood control, that there is a responsibility on the Government as to tributary streams, because from them water may flow into the main stems of the various rivers which will bring about a flood situation, since we have assumed, as to navigable streams, to compel the removal of obstructions which may interfere with navigation, it seems to me perfectly clear that Congress has the same right and jurisdiction, either by way of appropriations or by regulations, not only as to the main stems of the navigable streams but as to any streams which may empty into navigable streams and contribute to a condition deleterious to the public health.

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me use an expression which no doubt accords with the view of the Senator from Missouri, that the Federal Government may take over and control a stream system.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is exactly my idea.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri a question which is raised in my mind by reason of the question propounded by the Senator from Nevada. Is there, after all, any limit to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government in the matter of controlling pollution, although the pollution may occur in a stream which is entirely intrastate, if that stream empties into an interstate stream? In other words, would the Federal Government be debarred from taking action with regard to the pollution of an entirely intrastate stream, assuming that the water of such stream, as is true in the case of practically all streams, eventually flows into an interstate stream?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that so far as I am concerned I have not the faintest doubt on earth of the jurisdiction of Congress in the matter.

Mr. NORRIS. Covering every stream?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; as a matter of protecting the public health.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is correct about that, because pollution of a stream which itself rises and empties within a State may be the means of polluting an interstate stream. If we had no jurisdiction over such a stream we could not accomplish the end sought by the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no difference of opinion on that subject.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that that question does not enter into the differences between those supporting the original bill of the Senator from Kentucky and those supporting my substitute, because I think all concerned are agreed upon that proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. If we are agreed on that, then I should like to know from the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Kentucky their idea of just what the difference is between these two measures.

Mr. BARKLEY. I expect to explain the difference.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator from Kentucky is going to explain the difference, and after he concludes I may have some slight explanation to make.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. But I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether he wants his amendments to his amendment read.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to have my amendments read for the information of the Senate, because in some degree they tend to modify the effect of my substitute as originally proposed.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Nebraska. I think the Senator from Nebraska realizes that if a stream is entirely intrastate there might be a question as to the right of the Federal Government to take jurisdiction over it. Does the Senator acquiesce in that statement?

Mr. NORRIS. There might be a question, though I do not see just what it could be so far as pollution is concerned. If the Federal Government, in attempting to control pollution on interstate streams, cannot control the tributaries, regardless of whether they are interstate or intrastate, then the right to control interstate streams is entirely nullified.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator fails to distinguish between a stream which, by reason of its contacts, becomes an interstate system, and a stream which is entirely intrastate.

Mr. NORRIS. By an intrastate stream does the Senator mean a stream which rises and ends in a State?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is the meaning.

Mr. NORRIS. I should say Congress would not have jurisdiction if there is such a stream.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wanted to have that clear. I hope a law on the subject of stream pollution will be enacted in some form, and I should like to have in the law some expression so that there may be Federal jurisdiction to clean up all streams where human life is at all affected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). The clerk will state the amendments by which the Senator from Missouri modifies his substitute.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 6, after line 15, it is proposed to modify the original amendment by adding the following subsection:

(c) Where compliance with standards of purity fixed by Chief of Engineers be impossible or impracticable before effective date of this act because no adequate method of disposal or treatment of polluting material is presently known, the Chief of Engineers may grant an extension of time, not exceeding 5 years from such effective date, to permit such industry to perfect and provide adequate means of disposal or treatment of such polluting material. The burden of proving necessity for such extension shall be upon the industry seeking it, and no extension shall be granted except after public hearing and a finding by the Chief of Engineers of necessity.

The amendment is further modified on page 9, line 7, by amending section 12 so that it will read as follows:

All provisions of this act applicable to States shall also be applicable to the District of Columbia, and shall take effect 3 years after the passage of this act, except for additional or new sources of pollution, in which case the provisions of the act shall become immediately effective.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute, as modified.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I do not know whether I am entirely in order, but I have an amendment to the bill which has been accepted by the Senator from Kentucky, and I should like to have the amendment accepted by the Senator from Missouri, the author of the proposed substitute. If it is in order, I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order to have the amendment stated. The clerk will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the original bill, on page 3, line 18, after "Sec. 3", it is proposed to insert "(a)"; and on page 3, after line 25, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(b) The Division, upon the request of any municipality, shall make a periodic test of the water at any bathing beach within the limits of such municipality, and shall make a report to such municipality as promptly as possible with respect to the existence of water pollution at such bathing beach and shall make definite recommendations for the correction and elimination of any deleterious conditions which are found to exist.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to accept the amendment to the substitute.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. If I understand the full scope of the amendment, it seems to me that it is too broad. To illustrate what I mean, there is in my State a lake formed by streams from the mountains. It has no outlet except into Salt Lake, and Salt Lake has no outlet. So it cannot be said that the lake falls into the class of interstate waters.

I should be unwilling to have the Federal Government given authority to demand of the City Council of Provo City, which is upon the lake, that they adopt plans prescribed by Federal authority for the purification of the water.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator did not understand the amendment. The amendment merely provides that in an instance where a municipality requests the authority set up to examine the water, the examination may be made by this Federal agency.

Mr. BARKLEY. And that the report be made to the city. There is no authority to be given to the Federal Government to do anything about it.

Mr. KING. I should be opposed to it, myself, because it is merely another entering wedge to have the municipalities and the people turn over to the Federal Government obligations which rest upon them.

Mr. MALONEY. I am sorry, but the Senator entirely misunderstands the amendment. The amendment does not turn anything over to the Federal Government. The amendment, if the Senator will hear me a moment——

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to listen to what the Senator has to say.

Mr. MALONEY. The amendment provides that a local agency, a municipality, may ask the Federal agency proposed to be set up under the so-called Barkley bill to inspect or examine the waters within the municipality and report back to the municipality a proper method of correcting any conditions which may exist.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the point I make is that there is a duty resting upon the municipality——

Mr. MALONEY. Not at all.

Mr. KING. There is a duty now resting upon it, an obligation to supply suitable water for culinary purposes, and to prevent the waters supplying the municipality from being foul, if that would affect the health of the people.

That is not a duty resting upon the Federal Government with respect to purely intrastate streams. It seems to me that the Federal Government is now being asked to look after matters which belong exclusively to the States and to municipalities within the States with respect to streams that are wholly and purely intrastate. I know that the bill makes it optional—that the Federal Government is not compelled to enter upon the tasks.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, that is not the intention, and I am certain that it is not so. It merely asks the Federal Government to make an analysis when there is some fear of danger. It does not propose to do anything more.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. In support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut, I wish to state that I was advised by the health officer of the State of Oregon that many people who had journeyed to the seaside, to our ocean beaches, had, after returning to their homes, become ill with typhoid or kindred ailments, sometimes with fatal results. This, in his own opinion, was the result of infections incident to bathing in the ocean waters at places where I, myself, have observed the outflow of the streams coming back with the tide and in some places making a very noisome and dangerous condition. I presume the same insanitary and dangerous conditions are to be found in other parts of our country.

I may add further, because I believe many Senators may not realize the extent of the contamination of our streams and ocean waters at some bathing beaches, and the danger to health and the destruction of game life incident to these conditions, that a group of us took a number of perfectly healthy fish from our fish hatcheries, but them in wire cages, and submerged the cages in the waters of the Willamette River at Portland. We have there no such population as there is in the eastern part of the United States. We are much nearer virgin country. Yet in three different places in that river where such experiments were made every fish was dead in 7 minutes, due to the fact they could not live in the contaminated water of the Willamette River at those points.

I thank the Senator from Kentucky for yielding.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, so far as the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut is concerned, which I accepted on Thursday as part of the bill which I have introduced and which has been accepted, with modification, by the Senator from Missouri, I imagine that no city authority in charge of any pool would request the Division of Stream Pollution to make a survey of it unless the city itself were incapable of doing so adequately.

The Public Health Service, in this particular instance, cooperating with the State health departments of all the States, has facilities for the investigation of matters of this kind that are not possessed by the cities and towns and municipalities.

In the case of the cities envisioned by the Senator from Connecticut, if a city requested the Division to survey its waters, that, of course, would be done by the Division, at its expense, I presume, and then the results would be reported back to the city which made the request, and then if the city did not see fit to correct the situation there scarcely would be any harm done, and the amendment confers on the Federal Government no power to do anything about it.

Mr. President, I wish briefly to comment on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri, which I hope will not be adopted. In the first place, all those who have studied the conditions brought about by stream pollution in this country have recognized the fact, as I stated on Thursday last, that most of the stream pollution has come about by an accumulation of conditions over which no one in particular has had any control. It did not come about by design. No one has deliberately set out to poison the waters of any stream from which the people derive their drinking water; but the rapid development of our industrial sections, and also the rapid growth of our municipalities, many of them with not sufficient revenues to enable them to carry on stream purification or water purification activities, have resulted in an accumulation of conditions which are now endangering the health and the lives of people in many sections of the United States.

Mr. President, a gradual approach to the question of stream purification has been advocated by all who are interested in the matter, with the exception of one organization, for which I have the greatest respect, and which has been in fact the motive power behind the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri, or the bill which he introduced, and a similar bill which was introduced in the last Congress by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN]. That organization is the Izaak Walton League. The Izaak Walton League is a conservation organization interested in the preservation of fish life and animal life, and various sorts of recreation and sports activities in which the members engage. It is a worthy organization with an entirely laudable and worthy motive. But all those in the Government and outside of it, with the one exception, I think, and perhaps one or two others, have advocated a gradual approach to the question of stream purification.

I certainly have no desire to work any injustice on any manufacturing plant or on any city in the effort to bring about the purification of our streams, and those of us who have been working for years on the type of legislation represented in the bill which I have introduced and which was unanimously reported from the Committee on Commerce, have felt that in the beginning the law ought to be limited to cooperation among the States and cooperation between the Federal Government and the States, with such help as the Federal Government may give voluntarily to the States, and the cities, and the counties, and to private industries, to enable them to bring about the stream purification which I have felt, as those who sponsor the bill I have introduced have felt, ought not to be made drastically compulsory at the beginning.

The Senator from Missouri has now modified his substitute by postponing the operation of compulsory features of the substitute for 3 years. While, of course, that does modify to some extent the substitute which he has offered, I do not believe it is wise at the beginning to put into the proposed law any compulsory provisions under which the Government of the United States may go into the Federal courts through the district attorneys, and bring injunction suits against corporations, or persons, or organizations, or counties, or municipalities, to compel them to install appliances designed to purify the waters that are being consumed by the people. That, together with the agency which is to have jurisdiction, constitutes the difference between the Clark substitute and the original bill.

Mr. President, I have great respect for the Army engineers. I have been their defender and their friend all my life. I live on the Ohio River. All my life I have lived on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. I have been constantly in touch with the Army engineers in their great work of canalizing the Ohio River, and in their work of protecting the people in the Mississippi Valley from the recurring floods that do such great damage to the people in those valleys. But this is a sanitary measure, not primarily a civil engineering measure. It is a health measure, and the Public Health Service now is and has been for years cooperating with the health departments of all the States of the Union in order to bring about better health conditions and sanitation. The Public Health Service is already cooperating in the matter of investigation of insanitary waters, and is equipped through its health engineers and its sanitary engineers to continue the cooperation. The bill which I have introduced and which is on the calendar and under consideration, requires the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service and the Division of Stream Pollution which is proposed to be set up in the Public Health Service to cooperate with the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army in working out the plans of the Public Health Service. It provides for recommendations and surveys, and for cooperation between the Federal Government and the States, counties, cities, and private industries in trying to clean up this situation.

The Senator from Missouri on Thursday last referred rather ironically, or sarcastically, or humorously to the fact that the President had by his recent consolidation order put the Public Health Service and the Social Security Board and other welfare agencies in one group. He envisioned Mr. Altmeyer, who is the head of the Social Security Board, cleaning up the streams of the country, as compared with the Chief of the Engineer Corps of the Army. The President has consolidated certain welfare agencies, and I think very properly so; but he has not abolished the Public Health Service. He has only consolidated it with other welfare agencies. It will still remain the Public Health Service. It will still have a Surgeon General; and instead of being a Bureau in the Treasury Department, it will be a division in the new agency, which is called Federal Security Agency. It might have been called Federal Welfare Agency.

So, with all due respect to the facility of my friend for humorous discussion, I think that objection really ought not to be taken seriously.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would not have the Senator or anybody else understand anything I said on last Thursday as being a reflection on the head of the Social Security Board. I have great respect for his opinions, information, and recommendations on any subject about which he knows. I did say that it seemed to me very much preferable to put the matter of the control of stream pollution in the hands of an organization which has particular knowledge of all the streams in the United States, and has an organization already set up in all parts of the United States dealing with the problems of the streams, rather than to transfer such authority to even so eminent a man as Dr. Altmeyer, or even so useful a bureau as the Social Security Board.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Public Health Service will still be the Public Health Service, at the head of which will be the Surgeon General of the United States. That Service is now cooperating and for years has been making surveys in cooperation with every State health department in the United States for the purpose of improving the health and sanitation of our country. It is no reflection upon the Corps of Engineers to say that whenever devices are put in navigable streams which might be calculated to interfere with navigation it may be necessary, and doubtless will be necessary, for some technical engineer to be consulted. The bill I have introduced compels the Public Health Service to consult and cooperate with the Chief of Engineers, and that means anybody under him. Primarily, the problem is one of sanitation. Up little streams which are tributary to navigable rivers, it may be necessary for private industries and municipalities to install plants of one sort or another to purify the waste that goes into the streams which finally run into navigable rivers.

However, as I stated a moment ago, the bill does not deal merely with navigable rivers. The problem is not one of navigation. It is a matter of protecting the life and health of the people of the United States all over the country from the effects of stream pollution, whether the stream be a creek in the county where I live or whether it be the Father of Waters, which drains 31 States of the Union. In view of the fact that already the machinery is in motion between the Public Health Service of the United States and the public-health departments of all the States dealing with the question, it strikes me that the most appropriate place for the location of the Division of Stream Pollution is in the Public Health Service, and not in the Corps of Engineers of the Army.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Dealing with the last few expressions of the able Senator from Kentucky, I am interested in having the law become operative on interstate streams regardless of whether those interstate streams are navigable or otherwise. A stream, even though it may not be navigable, may affect public health and human life. I have in mind such streams. I should like to see the bill so effective that in the view of the author either of the original bill or of the substitute, whichever may be adopted, it would apply to interstate streams, whether navigable or otherwise.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I entirely agree with the idea he has expressed. That idea has been embodied in the bill. There is in the bill no distinction between streams which are interstate and those which are intrastate. The fact of the matter is that the Federal Government's power over rivers does not depend upon whether or not they are interstate. So far as navigation alone is concerned, if they are navigable, under the power of Congress to regulate commerce Congress has the power to provide for navigation and to protect navigation in navigable rivers all over the United States, whether or not such streams be boundaries between States.

Mr. McCARRAN. I realize that the Senator is entirely correct in that statement; but if I may be specific, I have in mind a stream which rises in Lake Tahoe, in California, flows across the State line, and sinks in the central part of the State of Nevada. It is an interstate stream. It is not navigable, but it should come under the terms and provisions of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that undoubtedly it does.

As to the other question, the question of the power of the Federal Government in the initial law to bring about the institution of injunction suits to compel the abatement of what is called a nuisance, it may be that some day we ought to go to that length. I should be in favor of doing so if the voluntary method provided in the bill should not succeed. However, Mr. President, there are hundreds of companies and individuals in the country who, without intentionally violating any State or National law, but because of the nature of their business, have emptied into streams, big and little, matter which results in pollution. I have in mind certain cities in the country where the disposal of refuse from a concentrated area of population has brought about stream pollution. I do not wish to name them, because I have no desire to advertise the disadvantages of any community from the health standpoint. There are many communities, incorporated towns, cities, and even counties where such conditions exist. The people of those communities have suddenly awakened to a condition which exists, which they did not know existed until a survey was made by the State health authorities or by the Public Health Service of the United States, and in some cases both of them working together.

The bill which I am sponsoring authorizes cooperation between the Federal Government and the States, cities, and counties. It provides for loans and grants-in-aid to communities which are eligible. All communities are made eligible if they are discharging into the streams deleterious matter calculated to poison and pollute the waters.

The bill also provides for loans and aids to private industries which desire to clear up the streams; industries which have no desire to endanger life or health, but which may not now be financially able to incur the expense of doing the necessary thing to bring about a correction of the stream-polluting wastage, or of the conditions which exist.

The bill provides for aid to such communities. It authorizes and consents to the making of compacts among States in order that they may locally clear up the conditions which exist.

It has seemed to me, and it now seems to me, that before we clothe the Federal Government with the power to bring suit and obtain an injunction, against a city, a corporation, or an individual whose industry, without his knowledge, or without any premeditation on his part, may have brought about the conditions of which I speak, the towns, counties, and industries ought to be given a chance, under a cooperative measure, to work out their own local problems.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Does not the Senator understand that today a State has the power to abate a nuisance within its own jurisdiction?

Mr. BARKLEY. It has the legal power.

Mr. DANAHER. There is no question about that in the Senator's mind; is there?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the power conferred upon the State depends somewhat upon its own particular constitution and laws. However, I think, by and large, the States have the power to abate nuisances which may endanger the life and health of the people.

Mr. DANAHER. I agree with the Senator. Granting that that is the law, and I agree that it is, let me follow up that statement by asking the Senator if he will take a few minutes in his interesting discussion to explain upon what possible basis the United States Government could undertake to make loans in advance, before a polluter even builds a factory, in order that thereafter he may not pollute the waters. Why may we not expect that the State, which has the power to suppress that form of public nuisance, will do so, particularly if it is a signatory to a compact?

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator's question opens up a very wide field for speculation and discussion. Undoubtedly a State, under its constitution and under its laws, has the power to build highways. However, for 25 years we have been granting aid to the States in the building of highways, because highways are a public necessity, and we wanted to hold out to the States an inducement to build highways. We have required the States to match, dollar for dollar, all the money put into such highways by the Government of the United States. I was a Member of Congress when that law was debated. There were arguments against it on the ground that it was the duty of the local authorities to build highways, and that Uncle Sam had no duty to perform in providing public highways, either for pleasure or as a matter of necessity.

But for nearly a quarter of a century Congress has been annually appropriating money for that purpose. So also Congress has been appropriating money nearly every year to be expended by the Public Health Service in cooperation with the health officers of all the States in bringing about rural sanitation. Undoubtedly the States had the power to do that under their laws and were doing it; but just as the Federal Government has regarded highways as a national problem; just as it has regarded floods as a national problem and so declared in the laws which have been enacted; just as it has regarded the agricultural element of our population and their prosperity as a national problem; just as we have regarded the regulation of practices in connection with sale of securities as a national problem, we have no less regarded the health and happiness and lives of our people, as a whole, as a national problem. We are making a beginning here to try to solve what is a national problem by helping the States, by helping the cities, and by helping their industries, when they themselves are unable to do it, to work out locally their salvation by appropriating money to loan them and to grant them, and this bill provides that in no case shall the Federal Government contribute more than 33⅓ percent of the cost of any local project.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. The last statement of the Senator partially answered the question I had in mind, that in no instance shall the Federal Government contribute over 33⅓ percent. I am wondering, however, if the bill provides any kind of a check so that one State shall not get all the money or a number of States shall not get all the money to the exclusion of others? Is there any provision of that kind in the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. In the bill which I have introduced it is all, of course, ultimately under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury. The surveys are made—and, of course, the local community will have a fairly good idea of the type of project necessary in order to accomplish its purpose—and the recommendations come up through the Division of Stream Pollution, through the Budget Bureau, and through the Secretary of the Treasury. I imagine it will be impossible for the Congress to lay down an ironclad rule distributing the money according to population and other elements that are included in the highway appropriations and may be included in some formula that will be required hereafter for allotments in the matter of relief appropriations.

Mr. WILEY. I appreciate that; but what I am wondering about is whether or not it will not present another opportunity for a "pork barrel" of some kind to be used in a political way?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think so, I will say to the Senator, because the bill lays stress upon cooperation not only among the States that may enter into compacts but cooperation between the States and the Federal Government. There is no formula laid down, and I do not think there ought to be a formula laid down in the bill, because we cannot do all this at once; it will take years. As our population grows and our industries develop and concentrate on the highways, where they have access to their raw materials and egress for their finished products, it will take years to work out such a perfect condition that we may feel that ultimately we will have been able to protect the lives and health of our people and incidentally all other life that dwells in the water, for this bill requires that aquatic life of all sorts be taken into consideration in determining the feasibility of a project.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. As I stated in the debate last Thursday, I am very much interested in this stream-pollution control bill because all my life has been spent in the Illinois Valley, and I have had occasion to observe the effects of stream pollution in the Illinois River. I should like the Senate to know that at one time for 100 miles from the head of the Illinois River south there was not a single living organism of plant or fish life, as attested by the biological experts of the State of Illinois. That pollution was caused primarily by industries located in the city of Chicago; but, to the everlasting credit of those large industries, after realizing what was going on with respect to the pollution of the Illinois River, they constructed large sewerage and disposal plants at a cost of millions upon millions of dollars. Those plants have just recently been finished after years of labor and the expenditure, as I have said, of vast sums of money.

If the amendment of the Senator from Missouri should be adopted, it seems to me that it would work a distinct hardship upon some communities along the Illinois River. These communities are just as much interested in the purification of the Illinois River as are any other communities that have constructed disposal and sewage plants up to this point; but they may be in financial trouble. They may not be ready to move forward because of lack of adequate funds. Their objectives are the same but obtaining them is impossible. If this bill is enacted by the Congress, it will do something more than purify for health and sanitation. With just a little aid from the Federal Government, and a little cooperation upon our part, and with a continuance of the program of education for the purification of the streams for sanitary purposes, I am confident that ultimately, for example, the Illinois River will regain the place it once had back in the eighties and nineties, when it was the greatest fish-producing stream in the United States except the Columbia River in the Northwest. As the result of the pollution of that river, practically all fish life was destroyed at one time, and those who depended upon the river to obtain their living through commercial fishing were practically eliminated. As a result many of those people are today on relief. The passage of the so-called Barkley bill would be a long step in the right direction to bring back the tremendous fishing industry which once was ours in the Illinois River and aid in establishing again the rights of individuals to make a living from the catching and marketing of fish.

I am happy to say, as the result of what has been done by the city of Chicago and other cities along the river in the establishment and construction of sewage-disposal plants, that our fish life is gradually coming back and the commercial fisherman is gradually gaining a foothold again, as well as the fisherman who indulges in fishing for the purposes of recreation and pleasure.

I am in sympathy to a certain extent with the amendment of the Senator from Missouri; but what he proposes should not be done at this particular time.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kentucky for permitting me to make this observation as an important incident to the primary object to the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator from Illinois for his very illuminating contribution to the discussion.

There has been some objection made to the provision that authorizes grants-in-aid and loans. The provision to loan money or even to grant it out of the Treasury is not for the purpose of aiding some corporation or saving it expense; it is not for the purpose of substituting Federal money for local, county, city, or State money; but it is for the purpose of aiding both public corporations and private corporations to do this work in the interest of public health where they themselves cannot do it alone.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is provided for in both measures.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is provided for in both measures, and there is no controversy over that feature, but there has been objection raised. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] suggested a while ago a question that, I think, implied, at least, an objection. This is a measure in behalf of the public; it is a measure to preserve and protect the health and lives of our people and as well to protect and conserve the aquatic life within the streams, as pointed out by the Senator from Illinois [LUCAS].

If it were a bill simply to loan Government money in order to help some private industry or even some city to protect itself against higher taxes or in order that a corporation might declare greater dividends, I would not be in favor of it. But the theory upon which that provision is based is that it is in the public interest. It is a very modest sum, and it will be, of course, determined by the Congress itself from year to year how much money will be appropriated, and that will depend altogether on the number of communities that make application for loans and grants-in-aid.

I agree with the Senator from Illinois that it would be unfair, that it would be a hardship now to impose compulsion when we are just beginning the program and when these conditions have grown up without any violation of law anywhere by anybody. They have grown up like Topsy. Now that we realize the conditions, we certainly ought try voluntary cooperation among the States and with the Federal Government before we authorize the United States district attorneys to go into the Federal courts and bring suit against a city or a county or an industry because of its inability, financially or otherwise, to bring about, without Federal help, a correction of the conditions which are the subject of this proposed legislation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator made any estimate, or have any of the experts made any estimate, that will give us any idea as to the demands that will probably be made upon the Federal Treasury for loans and grants?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think so, Mr. President. The President of the United States recently designated the National Resources Board to make an investigation and survey of the whole pollution situation all over the United States. The estimate is that the ultimate cost of all these projects in the future, over a period of years, may be as much as $2,000,000,000; but, of course, that is over a long period of years. It cannot all be done, I should say, within a period of 10 years, perhaps not in 20 years; but if, over that period, all of the activities were engaged in that would be necessary to purify all the streams in the whole United States, and keep them purified, it would take about $2,000,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. Faced with the offer of the Federal Government to make loans and grants, and faced also with the fact that ultimately the various communities will have to change the present conditions and make this expenditure, is there danger that they will come in with a rush, and that all of them will want the money at once?

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt that, because under the bill the communities have to put up at least two-thirds of the cost themselves. Some communities probably are waiting now to get whatever aid the bill provides, because they themselves have not the money to do the work, and under their constitutional limitations they cannot raise it. Under their borrowing limitations some of them have already reached the peak of what they may borrow.

Mr. NORRIS. This loan and grant provision applies to private individuals and corporations just as it does to municipalities.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true; yes; it does. That is on the theory, as I mentioned a while ago, that the thing to be done is in the interest of the public, and that without this help it would be impossible to do it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DANAHER. In answer to the question of the Senator from Nebraska, I desire to say that the Engineering News Record for February 23, 1939, contains the statement that the additional annual cost of treating mining and industrial wastes, while not known accurately, will entail operating charges which will exceed $225,000,000. That is the additional annual cost, and it has reference to private industries only.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, it is not contemplated that the Federal Government will put up any such sum as that because it can put up only a third of the total cost, and it will put up only what Congress appropriates for that purpose from year to year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I simply want to state for the RECORD, in support of the general idea of regulating and preventing further stream pollution, that the salmon fishermen on the lower Columbia River have described the scenes and the condition of their nets in such a way that if they were generally known I doubt if many persons would care to consume fish that have to go through the polluted streams of our country. Even on a great river such as the Columbia—one of the largest on the continent and in a new territory—conditions are such that the fishermen actually become sick when they draw in their nets.

I am convinced that the Federal Government must be the agency which will eventually bring about a reform in this matter. In our State we found that many of the smaller municipalities waited to see what Portland, the metropolis, would do. Portland, in turn, would say, "Let the up-river towns and cities and communities and mills and factories act first. Why should we, on the lower reaches of the river, take the initial steps in this matter if those above do not first clean up their part of the river?" So it is a continual "buck passing" proposition; and unless the agency of the National Government is invoked and becomes effective, I fear there will be no reform in this matter in our day.

When I reflect on this subject and view our country, I often think of the verse:

> Though every prospect pleases,
> And only man is vile.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, just one other word:

The Senator from Missouri put into the RECORD last week a letter from the Secretary of War urging that the Corps of Engineers would be the proper agency to perform this service. I can understand that. The Secretary of War has the Corps of Engineers under his Department, and naturally is loyal to it, and I do not blame him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to say to the Senator from Kentucky that the reason why I put that letter into the RECORD was not that I did not fully realize the fact just stated by the Senator from Kentucky. Every head of a department naturally desires to have the administration of any additional agency or anything else put under his department, just as the head of the Social Security Board will now wish to have this activity put under the Public Health Service. I put the letter into the RECORD for the reason that the letter arrived after the conclusion of the hearings; and inasmuch as a man by the name of Wolman had appeared at the hearings representing an extraofficial and extralegal activity and said that he was authorized to state that the Bureau of the Budget was opposed to the bill which I introduced, I thought it was worth while to put into the RECORD the fact that the Secretary of War was authorized to say that the Bureau of the Budget was also opposed to the bill of the Senator from Kentucky. I put the letter into the RECORD for the purpose of showing that so far as the Bureau of the Budget is concerned, the Senator from Kentucky and I are on the same footing.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I was about to say is that I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which was put into the hearing, in which he urges that the Bureau of the Public Health Service is the proper agency to administer this proposed law. Of course, at that time the Public Health Service was in the Treasury Department, and I suppose we might check these two Cabinet loyalties against each other.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will yield, since the Public Health Service has been transferred from the Treasury Department to Dr. Altmeyer, in the Social Security Board, I suggest that the fair thing to do would be to ask the Secretary of the Treasury now whether he has had a chance to revise his opinion.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it is sufficiently important to go to that trouble.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Neither do I.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, I do not know whether or not Dr. Altmeyer is going to be the head of this new agency. He has not been appointed, and nobody has said that he will be appointed. I do not know whether or not he will be. There is no use in naming Dr. Altmeyer, even if he is named as the head of this agency, for he will probably know as much about stream pollution as will the Secretary of the Treasury, in whose Department the Bureau of the Public Health Service has been for a hundred years; and both of them together will know as much about it as will the Secretary of War, in whose Department the Corps of Engineers is located.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator's bill still puts heavy responsibilities on the Secretary of the Treasury in the matter of determination. I do not think that provision has been changed in the Senator's bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was not because the Bureau of the Public Health Service was in the Treasury Department but because the Secretary of the Treasury must pass upon these requests for allotments, since the money comes out of his Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All money comes out of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BARKLEY. That would be entirely logical, no matter where this activity is put.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, it would be no more logical than to provide that the Secretary of the Treasury should have the determination of every appropriation. Even the Bureau of the Budget is no longer in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that; but the Secretary of the Treasury was put in the bill in this connection not because the Public Health Service was in that Department but because it was necessary, just as the Secretary of the Treasury is also concerned in the administration of the law creating the R. F. C. The Secretary of the Treasury has to perform certain duties with respect to turning over money to the R. F. C. for the purpose of administering that law.

Mr. President, I wish to include in my remarks the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, found on pages 84, 85, 86, and down to the top of page 87 of the hearings on the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

Hon. JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
Chairman, Committee on Commerce,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Further reference is made to your letter of March 4, 1939, requesting a report on S. 1691, a bill to prevent the pollution of the navigable waters of the United States, and for other purposes.

This bill is the same in principle as bills S. 3958 of the Seventy-fourth Congress and S. 13 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, except that S. 1691 would establish a Division of Water Pollution Control in the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, whereas S. 3958 and S. 13 proposed to make the National Resources Committee the agency responsible for the administration of the act. In addition, S. 1691 would establish an advisory committee composed of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, the Chief of the United States Biological Survey, the Commissioner of Fisheries, and the Chief of the United States Forest Service.

The Treasury Department on February 26, 1936, submitted to the Senate Committee on Commerce a report on S. 3958 which is printed on pages 98–99 of the published hearings on that bill. The Treasury Department likewise submitted a report to the Senate Committee on Commerce on S. 13 under date of March 9, 1937. Both of these reports by the Treasury Department recommended against the enactment of legislation having regulatory features for the reasons which are again stated in subsequent paragraphs of this letter.

Before outlining the views of this Department with particular respect to S. 1691, it is desired to invite the attention of your committee to certain developments in connection with proposed water pollution control legislation during the past several years, which would tend to indicate that the Public Health Service should be considered as the logical agency for administering Federal functions in water-pollution control in addition to the functions which the Public Health Service now has under the provisions of section 1 of the act of August 14, 1912 (37 Stat. 309, U. S. C., title 42, sec 7), and section 3 of the act of February 15, 1893 (27 Stat. 450, U. S. C., title 42, sec. 92). These developments are as follows:

1. On August 27, 1937, the President, when approving the river and harbor bill, issued the following statement:

"In signing the so-called river and harbor bill, I note that provision is made for a pollution survey of the Ohio River by the War Department. Obviously a survey of this nature falls properly under the jurisdiction of the Public Health Service. I am, however, asking the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury to join in the appointment of a committee of three to conduct this survey—an Army engineer, a representative of the Public Health Service, and a non-Government expert on pollution problems."

2. The Seventy-fifth Congress passed a bill, H. R. 2711, providing for the creation of a Division of Water Pollution Control in the Public Health Service, and for other purposes, which did not receive the approval of the President, because it conflicted with the concept of the Budget system. In his memorandum of disapproval, dated June 25, 1938, the President made the following statement:

"I appreciate the importance of the results sought to be accomplished by the legislation, and I fully approve the establishment of a Division of Water Pollution Control in the Public Health Service."

3. The Senate Committee on Commerce in Report No. 1199, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, on bill H. R. 2711, providing for the creation of a Division of Water Pollution Control in the Public Health Service, made the following statement:

"Your committee decided, as the public health is the main object to be considered in connection with this legislation, that the Bureau of Public Health Service is the logical division in which to place the administration of this legislation. This Bureau has been making studies and investigations of this subject for 30 or more years, the records of which are in its files. Also, there is in each State a health agency, and the majority of these agencies have a division of sanitation which is more or less familiar with pollution problems."

4. The President in his message of February 15, 1939, to the Congress, transmitting a report on Water Pollution in the United States (H. Doc. No. 155, 76th Cong., 1st sess.), stated as follows:

"It is my opinion that pending further experimentation with interstate and State-enforcement activities, Federal participation in pollution abatement should take the general form of establishing a central technical agency to promote and coordinate education, research, and enforcement. On the basis of recent experience, it should be supplemented by a system of Federal grants-in-aid and loans organized with due regard for the integrated use and control of water resources and for a balanced Federal program for public works of all types. The time is overdue for the Federal Government to take vigorous leadership along these lines."

5. In the report on Water Pollution in the United States (H. Doc. No. 155, 76th Cong., 1st sess.), prepared at the request of the President by a special advisory committee composed of representative experts from the Departments of War, Treasury, Interior, Agriculture, and Commerce, and from private and State agencies, it is stated that the committee believes that no basic changes in Federal law with reference to Federal regulation of pollution should be made at this time. The committee recommends that legislation based on certain principles be considered as a means for continuing and expanding the rapid progress in pollution abatement which recently has been made. Among these principles are the following:

"An appropriate Federal agency (presumably the United States Public Health Service) should be authorized to study water pollution and its abatement; to stimulate State, municipal, and private studies; to cooperate with States in securing needed State legislation and interstate action; to study the activities and administrative procedures of local and State agencies responsible for pollution abatement; to review and appraise pollution-abatement work for which Federal aid is requested; and to report its findings to the President."

The statement continues:

"The Treasury Department considers the Public Health Service to be the proper and logical agency for exercising the Federal functions in water-pollution control to the extent that the Congress may deem it appropriate to authorize at this time. With this in mind, the views of the Treasury Department on S. 1691 are as follows:

"The proposed legislation would direct the Division of Water Pollution Control in the Army Engineer Corps to cooperate with agencies of the several States authorized or designated by State law to deal with water pollution with a view to (1) coordinating the State activities relating to the prevention and abatement of water pollution, (2) encouraging the enactment of uniform State laws relating to water pollution, (3) encouraging compacts between the several States for the prevention and abatement of water pollution, and (4) making studies, surveys, and experiments to determine the need for, and to devise methods for carrying out preventive and corrective measures relating to water pollution in the several States. The division would be authorized to make available to State agencies the results of studies, surveys, and experiments conducted by it and by other public and private agencies, to collect and disseminate information, to make loans or grants, or both, to States and political subdivisions, and to make loans to persons or corporations for the construction, enlargement, or improvement of sewage-disposal plants and plants for the treatment of trade wastes. The division would be directed to classify the navigable waters of the continental United States into sanitary water districts and to fix standards of purity in each district for the navigable waters. There would be a board in each district, which would include representatives of the several State agencies concerned, the duties of which board would be to prevent the pollution of waters within the district by voluntary methods insofar as practicable, to investigate the desirability of making loans or grants in such district, to recommend the making of such loans or grants and to institute proceedings for the prevention and abatement of water pollution.

"The legislation proposed would declare the discharge or deposit, directly or indirectly, of any waste (with certain exceptions) of other substance into any of the navigable waters of the United States, in violation of regulations promulgated by the division, if such waste or other substance is or may be injurious to human health or any form of life, or impairs the utility of such waters for navigation purposes, to be against the public policy of the United States and to be a public and common nuisance. An action to prevent or abate any such nuisance could be brought in the name of the United States by any United States attorney, and it would be the duty of such attorney to bring such an action when requested to do so by the division or the sanitary water district board."

The Treasury Department is fully cognizant of the magnitude and urgency of the water-pollution problem in the United States, of the importance of this problem in its relation to the various uses of water and in relation to public health, and of the inability of States and local authorities to control the pollution of interstate waters without cooperation and assistance from a central coordinating agency. This office would be in sympathy with any legally sound or practical program for abating present and preventing future pollution of the waters of the United States, where such pollution is injurious to the public health and impairs the legitimate use of water, and when the application of preventive and remedial measures is economically justifiable. Furthermore, it is the view of this Department that any special legislation on this subject should provide for more active cooperation with State authorities by the Federal Government; but it is believed that enforcement of actual control measures should be reserved to the States.

Assuming that so broad an extension of Federal jurisdiction as is proposed in S. 1691 would be constitutional, this Department feels, nevertheless, that such legislation would be unwise. It is believed that, if regulations under the proposed act were to attempt to deal with pollution of water in local communities throughout the Nation, strong resentment would be aroused. The Treasury Department in dealing with public-health matters, through the Public Health Service, has endeavored to avoid federalization of public-health administration within the States and has directed its efforts toward improvement of health conditions in this country chiefly by encouraging and assisting State and local authorities in the development of their own laws, regulations, and facilities for protection of the public health. This policy has brought about the establishment of a cordial relationship between the Federal Government and the States which has made it possible for the Public Health Service to contribute in large measure to protection of the health of the citizens throughout the Nation. It would be unfortunate if this relationship should be impaired.

The Treasury Department favors the features of the bill which provide for interstate compacts, financial assistance to States and local communities, and assistance from the Federal Government in studies of stream-pollution problems. As before stated, it believes, however, that the Public Health Service would be most logically the agency of choice for carrying out such functions so far as the Federal Government might be concerned.

The Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that S. 1691 in its present form would not be in accord with the program of the President.

Very truly yours,

———— ————,

Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have here a list. I desire to say that so far as the opinion of these two Cabinet officers is concerned, there is a higher authority even than they—the President of the United States, who appointed this Commission and asked it to make a survey, and who, at this session of Congress, sent their report here recommending legislation of this type, not exactly in terms as provided in my bill, but recommending the voluntary method of undertaking to approach the subject. With his approval he sent the report here, and advocated legislation of the type included in the bill which I have introduced, and which is now under consideration.

I have here a list of organizations all over the United States, including practically all the State health departments, which have endorsed the so-called Barkley bill. I shall not read them all, but the list contains the name of the health department of practically every State in the Union.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, the Senator must be familiar with the fact that the health department of practically every State in the Union is the recipient of funds which are being doled out to it partly in the discretion of the head of the Public Health Service. The Chief of the Public Health Service, a very excellent man, a very able Surgeon General, has not only claimed but has exercised a good deal of discretion in the administration of the various health services in the particular States, to the extent that in some cases he has written letters to the Governors of the States telling them whom or what sort of men they should appoint as the heads of the public-health services, under the threat of withholding Federal funds. So when the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service produces letters from the chiefs of the State health services, to whom he is doling out funds day after day and week after week and month after month, it is not very much more impressive than if he were to produce letters from the Assistant Surgeon General, and various bureau chiefs of the Public Health Service.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is a pretty serious indictment of these men, who are appointed as the heads of the health services in the various States, to state that they are endorsing the pending bill because the Public Health Service of the United States is doling out money to them. I do not think there is any evidence, certainly there is none in the hearings, that the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service has sent out letters threatening the State health authorities because of their attitude on this bill. I do not think the Senator could have meant that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I meant exactly what I said. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service holds meetings in Washington from time to time of the heads of the health services of the various States. He held one last week. They come here at public expense and get together and hold meetings on various matters of public importance. When the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service actually controls the allocation of Federal funds to the States, it is perfectly obvious that he will have a great deal of influence, and, being on friendly terms with these officials, can naturally procure letters from them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the conferences of the public-health authorities of the States held from time to time are commendable.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did not say they were not commendable, but I say that the relationship between the Public Health Service and these State officials makes it inevitable that they would favor that agency against such an agency as the Corps of Army Engineers, with whom they have no particular contact.

Mr. BARKLEY. The American Public Health Association certainly is not receiving any doles from the Public Health Service. The American Society of Civil Engineers is not the object of any dole from the Public Health Service, or from anyone else. The American Water Works Association is not. The Camp Fire Club of America is not receiving any help from the Public Health Service. The Chamber of Commerce of the United States is not receiving any help from the Public Health Service, or, so far as I know, from the Federal Government. The board of health of the city of Cincinnati is not, so far as I know, receiving any assistance from the Public Health Service. The chamber of commerce of the city of Cincinnati is not receiving any help from the Public Health Service. I might include the Conference of State Sanitary Engineers, the Construction League of the United States, the Dayton Business and Civic Association, of Dayton, Ohio, and many others. While I shall not read the whole list, I shall ask that I be permitted to insert the list in the RECORD. There are 71, some of which are public-health authorities, some of which are commercial organizations, chambers of commerce, civic organizations of all sorts, which have gone on record endorsing the type of legislation provided in the bill now under consideration.

I do not wish to take any further time, but I sincerely trust that the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky that the list he has presented be inserted in the RECORD?

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky one question for information. Does the reorganization order which has been sent to the Congress by the President take from the Surgeon General or from the Public Health Service the status which it now occupies or which they occupy, so that the Surgeon General and the Public Health Service would be superseded in all of the activities they now perform by Mr. Altmeyer's organization?

Mr. BARKLEY. No. The President's order merely transfers the Public Health Service out of the Treasury into the new group, but it does not affect its functions. It does not dissipate it, it does not disorganize it. It is just lifted up and taken into this new organization, without interference with its functions or duties. Of course, there will be an over-all head, in the person of an administrator of the new Federal Security Agency, as I believe it is to be called, and in a sense I suppose it might be considered that his duties as the head of the old group would be somewhat analogous to the duties of the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to this particular bureau when it was in the Treasury. But there is no disintegration at all of the functions and duties of the Public Health Service.

Mr. KING. That is what I desired to know, because there is considerable confidence in the Surgeon General, and many believe that it would be unwise to disorganize the public-health organization.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator entirely. In my opinion the Public Health Service is one of the outstanding agencies of the Federal Government, and has rendered conspicuous service in every field it has attempted to occupy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to join in that opinion of the Public Health Service, because I very strongly entertain that opinion. Of nearly all the activities of the Public Health Service I have been a very great admirer, and am very glad to cooperate in all those activities.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to say a few words in support of the bill of the Senator from Kentucky, in opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. As I see the matter, there are two main points involved. One is whether the administration is to be given to the Army engineers or to the Public Health Service.

I began to take an interest in this matter nearly 4 years ago at the place where the idea of the bill, no doubt, originated, namely, the city of Cincinnati. We consulted with the Army engineers and with officers of the Public Health Service. We discussed for some time the question as to which should have jurisdiction over the activity, and I am certain that the Army engineers with whom I talked had no particular desire for this jurisdiction. Only after long consideration did we decide that we should place it in the Public Health Service, because, in the first place, sanitary engineering is a special and technical study, and the Army engineers are not trained in that particular study. The Army engineers are now making a survey, which was referred to on Thursday, but I understand that no single Army engineer is actually detailed to any active work in the survey. On the other hand, the Public Health Service has a great many sanitary engineers, and they are peculiarly fitted to consider the problems which arise in this connection.

The Public Health engineers have had a long and very friendly relationship with the health departments of the various States. The State health officials have been doing excellent work. The pending bill, no matter in what form it may be passed, will be no more than a supplemental measure. A large number of sewage-disposal plants have been built. Nearly all the States have laws on the subject. Constant and steady work has been done in closing abandoned mines. I do not know how many thousands have already been closed. We do not want to do anything except to supplement the work that is being done and give some direction and assistance. For that purpose all the public-health services with whom I have conferred are extremely anxious that this matter be in the hands of the Public Health Service rather than in the hands of the Army engineers, who are not schooled in these problems, and who have no direct experience in building the kind of plants needed.

Everyone agrees that the Public Health Service is an exceedingly competent body. The difference between the bill of the Senator from Kentucky and the substitute is that the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri contains a provision under which the flowing of sewage into any navigable stream, and possibly into waters above any navigable stream, may be enjoined. Such an injunction process seems to me impossible. For instance, consider the city of Cincinnati. It would cost the city of Cincinnati approximately $20,000,000 to build a proper sewage disposal plant. It would be necessary to build an intercepter sewer 20 miles long along the Ohio River, and a very considerable number of additional plants. Of course, the difficulty is that even if that were done, it would not affect the city of Cincinnati particularly. Today in spite of having a fine filtration plant our water is polluted. Our filtration plant has almost reached its capacity to purify the water of the river polluted by cities and plants up the river above Cincinnati, many of them in the State of Kentucky. In addition, there are two large cities immediately opposite Cincinnati in the State of Kentucky.

Mr. President, whenever it is urged that we in Cincinnati build a sewage disposal plant, and spend $20,000,000 to build it, there is immediate opposition on the ground that while that would be all very well, yet we ourselves would not derive any good from building it, and that it is the people below, in other States, who are interested in our building a sewage disposal plant.

Under the proposed substitute a Federal court may be asked to issue an injunction saying, "You must stop pouring sewage into the river," but how is such an injunction to be enforced? Would the city officials of Cincinnati be put in jail? It cannot be done. Incidentally, since it cannot be done in a large number of places, since it is admitted that it is going to take 20 years at least to eliminate all the serious pollution from the rivers, who is going to decide against whom an injunction suit shall be brought, and against whom such a suit shall not be brought?

The amendment of the Senator from Missouri places in someone the arbitrary power to single out a particular city or plant and seek to obtain an injunction against it. In other words, the Congress is not passing a law which makes no discrimination, but under the amendment it gives to some administrative officer the power to discriminate against one State and against one locality. So, I feel very strongly that we should not pass a bill which provides for that injunctive process and places in the hands of an administrative officer the power of deciding against whom to proceed.

It seems to me that if we want to carry out this plan we have to do it on a cooperative basis, we have to plan gradually; we have to encourage people to construct the plants necessary to eliminate pollution.

I do not see why there should be any fear of a "grab bag," because, as I have said, if it will cost us in Cincinnati $20,000,000 to build a sewage disposal plant, we are not going to spend $15,000,000 simply because by doing that we might get $5,000,000 from the Federal Government. The cost to the locality would be so great that I see no danger whatsoever that it would undertake the expense unless the building of the disposal plant were absolutely necessary. The providing of Federal money is merely an encouragement to the city to build such a plant, instead of using the money for some other construction which will benefit us much more than the elimination of sewage below Cincinnati by the construction of a sewage-disposal plant.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, it is quite evident from the remarks of the Senator from Ohio that he has never read the substitute amendment, because his own speech answers itself. He speaks of the necessity of the city of Cincinnati being relieved of its present condition, and then states in the same breath that Cincinnati is not willing to take the responsibility and do the things necessary to contribute its part to the elimination of the condition about which he complains.

The purpose of the proposed substitute is not to allow any administrative official to play favorites, to make selections between municipalities, or sections, or cities, or corporations, or States. The purpose is to lay down a rule according to principles set forth in the measure itself, which declares it to be a violation of public policy to permit either a municipality, or an individual, or a corporation to contaminate the waters of streams of the United States. This measure lays down in section 9 various theories upon which this public policy is set up. Section 9 provides:

SEC. 9. Pursuant to the powers of the United States to regulate interstate commerce and navigation; to extend, change, and amend the admiralty and maritime law; to give due effect to the migratory bird treaties; and to protect the fisheries, including the anadromous fish, Congress hereby declares the discharge or deposit, directly or indirectly, of any waste, except the normal discharge of sewage from toilets of boats or from the galley sink drains or the normal amount of oil that may be discharged from the exhaust pipe of a motorboat, or other substance, whether in a solid, gaseous, or liquid state, into any of the navigable waters of the United States, in violation of regulations promulgated by the Division, if such waste or other substance is or may be injurious to human health or to any form of life, including aquatic life, or to migratory birds as defined in the Migratory Bird Treaty of August 16, 1916, and , 1937, or impairs in any manner the utility of such waters for navigation purposes, to be against the public policy of the United States and to be a public and common nuisance.

Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio says that Cincinnati cannot be expected to refrain from dumping its raw sewage into the Ohio River simply because it will be a benefit to municipalities in the States lower down the river. Cities on the Ohio River above Cincinnati undoubtedly may take the same position.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. What would the Senator do? Would he bring an injunction suit against the city of Cincinnati if his measure were enacted into law? How would he carry it out?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator have any doubt that the United States Government can maintain an injunction suit against the city of Cincinnati?

Mr. TAFT. How would the order of the injunction be enforced? The city of Cincinnati has a debt limit. It has no possibility of borrowing $20,000,000. There are a thousand sewers running into the river today. How, by injunction, could the city of Cincinnati be made to do anything, and what would happen if the city should not obey the injunction?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator from Ohio takes the position that the city of Cincinnati would disobey the injunctive process of a court of competent jurisdiction in a proceeding such as was brought against the city of Chicago in the case of the Chicago Drainage Canal, that is a matter which will have to be threshed out in the courts. I personally do not have any doubt that the authority of the United States Government over navigable streams can be maintained by injunctive process.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me finish my answer to the argument made a moment ago by the Senator from Ohio, and then I shall yield.

The Senator from Ohio said the city of Cincinnati cannot be expected to spend the money necessary to enable it to refrain from dumping the raw sewage into the Ohio River simply because it will benefit the municipalities of the States lower down. The municipalities of the States higher up will undoubtedly take the same position.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I did not say that. I said the incentive not to do it is very strong, and I do not see how the doing of it can be forced. Therefore I am in favor of offering all cities—of which Cincinnati is only an example; Pittsburgh is larger and worse from the standpoint of pollution below the city—some assistance in the matter of sewage disposal, but not to proceed by an injunction process which cannot be enforced by any means of which I know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am offering assistance to the cities, and it is provided for in the substitute amendment I have offered. But I say that there is no sense or justification in the United States Government spending its money, and then in the final analysis having no control whatever over the situation, and no means whatever of enforcing the public policy declared by the law. In other words, Mr. President, suppose the city of Cincinnati spent the $20,000,000 that is necessary—and I mention that amount merely because it was an illustration used by the Senator from Ohio—to install an efficient sewage disposal system; suppose the city of Pittsburgh also put in an efficient sewage disposal system, and then suppose a number of other towns and cities on the Ohio River refused to install such a system. The city of Cincinnati and the city of Pittsburgh, after all their expenditures, would remain in just as bad a position as they had previously been.

Suppose, for instance, that the city of Chicago discontinued its dumping of pollution into the Illinois River, which flows into the Mississippi River, and then that my own city of St. Louis refused to do anything about the situation there, and persisted in dumping raw sewage and deleterious products from our manufacturing plants into the Mississippi River, there is nothing on earth in the bill of the Senator from Kentucky to prevent us from doing it. Or suppose the city of Chicago, the city of St. Louis, the city of Kansas City, the city of St. Paul, and the city of Minneapolis were willing to cooperate and put in efficient methods to prevent the pollution of the streams, and Paducah, the city of the Senator from Kentucky, and Cincinnati, the city of the Senator from Ohio, and various other cities up and down the Ohio River, or the Missouri River, or the upper Mississippi River persisted in dumping pollution into the streams, there would be nothing on earth in the bill of the Senator from Kentucky to prevent them from doing it. So we would have spent our money, we would have assumed an obligation as a Federal Government, without any method on earth of insuring any results whatever.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, I suggest to the Senator that there is no city which is deliberately dumping waste matter into the streams and polluting them. That is a condition which has grown up, for which they have not been able to find a remedy.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree with the Senator from Kentucky. That is why I have included a saving clause in the proposed substitute to permit a postponement of the operation of the act.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose the Federal Government, through the district attorney's office, brings a lawsuit to enjoin the city of Paducah, or the city of Cincinnati, or the city of St. Louis, or any other city; that injunction is not only to prevent them from doing something, but it is an effort to compel them to do something else. Suppose there is a limitation of debt, as there is in many cities; as there is in my own city, and, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] says there is in his city. The amount which the city may borrow is limited. Suppose the constitution limits the amount of taxes which may be levied, and the chief of engineers notifies the city that it must abate a nuisance within a certain time. It does not do so, and the chief of engineers notifies the district attorney, who brings a lawsuit and obtains an injunction. The injunction cannot raise the money. The Federal Government cannot raise the money. The only authority in the city which can raise the money is the city council, or the board of commissioners, whichever it may be. If they cannot do it under the law, what is going to happen? Shall we bring the municipal authorities into court and punish them for violating an injunction, when the law of their own State and their own city prohibits them from levying the necessary taxes, or incurring the necessary indebtedness? How shall we enforce the law?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. An injunction would not affirmatively direct the municipal authorities to do anything. It would direct them to cease polluting the streams.

Mr. BARKLEY. That means that it would direct them to abate the nuisance; and in order to abate the nuisance they would have to spend hundreds of thousands or even millions of dollars in order to install new plants. If they should not do so, and thereby should not abate the nuisance, they would be guilty of violating the injunction, and could be cited for contempt of court, for violating an injunction which it would be impossible for them to obey.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose some city had built an obstruction in the Mississippi River at some point, has the Senator any doubt that the United States Government could go into court and obtain an injunction compelling the city to remove the obstruction?

Mr. BARKLEY. In the first place, the city has no authority to build an obstruction without the consent of Congress, either through legislation or through the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator contend that after Congress makes it unlawful to discharge sewage or chemical byproducts, or anything else, into a stream, a city has authority to do so?

Mr. BARKLEY. If any city or individual citizen of the United States should, without the consent of Congress, build in a navigable river something which obstructed navigation, of course the city or individual could be compelled to remove it, or be punished. The consent of Congress is usually given in legislation, or it is given in general terms through the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The two situations are precisely the same.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not at all. In the case of stream pollution, conditions have existed for years. They have grown up without any violation of law. No violation of law exists in any such situation. The question is quite different.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I do not agree with the statement that if the dumping of sewage is eliminated in only one place the money is thrown away. It is not.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I agree with that statement.

Mr. TAFT. The pollution of the rivers of the country can never be controlled to the extent that the people can safely drink the water from those rivers. We never shall get to the point where there will be no danger of typhoid fever. However, every time a large pollution of a river is eliminated, the pressure on the purifying plants is relieved, and we come closer and closer to a condition under which fish can live. We bring about an improvement. We do not throw away the money in any event.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Of course, that is true; but it is only a matter of degree. If the pollution which Chicago puts into the Mississippi River, let us say, is removed, and St. Louis, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Minneapolis, and St. Paul continue to pollute the river, of course, it would be erroneous to say that elimination of the sewage from Chicago is entirely a waste of money. However, such improvement would be only a minor palliative unless general cooperation on that river were obtained. Therefore, Mr. President, I hope it never will be necessary to use the stringent enforcement provisions of the substitute. I believe the inclusion of the provision in the proposed substitute would provide a tremendous incentive for municipalities, industrial concerns, mining corporations, and individuals all over the country to cooperate in compliance with the law. However, I also believe that the inclusion of a club, or some residuary power in the controlling authority, is necessary to bring about that condition, and to eliminate the small number of what are called "chiselers" who do not desire to conform to the law.

I heard the testimony of Colonel Lee, of the Corps of Engineers, before the Committee on Commerce. He has had perhaps more successful experience than anyone else in any branch of the Government service in eradicating conditions of the sort described. He testified that, with regard to the Delaware River, the Schuylkill River, and later with regard to the Willamette River, he had found most municipalities and industrial concerns willing to cooperate; but he said that the fact that he was able to call the attention of those who were reluctant to cooperate to the provisions of the Rivers and Harbors Act of 1889 and the provisions of the Oil Pollution Act of 1914—both of which were, in the operation which he was conducting, very shadowy authority for taking offenders into court—had brought about cooperation in many instances in which it would otherwise have been impossible to bring it about.

Therefore, Mr. President, I say that if the Federal Government is to assume control of the subject as a Federal responsibility, and if we are to spend the money, we ought to have authority somewhere to compel those who do not wish to cooperate with the great majority of the people who are willing to cooperate to come in and do their part.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention to one or two other features of the proposed substitute.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOBEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Do both the original bill and the proposed substitute contain provisions under which the Government can force compliance?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No.

Mr. NORRIS. That statement applies only to the substitute amendment?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It applies only to the substitute amendment. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that the point he mentions is the only essential difference between the two measures. There are one or two minor differences which I intend to point out in just a moment.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that under the provisions of the substitute amendment a district board is set up in each sanitary district which is to be established by the division having to do with watersheds. The board is to contain representatives of various State and local agencies. The substitute provides for—

> At least one representative from State health departments or other State agencies charged with control of pollution, State fish and game agencies, State departments of agriculture and State departments of labor embraced within the district, and one representative of industry and one representative of municipalities on the board.

The substitute further provides that—

> Wherever any two or more States have heretofore or may hereafter enter into any compact for the prevention or abatement of stream pollution and providing an agency to enforce the provisions of the compact, said agency shall be designated the district board of that particular watershed.

I understand that such action has already been taken in one instance. Where several States in the same watershed have entered into an interstate compact and set up an interstate board in that watershed or that district for the control of the situation, the interstate board appointed by the various States, subject to the general provisions of the Federal division, are to constitute the district board.

The substitute provides further:

> (b) It shall be the duty of each district board:
> 1. To prevent by voluntary methods insofar as practicable the pollution of waters within the district;
> 2. To investigate the desirability of making loans or grants in such districts for the construction of sewage-disposal plants and works for the treatment of trade and municipal wastes and to recommend the making of such loans or grants to the division; and
> 3. To institute proceedings for the prevention and abatement of water pollution in such district: Provided—

I think this is a very important proviso—

> Provided, That where a duly constituted State agency or interstate compact with authority to enforce the provisions of this act is in existence, that action by the district board will be taken only after such existing authorities have been given an opportunity to act and, after due notice, have failed to do so.

So, Mr. President, in the substitute there is every incentive for cooperation between the Federal Government and the States, municipalities, and private agencies. The substitute contains every such incentive which is contained in the original bill, with some additional machinery set up in the substitute to insure cooperation by the inclusion of representatives of various State and local authorities on the district board.

Let me say further, Mr. President, that while I prefer the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army as the administrative authority, because of their experience, I do not regard that point as an essential difference between the two measures. I should gladly take the Public Health Service as the administrative agency if the Public Health Service had not declared itself to be not in sympathy with the provisions of the substitute with regard to enforcement.

Mr. President, the essential difference between the two measures is in the enforcement provision contained in the substitute, which is not contained in the original bill. In my opinion it would be better for no bill at all to pass than for a bill to pass bearing the semblance of authority to clean up the situation, with no actual authority to do so. It would be better to wait until the situation can be further canvassed, and a bill can be passed containing sufficient authority in the Federal agency set up to bring about the desired reforms, than to have a bill passed which would hold out a hope which could not be realized under its terms.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. MILLER. What was the modification the Senator proposed to his amendment in the nature of a substitute which was offered and stated this morning? I should like to ask a question about it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was to postpone the enforcement provisions for 3 years.

Mr. MILLER. That is, as to new construction?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As to anything except new pollution. As to any existing pollution it would postpone the operation of the enforcement section for 3 years.

Mr. MILLER. That is, the injunction section would be postponed 3 years in its application to existing pollution?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is correct. The other amendment or modification provides that if, as happens to be in some cases possible, there is no method known at the present time of disposing of mine waste or some other commercial byproduct, the operation shall be postponed, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, for 5 additional years.

Mr. MILLER. There is another provision in the proposed substitute which provides for grants not to exceed 50 percent of the cost, is there not?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER. As I understand, in the original bill grants are not to exceed one-third. Is that correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, yes; that is true. The grants cannot exceed one-third, or 33⅓ percent.

Mr. MILLER. That is under the original bill, while under the substitute they may not exceed 50 percent?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that there is no particular dispute on that point, because I will accept a limitation of one-third or any other limitation that may be agreed upon, for I do not regard the specific percentage to be contributed under the loan-grant system to be the material element in difference, and I would be very glad, indeed, to agree to any reasonable limitation as to the amount of the Federal contribution.

Mr. MILLER. I do not agree with the Senator. In the event his amendment in the nature of a substitute should be adopted, I think that 50-percent grants should be permitted, because the Senator has in mind making an effective antipollution measure.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is correct, and that is the reason for raising the limitation, but I do not regard that as the essential point of difference between the bill and the proposed substitute.

Mr. MILLER. From my standpoint, I think it is a point of difference.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under the original bill the 33⅓-percent limitation applies only to grants; it does not take into consideration the amount that may be loaned either to a corporation or to a municipality; so the two together might equal 50 percent.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to say a very brief word about this proposed legislation. In the first instance, I must confess that I have paid very little attention to the testimony taken at the present session of the Congress. I did, however, give considerable study to the problem when it was before the Senate in the last Congress, and I served on the committee of conference between the two Houses on the measure which was then passed.

Mr. President, if the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] should be adopted, I would still vote for the bill, for I want to see some legislation enacted on the subject at this time; but it is my deliberate judgment that the so-called Clark substitute is not the wise course for us now to take. I feel that the enactment of the Barkley bill would be a forward step which would make for the accomplishment of desirable results in the future.

The essential difference—and I agree with the Senator from Missouri in this respect—or the difference which seems to me to be essential between the bill and the substitute is in the inclusion in the Clark substitute of what I call the punitive provisions, provisions for use of the injunctive process. Those provisions are not in the Barkley bill. The Barkley bill provides for a definite scheme of cooperative effort between the Federal Government and the several States and municipalities in an endeavor to bring about a betterment of conditions.

I think, Mr. President, we all realize that something must be done to eradicate stream pollution. We cannot allow the conditions of past years to continue. Those conditions have destroyed fish life; they have caused infinite harm to bird life, and have brought a threat to the health of our people. I sometimes think however, that, while we accept all that to be true, we do not appreciate the complexity and gravity of the problem which is presented.

Something has been said here this morning about the cost of the correction of the evils of stream pollution. I remember that in the hearings during the last Congress some estimates were submitted of the cost of taking care of the municipal sewage of the country. The figures were that in towns of over 2,500 population in the United States there is an aggregate population of something over 68,000,000, and the estimated cost of disposal of municipal sewage ran from $5 per capita to $100 per capita. It was calculated that, taking an average of only $25 per capita, the cost of the disposition of what is called municipal sewage would amount to more than $1,750,000,000. There were no estimates, so far as my knowledge goes, of the cost of disposing of or avoiding industrial waste, which constitutes almost as great an evil as municipal sewage. It is impossible to estimate the cost of caring for industrial waste, because we do not know how to care for industrial waste of many kinds. The pulp and paper manufacturers in my State tell me that the pulp and paper industry has spent more than $2,000,000 in research in an endeavor to find a way to keep from the streams industrial waste that flows from pulp and paper plants; but they further tell me that up to this time the chemical research of the country has found no way to keep from our streams and to render innocuous the liquid waste which comes from these particular industrial plants. So, at the moment, if the injunctive process is made possible, such plants scattered along the streams of my State must either move from their present sites or must cease to operate as they have operated in the past and as only they know how to operate.

Waste does not enter the streams alone from what we call industrial plants. It comes from agricultural sources as well as from the mills that line the banks of the streams of the eastern seaboard. I listened last night to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] speak on the cheese and dairy industry of his State. One of the sources of pollution in many of the States is the milk and the sugar and the fat which come from the butter and cheese factories scattered all over the United States. Waste comes from canneries; waste enters our streams from the beet-sugar plants; it comes from the breweries; it comes from a great many sources that ordinarily we do not regard as industrial plants, as we commonly use that term, but it is waste of agricultural origin.

As I have thought about the situation it seems to me that we ought to take the initial step proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. We ought first to undertake the cooperative effort he proposes to solve the problem and to find the means of eliminating wastage. Then we ought to take those steps which are available to us to make effective the known methods.

I myself rather shrink from writing into the law the provision of the substitute offered by the Senator from Missouri which makes it a public nuisance to pour into a stream something that a board here in Washington says is or may be deleterious, and to subject a person to penalties because of violation of such an intangible and indefinite provision, something so difficult of understanding.

Personally, I am quite content to make the beginning proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. I think, after a short experience under the terms of his bill, we may know whether or not we are making progress, and if it appears to our satisfaction that cooperative methods involving research and endeavor by all concerned to eliminate this wastage are not effective, then it will be the time to write into the law the teeth, the punitive provisions, which are proposed by the Senator from Missouri; but in the first instance I much prefer the approach suggested by the bill pending before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much impressed by what the Senator from Maine says, because I know he possesses much more knowledge on this subject than do I; but regardless of the knowledge we possess, we all, I think, are equally interested in this proposed legislation. I think it is very important. I dislike to delay, if I can avoid delaying, anything that affects directly the health of the people generally and of the aquatic life in the streams. I confess that I was very much impressed by the provision in the so-called Clark substitute which the Senator from Maine has called the punitive provision. The Senator's remarks have caused me to doubt the wisdom of that provision.

When we find an evil which is admitted to exist generally over the country, which affects the public health, and one which has come about gradually, innocently I will say—in the beginning, anyway—and we undertake to remove it or prevent it by a law that has nothing punitive in it, is there not great doubt as to the effectiveness of the law? And if we provide in the law for some punitive measure, even thought we do not expect always to enforce such a provision, will it not be a great incentive to municipalities, corporations, or individuals who are polluting streams to go further and do more toward complying with the law than they would do if they knew there was no way to punish them for evasion of the law? After all, is it not a sort of a policeman around the corner?

Mr. WHITE. The Senator's question is a difficult one for me to answer, even to my own satisfaction. There is, of course, great force in what he says. It may be that if we rely on these cooperative efforts we shall accomplish little or nothing. It may be that immediately we should accomplish more by the punitive methods, as I call them, incorporated in the Clark substitute; but although the Barkley bill does not have punitive provisions, it at least has persuasive provisions in the authority to the Federal Government to make contributions to the cost of working out the elimination of waste. Personally, I think that authority will be tremendously helpful. I think it will stimulate research. I think it will stimulate desire. I think it will be a warning to those who are guilty of stream pollution that they must, with greater diligence than in the past, give their thought and their efforts to the elimination of waste.

I always come back to my belief that if this course of action does not prove successful, if it does not meet our reasonable expectations, then we may apply punitive provisions, and perhaps even more drastic provisions than those contained in the Clark substitute.

That is the way the matter rests in my mind. Whether or not I am right about it is still a matter of some question to me; but I believe that is the wise approach. I should like to see this beginning made, and I should like to see it made under the proposals of the Barkley bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute, as modified, proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment in the nature of a substitute as modified was rejected.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk, and I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 6, on page 5, line 5, after the words "to be", it is proposed to strike out the remainder of the section and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

The perpetrator of a common nuisance against whom proceedings for the abatement of such nuisance shall be brought in the name of the United States of America by the United States attorney for the district in which such nuisance shall exist and the courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such actions and to make appropriate orders for the abatement of any such nuisance.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, while I spoke a few days ago in opposition to the grants-in-aid and loans provision of the pending bill, and the Senate rejected the amendment which I then offered, I feel that the debate this morning has elicited one other line of approach which ought very properly to be considered.

Section 6 of the bill contains a provision for aid to any person who is now discharging or who is building works which will discharge polluted matter into the tributaries of streams and into our navigable waters. We provide for grants-in-aid to manufacturers, or industrialists of whatever character, disregarding entirely the worth-while, reputable industrialist who has spent millions of dollars to equip his plant, and perhaps millions of dollars in the industry generally, to eliminate waste.

It seems that the "chiseler," a term I heard one of the Senators apply to this other type, before he builds a mill at all can say that he wants a loan or grant-in-aid to eliminate pollution. I submit that if anyone is polluting or is about to pollute water within a State, the State should properly compel the offender to conform to the intendment of the bill, and if the State does not do so, then the Federal Government ought to have power to act.

Insofar as municipalities are concerned, the amendment would not be needed, for I believe that there is adequate jurisdiction in the courts at the present time to entertain actions against municipalities. It can be done. For instance, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, action can be taken by the State of Ohio against the city of Cincinnati. It can be taken by the State of Kentucky against the State of Pennsylvania. Such an action was brought in the United States Supreme Court by the State of New York against the State of New Jersey, and out of it there came an order for the construction of an intercepting sewer. So, it is not necessary to have this type of enforcement provision with reference to municipalities. But it is certainly needed with reference to individuals, and I believe that section 6 as written would extend a principle which the Senate should not approve, for once we grant that this is a Federal function at all, if we go further and grant that there is a need, there is no reason why we should stop at contributing one-third of the cost of eliminating future pollution. Once we have established the principle of Federal contribution we cannot stop at a third; we have to go all the way. So, it seems to me that the very principle to which I am calling attention is the principle involved in section 6 of the bill. As drawn, it permits Federal grants-in-aid to manufacturers and industrialists who from now on intend to pollute our streams and our waters in violation of the purpose sought to be achieved.

It seems to me that if we strike from section 6 the language which begins on line 5, page 5, after the words "to be", to the end of the section, and insert in lieu thereof a declaration that pollution shall constitute a common nuisance, and that the United States district courts shall have power to enforce compliance with the law, we will have taken a long step toward reaching the individual polluter, and bringing the principle in line with what is sought by the Senator from Missouri, and at the same time save the salutary and worthy features of the bill as offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

I respectfully ask that the Senator from Kentucky discuss that point if he will.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, sections 5 and 6 of the bill are the two sections which provide for loans and grants-in-aid. Section 5 provides that any municipality or other public body which is discharging untreated or inadequately treated sewage or waste into the navigable streams or streams contributary thereto is eligible for the loans and grants.

Section 6 makes the same provision with respect to private corporations or persons or industries. It proceeds in almost the same language, and makes them eligible for the loans and grants-in-aid, as I stated a few days ago and reiterated today, on the theory that these grants-in-aid and loans will help private industries to clean up conditions in the public interest.

The Senator's amendment would make them ineligible for loans or grants, and make them guilty as perpetrators of a common nuisance. They could not apply for help, under the Senator's amendment, even though, with a little help, they were willing to go ahead and work out their local situations. The Senator's amendment would withdraw even the eligibility the bill would grant them for this assistance, which we all want to give, if the public is to be protected. Instead of making them eligible for loans and grants, it would make them eligible for prosecution and the issuance of injunctions against them as perpetrators of common nuisances. They could not even ask for help. Under the Senator's amendment, they would be made guilty if they were discharging prohibited sewage into the waters. In my judgment, that would destroy the effect of the provisions of the bill. The bill undertakes to extend assistance to concerns which are polluting waters, whether innocently or not. I think all of them are innocent; that is, they started in the construction and operation of their plants without any intention of polluting the water, but it has turned out that some of them are guilty of discharging into the streams matter which pollutes the water.

Many of them are not themselves able, out of their own funds, without credit or without assistance, to correct the evils which have come about. The Senator would make them guilty as perpetrators of a common nuisance immediately, regardless of their intention, regardless of the situation, and would withdraw from them any help which would enable them to clear up the situation themselves, but it would be necessary immediately to proceed against them as perpetrators of a common nuisance.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I asked the distinguished Senator from Kentucky an hour or so ago whether or not, if an individual were a water polluter, an action to abate the nuisance would lie in the State court, to which naturally his answer was in the affirmative. The law does today permit and admit of the State taking action to protect the individual State against pollution of waters. Now to permit a man who contemplates the building of a mill, or a factory, or an industry, involving the discharge of waste of some sort, to gain an advantage, a contribution of one-third, if you will, or an amount up to a one-third, in order to keep him from polluting water, when he knows he is going to pollute it, seems to me the extension of a principle far beyond anything we have ever undertaken.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Federal Government does not have to enact a law in order to empower a State to sue for an injunction if it has any cause of action against the perpetrator of a common nuisance. A State could do that without any law passed by the Congress. The Senator's amendment would withdraw any assistance from the perpetrator, and make him subject to an injunction by the United States of America, without offering him any help, which he may need, as most of them do need it in order that they may clear up the situation, and install the necessary plants to purify the water.

I think it is really not necessary to apply the injunctive process, even in the case of private industry. If we could lend private industries some assistance, if we could cooperate with them, I think it would be found that they all want to clean up their own situations, because it is not of any benefit to the reputation of a private industry to have it known that it is polluting the water of the community. It does not do it any good for the whole community to become afraid of it and suspicious of it. If we offer help, which the Senator would withdraw, it seems to me we at least take the first step we ought to take in attempting to protect the public.

I would certainly regret to see an amendment adopted which would withdraw the help proposed, and make the parties ineligible for assistance, but immediately make them subject to injunction brought by the United States in order to abate what the Senator calls a nuisance.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, if there be need for the proposed legislation at all it exists on the ground that streams are being polluted, and that contributing causes are the industrialists who are contemplated by section 6 of the bill. If the need exists, it is because the water is being polluted. If it is being polluted, the pollution ought to be stopped. If it is not going to be stopped by the State governments, all the amendment would do would be to give the United States attorney in the district in which the pollution was occurring the power to seek to have the nuisance abated.

If the Federal Government is to extend this particular function in the particular direction involved, it seems to me that in order to cure the evil contemplated we ought to stop it at once. There is no other way out of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not seen the amendment, and only heard it read at the desk. I should like to ask the Senator whether his amendment would apply to a manufacturing establishment, for instance, which is now polluting a stream, or would it apply only to subsequent or newly established manufacturing establishments contemplated, about to be built, or which were to be built after the law was passed?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in answer to the question propounded by the senior Senator from Nebraska, I will say that I adopted the very language appearing in line 1, which contemplates not only present pollution but also future pollution. Consequently, while this discussion was going on, for the purpose of bringing the matter to a head, I adopted the very language in the bill as drawn, subject to the phraseology necessary to meet the situation. So to answer the Senator's question specifically, the amendment would apply not only to future pollution, but to existing pollution, and, since we understand that any such action would be brought in a court of equity, we simply say that the court shall by appropriate order deal with the situation. The appropriate order obviously, Mr. President, could be dated ahead and therefore, in the event that pollution had not been removed by a given day certain, say 2 years or whatever would be reasonable, then the injunction could become permanent.

In such circumstances it seems to me we could very properly rely upon and depend upon the language appearing in line 1 of section 6.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should now like to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question about the bill. Is there anything now in the bill which, after it is passed, would prevent a man or a corporation from building an establishment which would pollute a stream?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; there is nothing in the way of compulsory prohibition.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not feel that there ought to be something of that kind in the bill? Let us assume, for instance, that the bill were passed today and it became a law, and there was no possibility of an injunction restraining me from doing what I contemplate doing, and I start tomorrow to build some kind of a manufacturing plant which it is conceded will pollute a stream. I do this after the bill is passed. It was argued when the so-called Clark amendment was being considered that we ought not to put it in the law now, but should wait a while. Proceeding on that theory, after I had, in the face of this law, built an establishment which was polluting a given stream, would it be right for me to apply for and get a gift or a loan to correct the error I made in the face of the law? Or if we find later on, as the Senator from Maine very well suggested, that we must put more teeth into the law, and provide for injunction, or for some similar process to bring about a cessation of the pollution of streams, and if such process could have been invoked against me when I polluted the stream in the face of the law, does not the Senator think there ought to be some provision in the bill now with respect to just such a situation? That was one of the reasons I was impelled to vote for the Clark amendment. It seems to me there ought to be something in the bill to meet the contingency when, after the bill is passed, a business is commenced by an individual or a corporation which in its operation pollutes a stream.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that of course a difficulty arises there because we cannot always tell in advance whether the operations of a particular plant which is under construction or is about to be built will result in stream pollution. The provision of section 6, which is the subject of the amendment offered by the Senator—and he has properly construed it to mean that it applies to present as well as future pollution—provides:

SEC. 6. Any person discharging, or building works which will discharge, untreated or inadequately treated sewage or waste in character or quality sufficient to be deleterious to the navigable waters of the United States or streams tributary thereto is hereby declared to be eligible to Federal aid—

And so forth. His amendment strikes out all the remainder of the section, and simply declares such persons to be the perpetrators of a common nuisance, so there is no difference between us as to the interpretation of his amendment.

Section 6 now provides that when a plant is already in existence, or is under construction, or is being built, which would result in the discharge of deleterious material into any stream, the person operating the plant, or who is constructing it, assuming that he does not have sufficient financial backing or ability to install in the new plant the necessary machinery to prevent the disposal of the wastage into a stream that would result finally in the pollution of the water, may apply for loans and grants.

Of course, in determining whether any person contemplating the building of such a plant would be entitled to the loan or the grant, the Division of Stream Pollution, its report coming on up through the Surgeon General to the Secretary of the Treasury finally, would be required to pass on the question in advance whether the operation of the new plant or its construction would be calculated to bring about the discharge of wastage into the stream so as to pollute it. It might be that that could not be determined at the time of the construction, and if it could not be determined, I imagine that the application for the loan would be turned down.

Let us assume that neither application for a loan nor a grant is made at the time construction is begun. If a provision is placed in the measure that before the construction of a plant, or during its construction, the injunctive process would be applicable so as to stop the construction or further operation, it might in many cases bring about the cessation of work on plants which ultimately would not pollute the stream. So it is difficult in advance to draw that line.

Of course, there are certain types of plants which it might be safe to assume in advance would pollute streams. It might be safe to say that with respect to an oil refinery, or certain types of coal mines; but there are innumerable kinds of manufacturing operations that might or might not pollute a stream, depending on what would happen after they begin operations. If the Government could in advance enjoin the construction or the completion of a plant under construction on the mere guess that when in operation it would pollute a stream, it seems to me that that would be giving the injunctive process a latitude that would not be wise.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that I hardly believe he is correct when he says that we would not know until the establishment was built and operations started, whether or not it would pollute a stream. It seems to me that at the very beginning we would know whether it would or would not. But even though the Senator is correct in that contention, the Government or anyone else who applied for an injunction on the ground that the business, whatever it might be, would pollute a stream, would be faced immediately with the necessity of proving that it would pollute a stream, and if that could not be proved the injunction would not be granted.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is why we have put industries on the same basis with municipalities, States, and counties in obtaining financial assistance.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me the amendment suggests that whenever anyone discharges any waste into a river it is a common nuisance. I do not see why it is a common nuisance. Suppose a sewer was built a hundred years ago in Cincinnati, and has been discharging into the Ohio River for 100 years, being connected with a dozen houses. The city has not even touched the sewer. I do not agree that it can be assumed that that is any common nuisance. The common nuisance arises from the fact that thousands of additional sewers have been added, that hundreds of additional plants have come to the city. I seriously doubt that it can be assumed that there can be any right to enjoin any particular sewer, or any particular city because it does not stop the operation of a particular sewer. I disagree with the basis of the Senator's analogy.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the State has the authority to enjoin a nuisance, which we have concluded that it has——

Mr. TAFT. It may pass a law to prohibit such a thing, yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may pass a law to prohibit such a thing and declare it a nuisance and enjoin it; but in the absence of legislation by the State dealing with its local situations, it seems to me that at least in taking this first step we ought not to project the Federal Government in ahead of the State in order that the Federal Government may bring an injunction suit when the State is not authorized under its law to bring such a suit.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. Of course, the Senator will recall that the whole theory of operation is on an interstate compact basis, and if our interstate compact basis is not going to provide for interstate agreement looking for legislation within the States which in turn will abate pollution, then we are wasting a great deal of time here.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is mistaken in saying that this whole matter depends upon compacts among the States. It does not. That is one of the features. Congress intends to give its consent to compacts that have been entered into among the States.

However, regardless of compacts, the bill attempts to hold out the cooperative effort of the Federal Government in dealing with the matter. In the compacts among the States there may be set up, subject to the consent of Congress, the necessary machinery not only to abate the pollution of water but even to put a stop to it by some sort of process, assuming that Congress can give its consent in advance or would give its consent after the compact is entered into. Certanly it does not seem to me to be necessary at this juncture of our legislative procedure to provide, according to the Senator's amendment, that instead of these individuals and corporations being eligible for help they shall be eligible for prosecution, without the hope of any help from the Federal Government.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are some provisions of this bill with which I am not in accord, although the reputed purpose of the same would incline me and others to give it hearty support. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] should be adopted, I would have no hesitancy in voting against the bill.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], it is evident, has given considerable attention to this measure, and the same may be said of those who have been instrumental in formulating it and in presenting it to the Senate. Nevertheless it possesses infirmities, and largely rests upon the theory that the Federal Government must take over additional functions, some of which may be considered to be beyond the authority of the Government.

I do not wish it to be understood, in the few observations which I shall make, that I purpose to introduce political questions into the consideration of the bill. However, I feel warranted in stating that support is given to it by both Republicans and Democrats. The bill undoubtedly does increase the authority of the Federal Government and enlarges its functions beyond those which in the past it has assumed. The contention was made for many years by our Republican brethren, following the philosophy of Hamilton, that there should be a strong central government, and it was contended by Democrats that such philosophy encroached upon the States and deprived them of authority which they possessed.

It is thought by some that some Democrats are accepting Hamilton's philosophy and joining in movements which make for an increase in the authority of the Federal Government.

It is apparent that there is a growing disregard of the rights of States and of individuals. It is obvious that the Federal Government is extending its activities beyond boundaries fixed in the Constitution. Many Americans fail to recognize that we have a dual form of government; that the Federal Government's authority is only that delegated to it by the States, and that the Constitution surrounds it with limitations which are, in effect, prohibitions. As indicated, however, we are departing from the faith of the fathers, and both Republicans and Democrats are joining in weakening the States, so that it may be said the Federal Government is merging into a powerful national government. Many Democrats and some of my Republican brethren support measures and policies that, in my judgment, may not be defended, if we accept the view that the States are supreme in all matters which were reserved by them, and that the Federal Government may perform only those duties which, under the Constitution, it is given the power to perform.

The amendment presupposes that the States are not competent to handle their internal affairs; that they are not sufficiently interested in the welfare of their citizens to result in the discharge of duties and obligations which it is their duty to discharge.

Mr. President, I believe that the States are competent to deal with their own domestic and internal affairs, and that the movements which are so apparent, tending to augment the power of the Federal Government at the expense of the States, will, if continued, result in changing our form of government. Throughout the world there are contests between democracy and aggressive and powerful central governments. Many persons are influenced by the gaudy trappings of military power, and support policies which tend to destroy democracy, local self-government, and individualism, and to magnify the authority of the general government. They forget that liberty is often lost by inertia, or by acquiescence in the gradual usurpations of political and economic authority. In my opinion there is a dangerous expansion of Federal Government which will result in the weakening of the States and reducing them to shadowy forms.

We have perverted the interstate-commerce provision of the Constitution as well as the so-called general-welfare clause. I think that some recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States give some support to this statement. Certain it is that Congress is reaching out to increase the authority of the National Government. Laws are enacted which would have been condemned by the courts and by the people only a few years ago, but which now, without any change in the Constitution of the United States, or without, in my opinion, justification by reason of any economic or political developments, encounter but slight opposition, and, in some instances, receive the benediction of the judiciary. If the Constitution is not fractured by some of the enactments by Congress, it certainly is stretched and wrenched, resulting in distortion and the creation of disequilibrium in our political institutions and in our form of government. It is rather common to hear the expression nowadays that the Constitution has been changed without amendment; changed by construction, by legislation, and judicial interpretation. There is a growing sentiment that there are no fundamental principles of government; that constitutions must yield to economic or political pressure and to idealogical forms and developments, no matter how they may undermine and subvert immutable principles. Change is the order of the day. Iconoclasts are active in religious as well as in political fields.

I recur to my former suggestion that people in many parts of the world are captivated by the display of political and governmental authority and yield their independence, indeed their conscience, to meet changes made and demanded by forces sinister and destructive.

I am still a believer in the rights of individuals, and that the preservation of this Republic as it was given to us by the fathers is indispensable to the enjoyment of the highest degree of liberty. We hear but little these days about State rights and State-rights Democrats. I still believe that the Federal Government is one of limited authority, and that if the States are absorbed by a powerful National Government, not only will the Republic as such be destroyed but the liberties of the people will be lost.

I believe that the maintenance of democratic institutions and the principles upon which the Republic was founded depend upon the maintenance of the States in all of their constitutional authority and power. They, and not the Federal Government, are the source of the Federal Government's authority. They created the Federal Government. And it has no power, as I have indicated, except that which the States conferred upon it.

Undoubtedly that was the view of Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic Party. And may I add that the immortal Lincoln entertained the same political views as to the rights of the people, and the authority of the States, and the limitations upon the Federal Government as those entertained by Jefferson. Senators will recall that Lincoln upon a number of occasions spoke in generous—indeed, eulogistic—terms of Jefferson, and stated in substance that his political philosophy was that which he obtained from Thomas Jefferson. But it seems now that both political parties have abandoned, in part at least, the principles of Jefferson and Lincoln. Their policies tend to weaken the States, to undermine their authority, and, indeed, to make of them vanishing shadows.

The amendment offered by my friend from Connecticut, I cannot help but feel, tends to support the views which I am so imperfectly expressing, namely, to increase the authority of the Federal Government and to strengthen the movement which seeks to devitalize the States and to devolve upon the Federal Government duties and responsibilities which belong exclusively to them.

I am opposed to increasing the authority of the Federal Government. I am opposed to the view, which seems to be growing in strength, that a powerful government is more important than democracy, and that if the people and States are touched with the hand of a representative of the National Government, our imperfections will be overcome and happiness and prosperity will be the inheritance of all.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I cannot remain silent after listening to the eloquent address of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. It behooves me to do something which I did not intend to do, and that is briefly to discuss the amendment.

I must say generally that I concur in the fundamental principles which are so ably presented from time to time by the learned Senator from Utah. Those principles have made the United States of America the leader of thought and of economic development, and the promoter of science, art, higher education, and religion. Those principles have made our people the smartest people on earth. In my opinion, our working men and women are the best-conditioned working people on earth, and live under the highest standards of life. All these things are founded upon the principles to which the Senator from Utah has today referred. From time to time I think I have given evidence of the fact that nearly every vote I have cast in the Senate is materially affected by a desire firmly to adhere to those fundamental principles.

Mr. President, in promoting the type of legislation before us I think we are not departing from our fundamental principles. Moreover, I think we must be realistic about the degree of sanction which we place behind a public-health regulation. Governments, both State and National, have been concerned with the public health for many years; in fact, throughout the life of the States and of the Nation. When we embark upon the policy of increasing the degree of regimentation and control that shall be exercised in the interest of the public health, we are nearly always confronted by the balancing up of costs and hazards, in money and in principle.

It seems to me we have one of such questions before us very vividly presented by the amendment. The States, the factory, the farmer, the riparian landowner, the fisherman, the summer resident, and all who are interested in the shining waters have taken part, in greater or lesser degree, in the effort toward purification of our streams and lakes. However, as we go along we must have the cooperation of all in order to make progress with the purification of our waters. We cannot expect one segment of the society called the public to assume all the burden of purifying our waters in the interest of public health. To put it crudely, Could we ask the factory owners on our shining rivers in the State of Vermont to assume all the burden of purification of those streams? We should do that if we should adopt such an amendment as the one before us.

The amendment would make of every little factory owner who turns his mill waste into a stream to a degree sufficient to come within the terms of the bill such an offender that he could be put in jail for continuing the practice. He would be forced to divert the waste at his own cost, with such aid as he could obtain from the Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the amendment were adopted, such an offender could obtain no help from the Government because the amendment eliminates altogether his eligibility for loans or grants and makes him subject to proceedings at once.

Mr. AUSTIN. The amendment is much worse than I thought it was. I thought the amendment merely put in the law the sanction of punishment for continuing the practice, but still tendered to the offender the possibility of going to his Government and obtaining a grant of any amount below 33⅓ percent of the cost of diversion. However, if the effect of the amendment is as I now understand it to be, certainly it would put upon the offender the entire burden of relieving the stream of that part of the pollution for which he and perhaps his forebears for a hundred years have been responsible.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. In the interest of accuracy of phraseology, may I ask whether the Senator means that the amendment is worse than he thought it was, or whether it goes further than he originally thought?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know exactly what the question means. I will say that the way I interpret the question, the amendment means just what I have said. If the amendment cuts off any right whatever that the private manufacturer might have had under the bill as originally drawn, and makes him an offender under the law for continuing practices which he and his forebears have followed perhaps for centuries, then I say that the entire cost of what society should bear is dumped on him and his associates along the stream.

So, we have this simple problem: Does it appeal to us, as reasonable men, that we should, all of a sudden, load down the mill owners on the small streams who throughout the life of the State have maintained the only source of support for little villages, averaging perhaps 20 families, up and down the streams with a burden that means, without doubt in over 50 percent of the cases, that they must shut down and turn men and women out of employment and afford them no possible way of gaining a livelihood? Shall we do that; and if we should do it what would we accomplish? Would we purify the streams along which we spread such desolation? I think not. As I know country life as a small-town boy, I know that a law that is so unreasonable as that cannot be enforced. We would absolutely stultify the objective of society which has been moving along in the direction of stream purification as well as could reasonably be expected.

The question was asked, "If we do not put a sanction into this bill expressly and directly, what will there be to cause men to make the appeal to do the work that is aimed at"? Let me suggest that, without any such law at all, various representatives of society have been at work trying to clean up the streams, with the result, so far as my State is concerned, that a high percentage of the little lakes lying between the mountains of Vermont are now unpolluted, all by virtue of the activity and the idealism of the people who reside on those lakes. I met last year representatives of the Associated Industries of Vermont at an annual meeting where this subject was discussed. There is an earnest desire to work toward this ideal and to arrive at it as early as possible; but I know perfectly well if we, the Congress of the United States, fail to cooperate on our part but, on the contrary, impose such an obstacle in their way as this amendment would create, that we would stop right away the things that are going on in a legislative way today. Legislation is being enacted within the State itself. The sanction we already find in the bill is in these words:

> Such loans and grants-in-aid shall be made upon such terms and conditions as the President upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, subject to the following limitations: (1) Grants-in-aid or loans shall be made only upon the certification of the State health authority having jurisdiction and upon approval and recommendation of the Surgeon General.

Mr. President, you will find in my State, and I imagine in every other State in the Union, progress already achieved in the way of State statutes which are suitable and which are exclusive in their right and in their jurisdiction over the domestic business of regulating manufacture and production on little streams, notwithstanding the fact that perhaps they may be tributaries to some great river. The sanction which I have just read is a natural one; it rests in the hearts and the intelligence and the patriotism of the people; and it will be effective if we do not destroy it by undertaking to come forward with the big Government at Washington idea, which our people are resenting more and more every day it gains momentum. If we do not come forward with that big stick, we will continue to have cooperation; we will have the sanction of the public-health authorities of the several States in laying down conditions upon which the applications will be founded, and gradually, in the proper way, build up a system of cooperation between the Federal Government and the separate States for the purification of our lakes and rivers.

I hope the pending amendment and every other amendment that has for its objective force from Washington to compel the doing of something by someone inside my State and every other State in the Union, and every amendment, even if it aims at public health, that has to do with Federal Government control of manufacturing and production inside my State and other States will be defeated.

Mr. DANAHER obtained the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DANAHER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ADAMS. In the State of Colorado we are interested in the development of our mineral resources. We go into the upper reaches of streams, where ore is taken out and crushed, and the dross is frequently washed down in the shape of tailings. We are compelled to let it flow into our streams. I am wondering whether or not that situation comes within the Senator's amendment. The waste from such mines is unquestionably detrimental to fish. The stream is made "milky" for a time, but the sediment gradually settles, and it is not unhealthy to any extent. Our communities tolerate it because they are anxious to have the minerals developed.

As I caught the amendment, it seems to be immediate, it seems to be mandatory; that is, that if there is a certain condition the United States district attorney must move in. There may be a mine which is 20, 30, or 50 miles really from a habitation some of the tailings of which would be washed into a stream. Under these conditions, I am wondering if, under the Senator's amendment, if the United States Attorney would be compelled to go in immediately and stop the mining process which is the cause of the stream pollution?

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, in answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Colorado I would say that I used the word "shall" in the amendment as drawn within the definition of the Supreme Court itself in a similar instance to mean "may." So far as the jurisdiction of the United States district attorney to institute a proceeding is concerned, it would authorize the United States attorney to bring suit. But no matter as to that, to come back if I may to the general subject, let us first take up the position of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING.]

On Thursday afternoon I spoke in favor of striking out the grants-in-aid provision entirely. I am in sympathy with the objective of abating and preventing the pollution of our streams. I am in favor of interstate compacts and local State legislation to remove pollution within the States. I merely wish to eliminate the business of having the United States Government contribute a third of the cost to the States and individuals and municipalities, which may pollute the streams on the one hand, and then come in and say to the Government of the United States, "Give us a third of the cost of removing the pollution we have caused." But my amendments were defeated. They would have protected the Senator from Utah in his maintenance of the effulgence of the doctrines of the Democratic Party, if we choose to bring that into the situation, and would do no violence to the notion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], who says that he resents "the big Government" interposing, but wants its money, if you choose, at least to the extent of a third of the cost of removing the sources of pollution from the rivers and shining streams of Vermont.

Oh, Mr. President, the amendment comes down to this: If we have pollution, then we should eliminate it. It seems to me that the only alternative to a voluntary, carefully thought-out plan of eliminating stream pollution, which would have permitted under the bill as it stood as I had proposed to amend it last Thursday is, as now provided, that the pollution is such that we must bring the United States Government in and we must "encourage" the polluters to get rid of their pollution.

Mr. President, we are even going to assist the man who has yet to build an industrial plant. We are going to give him a third of the cost of removing the pollution that will follow from the plant when he has one. That is what we are doing under section 6.

It seems to me that if we ought to eliminate pollution, the thing to do is to start to eliminate it, and in order to make it possible, if the State itself, within its own sphere, which has the police power to do it, does not abate the source of pollution, then the Government, which provides a third of the money, ought permissively, at least, to have the right to go in and abate the sources of the pollution that have engaged us in this legislation.

With those thoughts and those general observations I answer the Senator from Colorado, and, of course, pay my respects to my distinguished associates who have given us their views.

I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to take any further time, except on the point made by the Senator from Colorado.

If the Senator from Connecticut will let me have the amendment for a moment, the language of the bill provides that—

> Any person discharging, or building works which will discharge, untreated or inadequately treated sewage or waste * * * is hereby declared to be eligible to Federal aid.

The Senator from Connecticut proposes to strike out all after the words "to be," and to amend the language so as to read:

> Any person discharging, or building works which will discharge, untreated or inadequately treated sewage or waste * * * is hereby declared to be the perpetrator of a common nuisance—

Instead of being eligible for a loan, and a suit to abate the nuisance—> shall be brought in the name of the United States by the United States attorney for the district in which such nuisance shall exist.

It may be that under some interpretations of the word "shall" it will be regarded as equivalent to "may"; but it strikes me that that is a mandatory instruction to the district attorney in any such district to bring a suit against the person who is declared by the amendment to be the perpetrator of a common nuisance. Instead of holding out aid to the man or corporation, instead of cooperating with him, instead of permitting him to come to the Government and say, "I want to clean up the situation, but I have not quite enough money to do it; I have two-thirds of it, and I should like to have the Government help me out on the other third," the amendment says, "We will not help you to get rid of the pollution, but we will prosecute you at once, bring suit against you, haul you into court, and punish you under the authority of the United States."

It seems to me there cannot be any doubt about the interpretation of the language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, by oversight there was omitted a section making the provisions of the bill applicable to the District of Columbia and the Territories. I wish to add a new section to the bill, to be designated as section 14, and then to change the number of the present section 14 to 15. The new section is to read as follows:

> All provisions of this act applicable to the States shall also be applicable to the District of Columbia and the Territories.

I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator any information from Governor Winship, or the Interior Department, or the responsible authorities in Puerto Rico, or the responsible authorities in Alaska or the Virgin Islands or Hawaii, to the effect that they would favor this amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I will say that I have offered the amendment at the suggestion not only of those gentlemen but of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who is the chairman of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

Mr. KING. At this moment I have some doubt as to the wisdom of incorporating in the bill this provision in its present broad terms.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, it only makes the District and the Territories eligible. They are asking that they be included. Whether or not they will qualify is, of course, another matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5324) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. STEAGALL, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. SPENCE, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. GIFFORD were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS FOR TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, without amendment, House Joint Resolution 279, making supplemental appropriations for printing and binding and stationery for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The joint resolution calls for an emergent appropriation in order to provide the Treasury Department a supply of stationery and blanks of various kinds which will be required, such as social-security blanks, and various other tax blanks. The Department cannot wait for the passage of a deficiency bill; and I therefore ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill has been passed; has it not?

Mr. ADAMS. It has been passed.

Mr. KING. Was there not in that bill ample authority to meet this situation?

Mr. ADAMS. There was not, and I submit for the RECORD a letter from the Treasury Department dealing with the subject. I shall not read the letter, but ask unanimous consent to have it incorporated in the RECORD as a full explanation of the necessity of enacting this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 29, 1939.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to House Joint Resolution 279, which was passed by the House of Representatives on April 27, and provides the following supplemental appropriations:

Priting and binding, Treasury Department:
For an additional amount for printing and binding, Treasury Department, fiscal year 1939, including the same objects specified under this head in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1939 ..... $163,000

Stationery, Treasury Department:
For an additional amount for stationery for the Treasury Department, fiscal year 1939, including the same objects specified under this head in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1939 113,400

These two items were submitted by the President to the President of the Senate under date of March 29, 1939, together with a letter from the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, and are contained in Senate Document No. 53, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session.

The justification for these additional appropriations is as follows:

PRINTING AND BINDING ($163,000)

A supplemental appropriation of $163,000 for printing and binding, 1939, is necessary for the reason that the regular appropriation of $850,000 is inadequate to meet the essential requirements of the Department during the current fiscal year. On December 19, 1938, the obligations against this appropriation were over $649,000, leaving a balance for the remainder of the current fiscal year of only $200,000. At the present time the Department is withholding over 500 requisitions for printing of an urgent nature which cannot be filled because of the lack of funds.

A statement is hereto attached showing, by bureaus and divisions, the specific forms and other items of printing which cannot be furnished until additional funds are made available. This statement, it will be noted, contemplates a shortage of $245,340, which was the amount of the estimate submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, which estimate was reduced by the Bureau of the Budget to $163,000. It should be explained, however, that in submitting the enclosed information showing its gross additional requirements, the Department should not be regarded as protesting the reduction made by the Bureau of the Budget. As a matter of fact, the Treasury will find it possible to meet its urgent needs if it is granted a supplemental appropriation for printing and binding in the amount of $163,000 as approved by the House of Representatives.

Attention is called to the urgent need of the Bureau of Internal Revenue for 8,000,000 copies of the Social Security tax return, 1,260,000 copies of the capital stock tax return, and over 50,000,000 copies of miscellaneous tax returns and other record and report forms essential to the collection of income taxes and other revenue. With respect to the social-security tax and capital stock tax forms, it is imperative that these returns be available for distribution well in advance of July 1. The lack of either of these forms, or of any of the other record and report forms relating to internal revenue would seriously jeopardize the collection program and might conceivably result in an actual loss of revenue. These items are cited merely as examples of the type of material which will be required to be printed within the next few weeks and without which the operations of this Department unquestionably will be seriously impaired. The requirements of other bureaus are set forth, as stated, in the attached exhibit.

A supplementarly appropriation of $113,400 for stationery, 1939, is necessary for the reason that the regular appropriation of $505,000 is inadequate to meet the essential requirements of the Department for stationery during the current fiscal year. On December 31, 1938, the obligations against this appropriation were over $318,000, leaving a balance for the remainder of the current fiscal year of only $186,000. At the present time the Department is withholding over 500 requisitions for stationery which is urgently needed but which cannot be supplied because of the lack of funds. As a matter of fact, all stationery requisitions for the last quarter of the fiscal year are being denied, and as a consequence many field offices of the Department, including particularly the Internal Revenue and Customs Services, are appealing either by telegraph or mail for immediate replenishment of their depleted stocks of stationery vitally necessary in the performance of their official functions.

A statement is attached hereto showing the specific items of stationery which cannot be furnished until additional funds are made available. This statement, it will be noted, contemplates a shortage of $171,010, which was the amount of the estimate submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, which estimate was reduced by the Bureau of the Budget to $113,400. In this connection it should likewise be explained that in submitting the enclosed information showing its gross additional requirements the Department should not be regarded as protesting the reduction made by the Bureau of the Budget. As a matter of fact, the Treasury will find it possible to meet its urgent needs if it is granted a supplemental appropriation for stationery in the amount of $113,400, as approved by the House of Representatives.

In conclusion, may I again emphasize the necessity for the two supplemental appropriations in the respective amounts approved by the House of Representatives, and may I also respectfully point out the necessity for early consideration of these two items by the Senate Committee on Appropriations. As previously stated, the funds under both appropriations are practically exhausted, and the operations of the Department will face the likelihood of serious impairment unless the supplemental funds are promptly made available. I shall be pleased to furnish any additional information that your committee may require, and if you deem it desirable I shall be pleased to have representatives of this Department appear before your committee for further presentation of the facts.

Very truly yours,

H. MORGENTHAU, JR.,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Colorado?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 279) making supplemental appropriations for printing and binding and stationery for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Treasury Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, namely:

Printing and binding, Treasury Department: For an additional amount for printing and binding, Treasury Department, fiscal year 1939, including the same objects specified under this head in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1939, $163,000.

Stationery, Treasury Department: For an additional amount for stationery for the Treasury Department, fiscal year 1939, including the same objects specified under this head in the Treasury Department Appropriation Act, 1939, $113,400.

REGULATION OF TRUST INDENTURES, ETC.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2065, calendar No. 266, to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes.

I will state that I have no intention of entering upon a discussion of the bill today; but I desire to have it made the unfinished business, so that it may be considered tomorrow.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, so far as the Senator knows, is that the only measure which will be before the Senate tomorrow?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; so far as I know.

Mr. KING. Have the hearings been printed?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; they have been printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill S. 2065, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency without amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I repeat that I have no intention of entering upon the discussion of the bill today. It will go over until tomorrow as the unfinished business.

Mr. McNARY. It is the understanding that the bill will not be proceeded with today?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

EMPLOYMENT WEEK AND EMPLOYMENT SUNDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a proclamation issued by the President on Employment Week and Employment Sunday.

There being no objection, the proclamation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMPLOYMENT WEEK AND EMPLOYMENT SUNDAY
BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
A PROCLAMATION

As industry and business make substantial progress toward recovery there are ever-increasing employment opportunities for all groups. It is important to our social equilibrium that these opportunities be equitably shared, and that no group in the population shall feel itself discriminated against in hiring policies. It is particularly important that those men and women who have reached the age where their family responsibilities are at a peak receive their fair share of the new jobs, and are at least allowed to compete for these openings on the basis of their actual qualifications, freed from the handicap of an unfounded prejudice against age alone.

I am mindful of the fact that among those over 40 years of age are a great body of our most experienced, able, and competent workers; that this group as a whole is not sharing as fully as other age groups in the employment revival; that many of those over 40 have lost their jobs through no personal failing but because of circumstances over which they, and their employers, had no direct control; that among those over 40 and still actively in the labor market are practically the entire group of World War veterans (whose average age is 46), a group that is surely entitled to look to our society for security and economic independence.

A committee of distinguished representatives of industry, labor, and the public has recently issued its report to the Secretary of Labor in which it analyzes the factual basis for the alleged prejudice against hiring middle-aged workers and finds no good reasons that would support the continuance of this prejudice.

In view of these considerations, I should like to ask employers throughout the country to give special consideration to this problem of the middle-aged worker, to review and reexamine their current policies in order to determine whether applicants who are over 40 years of age are being given a fair opportunity to qualify for jobs, and to study their various departments and processes with a view to seeing where the qualifications and abilities of these older applicants could be utilized. I want to urge social agencies, labor organizations, and the general public to join in giving this problem their earnest consideration:

Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do hereby declare the week beginning April 30, 1939, as Employment Week, and do hereby declare Sunday, April 30, 1939, as Employment Sunday, and urge all churches, civic organizations, chambers of commerce, veterans' organizations, industry, labor, and the press throughout the United States to observe that week and that Sunday as Employment Week and Employment Sunday to the end that interest in the welfare of the older workers may be stimulated and employment opportunity afforded them.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 26th day of April A. D. 1939, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-third.

[SEAL] FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

By the President:

CORDELL HULL,
Secretary of State.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 1, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord of life and King of glory, we thank Thee that for the heart which knows Thy love there is a sacred temple. In its hush we wait in prayer. Thou who didst tread the wine press alone, speak within: "I am thy salvation, thy peace, and thy life." Oh, there was no other good enough to pay the price of sin. In Thee may our souls find forgiveness and rest of spirit. We pray Thee come to the rescue of the world's starved heart and give it the love and strength it needs. Amid whirling eddies and rapids of hate, in which the forces of vengeance violate every just law, prepare our hearts and humble our souls when the rest of the world goes wrong. While it goes thundering past, oh, hold our country free from fear; keep it calm and quiet. Allow not the famine and the pestilence of war to shrink and shrivel our Nation's soul, and forbid that its poison virus may ever course the veins of our Republic. The Lord God in His great goodness so direct our President that all our people may rise to a sympathy, tenderness, and helpfulness never known before. Bless abundantly our Speaker and the Congress with calmness, confidence, and with directive wisdom. In the blessed name of the world's Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, April 29, 1939, was read and approved.

SESSION OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the District of Columbia may be allowed to sit throughout the balance of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a short editorial from the Herald Tribune on the child conference which was held here last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein several speeches made at the celebration yesterday in New York City at the opening of the New York World's Fair of 1939 and the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington as first President of the United States under the Constitution, also speeches made at the dedication at the monument to George Washington and other ceremonies held at that time, together with reports on the same.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization may sit on May 3 and 4 during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the particular reason for the afternoon sessions?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The committee has held no hearings for over a month. There are a number of important public bills which should be heard, and we cannot dispose of the hearings in an hour and a half.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman consulted the minority members of the committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. We always agree on these matters. There is no objection on the minority side at all. We just want an opportunity to have the witnesses heard on both sides, and we will not have time to do it in the morning.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman from New York consulted the other majority members of the committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have not.

Mr. RANKIN. Well, I object until the other majority members of the committee have been consulted.

PENSIONS FOR VETERANS AND THE DEPENDENTS OF VETERANS OF THE REGULAR ESTABLISHMENT

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 75) to liberalize the laws providing pensions for veterans and the dependents of veterans of the Regular Establishment for disabilities or deaths incurred or aggravated in line of duty other than in wartime, and that said bill be rereferred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN INDIAN FEDERATION

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw H. R. 5921, and to file herewith my reasons therefor, including a short letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 28, 1939.

Hon. USHER L. BURDICK,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. BURDICK: House Resolution 5921, introduced by you, is before me. I am sure that you have sponsored this bill in a desire to obtain all possible benefits for the Indians, and without a knowledge of the details of the money-getting enterprise of which the bill is a part. I am setting down the facts in the confidence that you will withdraw the bill and will make an effective public declaration detaching your name from the scheme which the bill represents.

Some time ago I gave to the press a statement dealing with the money-raising activity of the American Indian Federation among needy Indians. That organization was soliciting from living Indians $1 each, and $1 in the names of dead ancestors. In return it was undertaking to seek from Congress $3,000 to be delivered to each Indian who paid his dollar, and $3,000 to be delivered in the name of each dead ancestor. I stated that the activity was in effect a racket or swindle. At about the same date, Commissioner Collier gave to the press evidence showing a working relationship between the American Indian Federation and certain groups such as the James True Associates and the German-American Bund.

In spite of these exposures, the so-called federation was able to collect a substantial total of dollar memberships from misled Indians. The bill you have introduced lists by name the Indians, who, during this preliminary phase of the racketeering enterprise, have fallen victims to the federation. They number 4,664, most of them being residents of Oklahoma but some being residents of other areas in the country.

With the introduction of this bill, whose text is extraordinary indeed, the federation's enterprise enters upon a new and far more deluding and dangerous stage.

The bill expressly states that each of the 4,664 Indians named therein, "being voluntary members of the American Indian Federation, * * * shall be paid the sum of $3,000."

The bill continues, in section 3, to the effect that all other Indians shall be entitled to an identical payment "provided application therefor is made within 1 year from the date of the introduction" of your bill. The clear implication, and even statement, is that within 1 year from April 20, 1939, Indians who pay their $1 to the American Indian Federation shall become eligible to the fabulous benefits of your bill, and that those who do not pay their $1, and pay it within the year, shall be excluded from eligibility.

The American Indian Federation has attempted to make its scheme appear reasonable by asserting that when these payments, totaling $900,000,000 if only 300,000 Indians should receive them, have been made, the Government will be put to no further expense in Indian matters. The bill conveys the identical impression. Yet the bill provides "that this act shall in no manner destroy or affect vested tribal property rights or tribal privileges." The bill uses the language of "settlement of claims." The only claims, of legal validity, which Indians can maintain against the Government are tribal claims. They receive governmental services and "privileges" by virtue of being members of tribes under Federal guardianship. Hence the bill would not discontinue the existing governmental expenditures incidental to Indian affairs.

The federation, in its solicitations of money, has held out the hope that $3,000 would be procured in the name of each dead ancestor in whose name a living Indian might contribute an additional dollar. The bill introduced by you unmistakably writes that hope into a congressional document. This it does in section 1, line 5, on page 2, line 5, and again, with particular force, in section 3, line 24. Thus the bill will enable the canvassers of the federation to ask for additional dollars in the names of dead ancestors of its victims.

Those who prevailed upon you to introduce their bill have, obviously, no legislative intent. They know that their bill can never pass Congress or become law. They are engaged in a particularly cynical scheme of which Indians are the victims. With this actual House resolution in their hands they can accelerate and expand their victimization to an enormous extent. And so long as they hold this resolution in their hands, no amount of publicity will avail to protect fully ignorant and needy Indians.

I am entirely confident that with the facts made known to you, you will withdraw the resolution and denounce the scheme which it incorporates. Your record of friendly service to the Indians is an assurance of this.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior.

MAY 1, 1939.

Hon. HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary, Department of the Interior,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 28 setting forth your objections to H. R. 5921, which I recently introduced. I have gone over your objections carefully and find that with the charges you make, I must withdraw the resolution for the present and entirely in its present form.

I have always made a practice of introducing any matter which any considerable group of Indians want. In this instance Mr. Bruner, of Oklahoma, a full-blood Indian, I believe, came to my office and showed me the resolution backed by a mass of names that would equal in size an ordinary Sears-Roebuck catalog. I introduced the resolution according to my practice.

Since receiving your objections and the charges of corruption which this resolution is likely to lead to, although all the evidence I have of that is your ex parte statement, I think it is only just that the resolution be withdrawn and a further study be made of the matter. I will not willingly lend my influence to the putting over of any money collection scheme among the Indians. I do not, however, think that collecting a membership fee in any group is wrong if their purpose is to alleviate their present condition.

I find you are correct about the possible interpretation of the bill—that it holds out a hope that would be likely to cause Indians to pay in a dollar—and section 3 of the resolution was not properly drawn, and I did not consider it when the resolution was handed to me.

The fundamental objection to the bill, I find, after reading it, is that it attempts to liberate the individual Indians and at the same time perpetuates the tribal relations. This would be an impossibility, and that section of the resolution is, of course, a contradiction.

I will ask to withdraw the resolution and attempt to prepare one that will meet what the Indians want, or what I find those want who come to Washington.

Nearly every group wants to be paid what they have coming and be liberated from any further subrogation by the Bureau. I am in hopes that we can get a general jurisdiction bill or a Claims Commission bill passed that will settle the Indians' claims for good. After that, I hope we can abolish the Indian Bureau altogether and make the Indians full citizens.

I finally wish to state that it is because I have the utmost confidence in your honesty and opinions that I am accepting your statement ex parte in this matter. I know nothing about what the organization of Indians is doing in the field of which you speak, but I could hardly presume to go ahead with the present resolution in view of the charges of dishonesty which you present. For that reason I am glad to withdraw the resolution and present one again only when I am certain that it will be for the best interests of the Indians and when I am sure that it will give no one any opportunity to mislead the Indians. I do not know that the present resolution will do that, but I am perfectly willing to accept your opinion on the matter until I am in possession of more evidence than I now have.

Sincerely yours,

USHER L. BURDICK.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include two tables on imports and exports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WORKERS' ALLIANCE IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of Congress to some of the things that are happening in California, and perhaps other places, as a result of the activities of that C. I. O. union—the Workers' Alliance.

First, I wonder just how many Congressmen really know what the Workers' Alliance is and what, in plain English, their objective or racket is. Very briefly, the C. I. O. Workers' Alliance Union is a union made up of people most of whom are misled by their communistic leaders, and all of whom are on some form of relief or other, the total amount of which relief is paid by some governmental unit—either city, county, State, or Federal.

The object of this group is to receive greater amounts of relief. As an illustration one might take Los Angeles County, Calif., where some $43,000,000 were paid out last year for relief. This is supposed to be paid to indigent unemployables, for in order to qualify for relief in that county the relief clients must come within the scope of the law and not only be unemployables but must actually come within the pauper class, the law is actually called the pauper law.

Now, if the leaders of this group can collect an initiation fee of 50 cents each from the 111,000 who are on the relief rolls of Los Angeles County, that is an amount of $55,500. After collecting this $55,500 for initiation fee, if they can continue to collect 25 cents per month, this is an amount of $27,750 per month that it would be possible for the Workers' Alliance group to get out of Los Angeles County alone, if they got into their union all on the indigent unemployable roll.

It would be easy to see that the first year they would have collected the $55,500 initiation fee, plus $333,000 a year for dues, or a total the first year of $388,000. I claim that the $388,000 is the main objective of the officials of the Workers' Alliance. And I claim further that, so far as the welfare of the poor individual and the poor devil who has to go on these rolls is concerned, the Workers' Alliance are not interested in them. The only thing that they are interested in is getting more money for those on relief in order that they can take it away in the form of initiation fees and dues. This they are doing. Does any Congressman in this House think it is either fair or proper that these unfortunate people who are on relief should have to contribute in the form of dues or initiation fees any part of that money that they have to receive from some government in order to live?

Does any Congressman in this House, considering this set-up, think for a minute that the Workers' Alliance group will ever try to lower the amounts of relief or to make fewer the number of individuals who are receiving relief? The answer is, apparently, that they will not, for as soon as these people are placed in jobs and taken off the rolls then their racket ceases and these officials will no longer receive these tremendous amounts that they are receiving from those on relief. It is apparent to me and I believe that the Workers' Alliance is a parasite on relief, and I further believe that the most despicable form of low-down racketeering is that which would prey on what were set up to be charitable and relief institutions.

Apparently the Workers' Alliance are not satisfied with their present racket, but are now seeking to increase it and have become so bold as to actually seek, by strong-arm tactics and threats to persons and property, to attempt to control the votes in legislative bodies, and by their threats and attempted coercion to deny legislators their right to vote freely and according to their respective consciences

How this group headed by Lasser, Benjamin, and other Communists or near-Communists howl to heaven for their freedom and rights under the American Constitution when anyone seeks to restrain or control them under existing laws and in a constitutional American manner. But how do they justify the strong-arm tactics and coercion that this Workers' Alliance group are trying to put over in California and elsewhere throughout the United States? Apparently with that group a legislator has no right to his own opinion. Apparently the Workers' Alliance think they have the right to coerce legislators and change their views by threats of violence, property damage, and so forth. Would they not howl to heaven through every communistic organization if this same thing were practiced upon them? Certainly they would. One cannot count, however, upon fair practice or a code of ethics from this communistic group, because their code of communistic ethics is to accomplish their ends regardless of what means they use.

I am quoting herewith the news items taken from our California papers on April 23 and 24 showing that the Workers' Alliance have threatened the mother of Gerald Kepple, assemblyman, of Whittier, Calif. This is shown on the front page of the Los Angeles Times dated April 23, and I am asking that this item be printed in the RECORD:

SACRAMENTO, April 22.—Strong-arm tactics employed by left wingers to stop amendments to the budget were reported by Assemblyman Gerald Kepple, of Whittier, today.

His mother, Mrs. Dora B. Kepple, called him from the Kepple home near Whittier and said that several carloads of men drove up to the place yesterday. They said they were members of the Workers' Alliance and that she should send word to her son to "lay off" that budget and let it go through the way it was or they would bring a thousand people to camp on his place until it was passed.

"It's just an example of the pressure that is being exerted against any economy move in reference to the budget," said Kepple. The Workers' Alliance and others interested in relief benefits have been in an uproar over the removal of the $73,000,000 relief item from the budget, to be handled as a separate bill.

Again, as shown by other threats to Dr. Jesse Kellems, on the first page of the Santa Monica Evening Outlook under date of April 24:

Bearing the message that 300 of their number would camp on his property unless he reversed his vote on the budget and relief bills, six emissaries from the Workers' Alliance yesterday visited the Bel-Air home of Dr. Jesse Randolph Kellems, assemblyman from the sixtieth, or Santa Monica Bay, district and leader of the economy bloc in the legislature.

The visitors arrived while Dr. Kellems and members of his family were at the McCarty Memorial Christian Church, of which he is the pastor, and found no one at home except a trusted Negro servant, who offered to lay violent hands on any member of the group seeking to set foot on the premises.

Taken aback by this turn of events, the spokesman for the group said: "Tell the doc to change his vote on the budget and relief bills or we'll bring an army of 300 here to camp on his front doorstep."

Kellems, who left again last night for Sacramento, said before his departure that he did not take the threats seriously. "If they do come back, I'll try and serve them coffee and doughnuts," he added.

There were other assemblymen threatened during this same period. This threat and attempted coercion went so far that under the telegraphic news item on the first page of the Santa Monica Outlook on April 24, there appears this item:

SACRAMENTO.—Demands for a police detail for "protection of families and property" of legislators picketed in the Los Angeles area for their economy votes on the budget were made today by an informal joint committee of senators and assemblymen. A telegram was sent to Sheriff Eugene Biscailuz, of Los Angeles, by Senators Jerrold L. Seawall, Roseville; Randolph Collier, Yreka; Harry Parkmen, San Mateo; and Assemblyman Gerald C. Kepple, Whittier; Jesse R. Kellems, West Los Angeles; Lee T. Bashore, Glendora; and Charles W. Lyon, Los Angeles.

Are you Congressmen aware of the actual conditions when a group of such people as the Workers' Alliance, who are all on relief, have come to a point where they are taking the law into their own hands and demanding that legislators vote as they tell them to? Does this Congress realize the danger of this condition?

Do the Members of this Congress realize that it is only through the money received from some governmental unit that these people claim to be able to live at all?

Is it not apparent that many of these people who were carrying out such threats have now made it their sole business to assemble into mobs and that these same mobs go before governmental bodies, make their demands and create riots? Is the Government of the United States going to subsidize what amounts to rioting, breaking the peace, violating the law and the preaching of the destruction of the American form of government?

I know these things to be true, and I know them to be a fact because I sat for 3½ years as county supervisor of Los Angeles County and met these conditions. I know of my own knowledge what is going on because this Workers' Alliance mob personally came to me and told me I would never leave the building unless I changed my vote. The final result of this was that the sheriff threw these people out after they created a riot scene. This was only one of many such riots but the singular thing is true in everyone of these riots, that the same faces, the same people, appeared. In other words, they have become professional agitators and rioters and they will continue to be as long as some governmental unit will furnish them the money so they can afford this luxury of not working but may use as their vocation agitating, rioting, and becoming law violators with impunity.

Is not Lasser's and Benjamin's admission, with reference to their communistic activities, enough to make this Congress begin to think?

I think it is certainly high time that the Federal Government remove from its pay rolls and quit subsidizing these professional agitators, rioters, racketeers, and preachers of destruction of the American form of government, and it is with that in mind that I am going to offer either a bill or a resolution next week, the substance of which will be to remove everyone of such persons engaging in the activities enumerated above, from the pay rolls paid by money furnished by the Federal Government. I think that every red-blooded American and their Congressmen, regardless of party, should back this resolution and I am going to ask for your support along that line at that time.

I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein three news items, one from the Los Angeles Times and two from the Santa Monica Outlook, all three of which are short, bearing upon this subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Santa Monica Evening Outlook of April 24, 1939]

KELLEMS DEFIES THREATENING RADICAL GROUP—DELEGATION ATTEMPTS TO FORCE CHANGE IN DOCTOR'S BUDGET VOTE

Bearing the message that 300 of their number would camp on his property unless he reversed his vote on the budget and relief bills, six emissaries from the Workers' Alliance yesterday visited the Bel-Air home of Dr. Jesse Randolph Kellems, assemblyman from the sixtieth, or Santa Monica Bay, district and leader of the economy bloc in the legislature.

The visitors arrived while Dr. Kellems and members of his family were at the McCarty Memorial Christian Church, of which he is the pastor, and found no one at home except a trusted Negro servant, who offered to lay violent hands on any member of the group seeking to set foot on the premises.

Taken back by this turn of events, the spokesman for the group said: "Tell the doc to change his vote on the budget and relief bills or we'll bring an army of 300 here to camp on his front doorstep."

KELLEMS ANSWERS WITH NEW ATTACK ON RELIEF

SACRAMENTO.—California assemblymen bristled today in resenting pressure tactics and threats attributed to the Workers Alliance to influence economy bloc members to cease pruning the Governor's $557,000,000 budget.

Dr. Jesse R. Kellems, whose home in West Los Angeles was visited in his absence by a delegation which left word with a servant that 300 adherents of their group would camp on his property unless he changed his vote on the bill said:

"My observation is that barking dogs never bite."

WON'T BE STAMPEDED

"I am not going to be stampeded into doing anything by a bunch of radicals howling about it.

"We need a sane and sensible system of relief. I am convinced the cost of government is too high. Relief is not for politicians or any other person who can get work yet stays on the dole.

"Relief in this State is a racket."

Lee T. Bashore, Glendora assemblyman, another economy-bloc opponent of the budget, whose home was reported picketed, also was in a fighting mood.

"If they want to make a fight of it," he said, "we'll give them all the fight they want."

PROMISES TROUBLE

"It would be well for that bunch to understand their tactics will get them nothing but trouble."

Assemblyman Gerald Kepple, Whittier, whose mother reportedly was threatened with an invasion of her property unless he "about faced" on his budget position, was not immediately available for comment.

STRONG-ARM TACTICS FOR BUDGET TOLD—ASSEMBLYMAN KEPPLE SAYS WORKERS' ALLIANCE THREATENED MOTHER

(By Chester G. Hanson)

SACRAMENTO, April 22.—Strong-arm tactics employed by left wingers to stop amendments to the budget were reported by Assemblyman Gerald Kepple, of Whittier, today.

His mother, Mrs. Dora B. Kepple, called him from the Kepple home near Whittier and said that several carloads of men drove up to the place yesterday. Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of "encirclements."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and include therein an address delivered by Mr. William George Bruce, of Milwaukee, and some editorial comment thereon, from the Sheybogan Free Press, relating to the St. Lawrence Waterway.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a short statement by former President Wilson.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD a radio address delivered by me on Saturday night.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, generally speaking, I am opposed to constitutional changes, as my colleagues well know from my discussions on this floor. In the case of which I am about to speak, I propose the very things I have objected to in the past, namely, an amendment to the Constitution.

This is to restore equal rights to the native Americans, the people who were Americans before any of us landed on the North American Continent. It seems strange to me that we should have dealt with the native Americans, or the Indians, as a foreign nation when in reality we are the foreign people that have invaded their domain. I now propose to rectify this injustice to the Indian.

Let Congress consider this proposed joint resolution favorably, so that the words, "and with the Indian tribes," may be deleted from article I, section VIII, paragraph 3, of the Constitution, so that it will read, "To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States."

The necessity for dealing with the Indian tribes as a foreign people no longer exists, and the Indian himself prefers to be recognized for what he is, a native American, and naturally he is entitled to the same rights as others living within the continental borders of the United States. I am acquainted with many of the Indian tribes, and I hope that Congress will comply with the wishes of my Indian friends and bestow upon them the rights and privileges to which they are entitled.

Mr. Speaker, much has been said for and against old and new policies, with no satisfactory results, because the proponents and opponents are still firmly convinced that those who dissent are wrong. There are, of course, good reasons for these differences in thought, and it is our duty and the duty of those interested in the welfare of the Nation to solve and correct such differences before it is too late.

The frequently used, stereotyped expression "horse and buggy days" is used to belittle those who may differ because of their belief in sound constitutional principles. Such expression is of little value, and those who resort to similar phraseology should remember that sound principles spring from the laboratory and not from political crackpots, and that sound procedures are established upon natural laws and not upon political wisecracks.

The cause of our present trouble may be found in the constant departure of Congress from a true republican form of government. The cause of our chaotic condition and uncertainty is due to the fact that we are no longer depending upon the foundation of our Government, which is the Constitution, but we are instead searching for some panacea to take its place, and we call it democracy. To me, this departure from sound government is critical, for no democracy has ever survived for any length of time. Washington foresaw the danger of this when he said:

> The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty. * * * The common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.
> It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion.

This is the situation prevailing in the United States today for the majority in Congress is no longer relying upon the Constitution for its procedure but is instead directed by its leaders, and relies upon them for direction. The power which is now directing the destiny of the Nation—the invisible government—is that in control of the international and national money. The wishes of the invisible government find expression through high leaders in the Government who in turn direct those who wield the power of control in Congress. The proof that such power exists may be found in the mass of unconstitutional legislation which has been enacted by Congress over a period of several years. Today we have reached a point where reason no longer prevails in Congress, for the majority is instead guided by blind faith in its leaders, and proof of this statement may be found in the subservience of the majority to the slightest wish and desire of the administration. This indifference to constitutional law and irresponsibility of the majority in Congress can only end in the loss of rights and liberty, and will eventually deprive the people of a republican form of government.

It should be self-evident to each and every Member of Congress that our action in Congress is inexcusable and unjust to the people we represent. To those who feel inclined to contradict this statement I want to say: If all Members in Congress—and for that matter, in other branches of the Government—adhere strictly to the Constitution, little or no difference in opinion would exist because we could always retrace our steps to and prove procedure upon the Constitution itself. That is why the instrument was drafted. It is supposed to be used as the premise or the basic foundation upon which we must rely for procedure and for authority. Failure to do this is the cause of all our troubles today.

On April 21, 1939, the House passed the Reorganization Act of 1939, and on April 25, 1939, we are presented with a copy of the release which embodies the President's suggestions. There is no Member in Congress on the Republican side who objects to economy in the Government, for we realize it is necessary if the Nation is to survive. I, of course, shall speak only for myself as I am one of those who voted no to this Act. I did so because it is not going to provide economy, which, of course, the Members will discover at a later date. I believe I am justified in making this statement, for if there was any intention on the President's part to reduce Federal administrative cost, he would have advised liquidation of these unnecessary bureaus instead of transfer and consolidation. I shall not discuss the mixing of bureaus or even the transfer of the Bureau of the Budget to the supervision of the President. I only want to discuss the preamble to the President's message. We all have our opinions and I am no different from others, so I shall quote from the President's message, April 25, 1939:

> In these days of ruthless attempts to destroy democratic government, it is boldly asserted that democracies must always be weak in order to be democratic at all; and that, therefore, it will be easy to crush all free states out of existence.

I am glad to read this expression by the President, because "ruthless attempts" are deliberately made by the Socialist and the Communist to destroy our republican government, and inasmuch as the minority which is attempting this destruction is generally known, it is the duty of the Government to destroy them instead of talking about someone else. Democracies are always weak, for there is not one democracy which has survived for any length of time. Democracies are always converted into despotism of the rankest form.

> Confident in our Republic's 150 years of successful resistance to all subversive attempts upon it, whether from without or within, nevertheless we must be constantly alert to the importance of keeping the tools of American democracy up to date. It is our responsibility to make sure that the peoples' government is in condition to carry out the peoples' will, promptly, effectively, without waste or lost motion.

I believe there are many people who question whether we have maintained the same "successful resistance" for the past 7 years which our Nation enjoyed for the first 143 years. It is generally conceded that much has been lost due to "subversive attempts" upon constitutional government, both from without and from within.

The best tool which may be utilized to maintain a republican form of government is strict adherence to the Constitution, which all of us are obligated "to preserve, to protect, and defend." I feel obligated to the Nation's industry and business, for it is those which are paying the cost of the Federal administration, and I believe it is no more than right that we give them full and unstinted protection.

> These measures have all had only one supreme purpose—to make democracy work—to strengthen the arms of democracy in peace or war and to ensure the solid blessings of free government to our people in increasing measure.

This statement, "to make democracy work," is rather difficult to understand, because democracy is working here today. The unfortunate part is, all democracies undergo an evolution which usually ends in despotism or complete collapse of the democracy itself. Neither of the two would be a blessing to our people.

> We are not free if our administration is weak. But we are free if we know, and others know, that we are strong; that we can be tough as well as tender-hearted; and that what the American people decide to do can and will be done, capably and effectively, with the best national equipment that modern organizing ability can supply in a country where management and organization is so well understood in private affairs.

The strength of all governments depends upon unity within, and the strength of the Federal Government is in direct relation to that of the 48 States. The strength of the State governments depends upon the free and unmolested operation of all industries and business within the State. The Federal Government guarantees, in article IV, section 4, a republican form of government to each State. When the Federal Government fails in this, and when the States are deprived of sovereign rights by Federal invasion and usurpation of such rights, nothing but weakness remains. In such case the Federal Government is no stronger than the State government itself, and this should be clearly evident today.

In our form of government each State must assume responsibility for its own government and for the operation of the industries and business within the State. If the Federal Government would enforce this provision of the Constitution, the cost of Federal administration might be reduced to a billion dollars per year, industries and business would operate, our idle people would be employed, and the Nation would be prosperous. The reverse is true today, and that in itself is the most glaring evidence of weakness within the Federal Government, which no planning can change.

The President's recent proposal, in which he advises Congress of his desire to shift, consolidate, and to readjust departments and bureaus, I venture to say will end in dissension within the organization itself. It becomes more objectionable as it is stirred about. It is no more than a simple gesture to distract attention, for it will not provide any saving of money. It is only a plan, and that is all. I, as a Member of the Republican side, shall not express my viewpoint either for or against the President's proposals by vote on the floor. I shall, instead, remain neutral, and leave it to the New Deal Democrats to bury their own mistakes. It is no more than right that the New Deal blunders shall fall upon their own heads, for it would be an injustice to have these accumulated mistakes collapse upon those who take control in 1941.

Much is being done to divert public interest from ills at home with little or no success. The invisible government has reached a point which requires careful manipulation to bring about desired results. These invisible rulers realize that we cannot go on with a steadily increasing army of unemployed. We have more people unemployed, on relief, and on part-time Federal employment than we have ever had at any time in the past. War, of course, would be convenient to cover up this frightful situation, but again the invisible rulers meet rebuff in the form of public indifference. No one desires war, and it will be difficult or even hazardous for the New Deal in spite of its supply of rubber to mold a stamp to read "We declare war." It is better to "take five" and look the situation over before we get too excited. We have no cause for war. We have nothing at stake in Europe and very little in the Orient. The New Deal has managed to have Uncle Sam kicked out of China, out of Mexico, and we are just about to release the Philppine Islands—to cast them adrift, if you please; so we really have nothing to go to war about, except, possibly, to rescue those who have defaulted in their obligations to us for over 22 years.

These self-appointed rulers who seem so anxious to stir up trouble through their owned and controlled press have some reason for this agitation, and it is not for the general welfare of the United States. Agitation by this invisible government began a long time ago in discussion of Russian brutality, but after the Russian Government conducted wholesale executions, many of the papers agitating for war today stopped publishing these wholesale murders for reasons best known to themselves. Little publicity was given to the invasion of Ethiopia, although thousands of innocent and defenseless inhabitants were killed. But for many months, the papers have been filled with stories relating to confiscation of property and eviction of Jews in Germany.

I do not believe the so-called Hebrew purge in Germany is cause for war. As a matter of fact, it is none of our business. I question the truthfulness of many statements published in our papers, for I find upon investigation that German-Hebrews are in a better position in Germany than many of our own people in the United States. Furthermore, I do not believe we should meddle in German affairs or disposition of her citizens. We have plenty to do at home, and should evict aliens in the United States instead of receiving them with open arms as we are now doing. This is a brief summary of information I have accumulated, and I am firmly convinced that Hebrews with German citizenship prefer to remain in Germany:

FACTS AND FIGURES ABOUT THE HEBREWS IN GERMANY

(1) The proportion of Hebrews to the total population of Germany in 1925 was about 1 percent.

(2) The proportion of Hebrews to the total population of Berlin was about 4 percent (1925).

(3) Of Hebrews living in Prussia, 42 percent lived in Berlin (1925).

(4) New York Times, November 27, 1938: In 1933 in old Germany, Hebrews of Jewish faith, 502,000; other Hebrews, 73,000. Total, 575,000 Hebrews.

(5) From Deutschland von Heute, published by Terramare, Berlin, 1935: Of 404,000 Hebrews in Prussia in 1925, 76,000 were noncitizens.

(6) From Die Juden in Deutschland, published by Franz Eher München, 1937: Of 172,672 Hebrews in Berlin in 1925, 25 percent were noncitizens, as compared with 6.9 percent in 1890, 12.6 percent in 1900, and 18.5 percent in 1905.

(7) Völkischer Beobachter, Berlin, November 18, 1938: Total German wealth, reichsmarks, 200,000,000,000 among 80,000,000 people, or average of reichsmarks, 2,500 each. Total Hebrew wealth, reichsmarks, 8,000,000,000 among 700,000 people, or average of reichsmarks, 11,428 each. Therefore, the average Hebrew was worth 4.57 times as much as the average German.

(8) Völkischer Beobachter, Berlin, November 1938: In Berlin 894 Hebrews each owned reichsmarks 300,000 or more—total reichsmarks, 700,000,000. Of these there were 346 with over reichsmarks 500,000, 37 with over reichsmarks 2,000,000, 1 each with reichsmarks eight, ten, and twelve million.

(9) Völkischer Beobachter, Vienna, November 28, 1938: In Austria, of a total wealth of 8,000,000,000 marks, 2,300,000,000 were owned by Hebrews. Among these were 102 millionaires, 27 of these with more than 2,500,000 each. The largest individual fortune was reichsmarks 26,000,000.

(10) Transocean News Service, April 11, 1939: Total Czech wealth about 150,000,000,000 Czech crowns; Hebrew wealth in Bohemia and Moravia estimated at 50,000,000,000 crowns.

(11) New York Times, November 22, 1938: Hebrews own 60 percent of real estate in Berlin.

(12) Following figures from Die Juden in Deutschland, published by Franz Eher München, 1937: In 1925, of 10 Hebrews, 7 were in large cities, 3 in country and small towns. Of 10 Germans, 3 were in large cities and 7 in country or small towns.

(13) Of the following professions, Hebrews constituted percentages as shown:

	Percent
Notaries	56
State insurance doctors	52
Lawyers	48
Doctors	42
Dentists	35
Druggists	28

(14) Prussia in 1925: Of all Hebrews, 58.8 percent were in trade, whereas of total Prussian population, 17.11 percent were in trade. Of all Hebrews, 25.85 percent were in industry and manual labor, whereas of total population, 40.95 percent were in industry and manual labor. In agricultural pursuits: Hebrews, 1.74 percent; of the total population, 29.5 percent.

(15) According to Alfred Marcus, Jew, in the Economic Crisis of the German Jew, 1930:

	Percent Jewish
Ladies clothing	60
Metal trade	57.3
Hops (wholesale)	45.8
Used metal and scrap	41
Textiles	39.4
Grain	22.7
Banking	18.7

(16) In 1925: Of Hebrews in occupation, 44.9 percent were owners of businesses; of non-Jews in occupation, 14.4 percent.

	Percent
Business employees:
Hebrews	29.7
Non-Hebrews	10.9
Skilled workers:
Hebrews	5.8
Non-Hebrews	32.0
Unskilled workers:
Hebrews	2.6
Non-Hebrews	16.1

(17) Berlin Exchange, 1930:

On board of—	Hebrews	Germans
Stock exchange	25	11
Produce exchange	12	4
Metal exchange	10	2
House committee	8	2
Membership committee	18	5

Of 147 members of the board, 116 were Hebrews.

Of 1,474 brokers, about 1,200 were Hebrews.

It is quite possible that the Hebrews in the United States who own property in Germany, acquired during the inflation, are being pinched a little now because of the manner in which they came into possession of their holdings.

After reading this I do not believe anyone can discover a good reason for us to criticize a foreign nation, or a cause for punitive commercial restrictions, so this cannot be the actual reason for the beating of the war drums. The newspapers which are now in hysteria about happenings in Europe, where there is no loss of life, are not uttering a word in protest against mass destruction of life in China. The President is not protesting to Japan about happenings in the Orient, yet our interest is vitally affected there and not in Europe. As a matter of fact, our greatest enemies in Europe are those who used and then abused us, and they are now attempting to involve our Nation in another conflict to save the golden calf.

It is better for us to keep our eyes open, as the enemies are here in our midst, and they are those who harbor socialism and communism within their hearts instead of Americanism. These enemies are responsible for stagnant industry, closed factories, and dormant business. They are responsible for the idle people walking our streets, and they are responsible for the poverty and suffering. They are responsible for dissension and hatreds within our Nation, and they are the same enemies who favor participation in war.

Our greatest enemies are those who are willing to sacrifice peace to satisfy an insane desire for power by the control of our Nation's monetary wealth. When we have discovered those now in control of gold, we will have discovered the power that makes war, and that power is the invisible government of the United States. This power is firmly entrenched, and its dupes are those who for the sake of the party blindly follow pseudo leaders in abject submission only to deprive the folks at home and themselves of their constitutional rights when they vote for legislation to please constitutional rapists.

We, the people, have an absorbing interest at home which someday may become acute, and to which we may find answer in the history of other nations. The world has never been free from pirates and piracy. At one time, this gentry sailed the raging main and took tribute by brutal force. Today, they have changed their mode of operation, but are still collecting tribute in the following manner: They are now organized, and those within the magic ring in this invisible government enjoy the use of national deposits to further enrich themselves in the ownership of property, for the commodity and managed money which is now lying in the banks is used to acquire greater holdings in industry and real estate. The point I wish to make is that, in withdrawing gold and gold security from public use, a great injustice has been done to our people, for it has left our own people unsecured, and those now in control secured, by gold. This is not all, because our commodity and managed currency which is now lying on deposits in the banks, is employed by this same group to further enrich itself in the acquisition and ownership of industries and real estate. So they have the gold, and they are now using a commodity or managed money to buy the only thing which is left—the Nation's real estate. In the final accounting, the people who have been instrumental in the creation and accumulation of this wealth will find themselves in poverty, working for the money barons. This happened in Germany during the inflation, and the same system is employed in the United States at the present time. It will end as it has in other countries, in poverty and suffering to those who have been actually employed in the earning and the creation of the Nation's wealth.

I am informed that in the city of Washington alone, more than half of the commercial business and real estate is now owned and controlled by the same group which is now agitating liberal immigration from Europe. Their mode of operation lies in playing a sympathetic tune on the public's heartstrings, so that the door to immigration may be left open. The young ones come through the ports of entry and the older ones as supercargoes in ships, and over the borders at night.

Who in the Federal Government will accept responsibility for the withdrawal of gold and gold currency, and for repudiation of gold-bearing bonds and securities? Who will have the courage to step forward and say: "It is I who deprived the people of standard gold security for their savings and it is I who placed the people on a managed and commodity money, and I am now about to debase even this unstable currency with yellow and blue trading chips. It is I who deprived you of the right to be secured by money of standard value and it is I who am responsible for granting the rights of which you were deprived to foreigners and to foreign governments."

Let these questions be answered by the President, so that we, the people, may know who betrayed us. Who comprises this group that is wielding control over the Nation's gold? Gold is the only acceptable medium of exchange among foreign nations, so why is it not equally important to our own industries and to our own people?

Why is the Federal Government persistently weakening State sovereign rights by invasion of the States? Why is the Federal Government engaging in industry and business at the expense of the taxpayers? Let these questions be answered by those in the Federal Government who are constantly asking for greater delegation of power from Congress.

Is it not possible that our foreign and domestic policies are propounded by the invisible government, by the same power that is now in control of proadministration newspapers, of motion pictures, and radio? Attempts are now being made by the Federal Government to seize control of broadcasting. Why? For no other reason than to control information which in its naked truth may prove embarrassing to those responsible for conditions as they are today.

Why is it necessary for the Federal Government to engage in motion pictures so as to distribute information prepared for public consumption by Federal bureaus? There is no excuse or need for the Federal Government to expend money on publicity, in order to sell itself to those who have always paid and are still paying all Government expenses. The people may be fooled by this for a while, but that day is now passed, for we are facing a reality which no amount of conversation, moving pictures, or other propaganda can overcome. We are near the end of the road as we face disintegration.

For the past 7 years Congress has turned over to the President the power to control money and credits abroad and at home. The result of this is evidenced in stagnant industries and idleness, which is no more than we may expect, for unlimited control of money and power in the wrong hands becomes an instrument of destruction to public liberties and free governments.

I distinctly recall that when the House considered the reorganization bill one of the gentlemen who sponsored this legislation said:

> This is not the President's bill. He has made no request for this legislation. It is our bill.

In other words, the sponsors claimed all authority for its creation, and I shall not deny the majority credit for any legislation passed. On April 25 the President proposed his first reorganization plan, wherein he informed Congress that he would have to employ more help to carry out the request of Congress. This, of course, is only logical, because the President would be fully employed if he confined himself solely to the duties as outlined in article II of the Constitution.

The duties delegated to the President by Congress, and which he has distributed among his employees, is, in fact, a constitutional duty which should be performed by Congress and for which it is held responsible. As it is now, Congress admits that the President and those employed by him possess greater ability than Congress itself. This is, if nothing else, a most extraordinary admission of incompetency by those who transferred this unconstitutional and unwarranted power to the President and his appointees, and it is a sorry day for those who have placed their faith and trust in the Congress of the United States.

It is time for the people to awaken, for danger is clearly evident, and it cannot be blamed upon a foreign power, but upon the invisible government within the United States. Congressional committees should cease to listen to columnists for advice. Dorothy Thompson knows as little about it as the man on the street, and to look to her for guidance is, if nothing else, a waste of effort. Congress is not elected by the people to listen to extensive opinions on governmental procedure as often expressed by witnesses before committees. Congress is supposed to be well informed on international and national topics and procedure, and it is time for the Members to assume their rightful position and act as statesmen instead of gossipers at an afternoon tea party.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein discussions pertinent to topics of the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a letter from the editor of the Record and Tribune, of Indianola, Iowa, Mr. John L. Berry, which relates to the Gwynne amendment of the Wage and Hour Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

HARDSHIPS OF THE WAGE-HOUR LAW

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I had a letter this morning from a lady who tells me she is 73 years old. She writes that she cannot get old-age relief because she has not lived in the State for the past 5 years, but has been supporting herself by sewing, knitting, and crocheting in her home. On account of her age she cannot get work in a factory and now the only work she can do to earn a living has been taken away on account of the wage and hour law restrictions. She asks me:

> What am I going to do? How am I going to make a living? I cannot work at the only work I can do, I am not able to work in the factory if I could get a job, and I could not get the job anyway; I am not able to live on relief because I have not lived in the State for 5 years.

She closes with the plea:

> Do something at once to help an old lady.

I am receiving hundreds of letters along this same line. What a pity when people who can do a little work in the home like knitting, that they enjoy and at the same time earn a living, are not permitted to do so. No one intended when the wage and hour bill was passed that women in the home would come under the act. The trouble, I believe, is with the administration and this will be remedied with amendments to the act and this should be done at once, for hundreds of people are being thrown out of work in small industries and home work. But how are we going to take care of this old lady and others until the changes are made? [Applause.]

IMPORTED BRITISH WOOLENS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to an advertisement appearing in a local paper:

> Wear British fabrics.
> Tailored to measure.
> No two figures are exactly the same.
> Someone said the ready-made suit fits the average man, but find the average man * * *. He doesn't exist. Each individual is a different type, a different personality and—most important of all—no two figures are exactly the same.
> Let ——— tailor a spring suit—a suit that's made for you—for no more than the cost of a ready-made garment. Then let your mirror decide.

I also hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, samples of British fabrics sent to me directly from London, as if I wanted to buy a British suit, which I do not. I want to buy American manufactured fabrics by American labor. We can come to no other conclusion than that the reciprocal-trade agreement with Great Britain permits these fabrics to come in here and take the place of American manufactured fabrics. American labor and the products of American farmers, American cotton growers and American wool growers should have our consideration and our patronage. Mr. Speaker, we should take care of the American people, not the British people, at this time with 12,000,000 unemployed people. Buy American!

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a statement made by the Continental Mills of Philadelphia.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, these British suits can be sold in Central and South America at half what they are sold for in this country because of the high tariff the tariff barons had imposed when the Republicans were in power.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I give the gentleman these samples, showing they can be manufactured cheaper than American fabrics of this same quality, manufactured with high-price American labor and high American taxes.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. The regular order is: Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I herewith present a letter from Continental Mills, Inc., of Philadelphia, which was printed in the Daily News Record Wednesday, March 15:

> What's $4 anyway?
> Well, to an American workman $4 a month is $48 a year, or just enough to buy a suit of clothes for himself, a dress for the missus, and an outfit for the kids.
> Yet that is precisely the amount forfeited by every wool-textile craftsman in this country by reason of the imports of woolens and worsteds from Great Britain and other countries during the month of January.
> In the first month of the current year we imported 1,123,310 square yards of woolens, valued at $850,004. Of this amount, Great Britain shipped us 1,000,933 square yards, valued at $749,156. We imported 478,401 square yards of worsteds, valued abroad at $320,943. Of this amount, Great Britain shipped us 417,250 square yards, valued at $294,757.
> This represents an increase of approximately 200 percent in the value of wool goods and of approximately 100 percent in the value of worsteds imported during the same month in the previous year.
> The American value of these imports would be approximately $2,350,000, of which labor's share, when divided among the 150,000 men in American wool-textile plants, would be roughly $4 each for the month of January.
> Truly, the year of our Lord 1939 is proving a year of grace for America's trade rivals, for it marks the lowering of the barriers against the imports of products from poor-wage-paying countries in accordance with the altruistic policy of the present administration, which apparently holds that good feeling abroad must be engendered even at the expense of American industry and the American standard of living.
> Of course, the money diverted from our labor goes much further abroad! For instance, an English mill operative gets only one-half of the wages paid the native textile worker, the Italian gets one-fifth, the Japanese receives a tenth of the American scale. But, then, a full foreign stomach is essential to international amity.

Seeing that this invasion of the American market actually took place in a depressed business period like January, when hand-to-mouth buying prevailed, imagine the extent of the inroad in stabilized or boom times!

There is no doubt we are facing a tremendous growth in imports of wool textiles, to mention only one of the thousand and more items of American-made merchandise gravely affected by the reductions in tariff under the reciprocal-trade agreements. It is bound to aggravate American unemployment, to reduce the American living standard, and to impoverish our national income. Before the full effect of this new ideology is reflected in closed American plants and increased relief rolls, we suggest that American manufacturers and American workers bring strong pressure to bear on their congressional representatives for a show-down on the reciprocal trade phantasy.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be allowed to sit during the session of the House on May 3.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a letter from a public-school pupil on the subject of General Muhlenberg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an article appearing in the Wheeling Intelligencer.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein an editorial appearing in the Washington Star of March 29, 1939, on the subject Up to Congress.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two or three short bulletins.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I have asked unanimous consent to direct the attention of this House to a problem in legislation in which Congress, as well as the American consuming public are, or should be, interested.

I direct your particular attention to H. R. 944 by Congressman MARTIN of Colorado, known as the Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939. It is intended to help protect the consuming public from fraud and deception in the purchase of woolen goods.

Then I want also to direct your attention to the situation which has resulted from the reciprocal-trade agreement we made with Great Britain sometime ago—whereby we reduced the tariff from 18 to 9 cents per pound on woolen rags, as well as a reduction of 40 percent on wool waste.

Here is what happened: During January and February 1938, we imported wool waste from foreign countries to the extent of 162,000 pounds, valued at $73,000. This year, during the same 2 months, we imported 854,000 pounds of wool waste, valued at $280,000, an increase in shipment of 425 percent.

Besides that, the European rag man sold to the American rag dealers, to be made into wool or shoddy fabrics which the American public will wear, 1,824,000 pounds of old rags valued at $506,000 which is nine times more than we bought during the same 2 months' period, 2 years ago, which was before this agreement went into effect.

Not only that, we reduced the tariff on certain woolen materials imported into this country. Two years ago, and before the agreement became effective—during the months of January and February, we imported 1,000,000 yards of these fabrics. Then during January and February of this year, and while millions of our men were out of work—we increased that import to 1,800,000 yards of fabric.

All of these millions of yards of woolen fabric imported into this country under reduced tariffs are bound to not only take away a market to which the American producer is entitled, but at the same time deprives thousands of our American laborers from employment to which they are entitled.

I would like to quote a statement from Mr. Fred Breakman, National Grange representative in Washington, when he says:

> The result of this reduction in tariff duties is undoubtely a matter of great satisfaction to European scavengers and rag dealers, and to those American woolen manufacturers who use these raw materials as substitutes for virgin wool.

These wool rags I have just mentioned are used in the manufacture of so-called woolen fabrics and clothing and are sold to the American public in competition with and taking the place of virgin wool. Deprived of specific information, you and I, as consumers, have no means of knowing the fiber content of the products which we buy, or of judging their actual merit. The only means by which the average person can judge articles sold as wool is by a casual examination, and under the methods used in adulteration of woolen products—it is practically impossible for the consumer to determine the real thing.

What we need to do is to pass the Martin bill and require exact labeling as to fiber content of wool products to disclose the presence of virgin wool, reclaimed wool, or any other fiber contained therein, and to provide legal penalties for the violation of fair trade practice rules for the wool industry. Then, readjust our reciprocal-trade agreements in favor of our producers, our manufacturers, and our laborers, so that the American public will not be wearing European rags.

Mr. REES of Kansas and Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a letter from the California Conference of Deans of Men on the N. Y. A. program in California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an article from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I asked unanimous consent that business in order on Wednesday this week may be considered on tomorrow, Tuesday. The call rests with the Committee on Harbors. I have consulted the gentleman from Virginia, who would have the call following the Committee on Harbors, and the request I am about to make is perfectly agreeable to him. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] will not be able to be here tomorrow, due to the fact he has just come out of the hospital.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business on the calendar for tomorrow may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us what will come up tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. The Rules Committee has reported a rule on the so-called Hobbs bill and it is the intention to call that matter up tomorrow. The bill has to do with the regulation of certain people on whom deportation papers have been served but whose countries will not issue passports for them. The bill provides for taking care of them in some shape until their countries do act. I may say, however, before that matter is taken up the bills on the Private Calendar will be called.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is it the intention to call up the Navy appropriation bill on Wednesday?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is the intention now.

Mr. CELLER. How many hours general debate are provided?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know. The gentleman might ask a member of the Rules Committee or a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. This is the same House bill that is on the Consent Calendar today. Is that to be brought up tomorrow under a rule?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is to be brought up under a special rule reported by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That will be the only business to come up tomorrow?

Mr. RAYBURN. That and the Private Calendar.

Mr. BREWSTER. May I inquire of the majority leader whether the gentleman intended that Calendar Wednesday business go over 1 week?

Mr. RAYBURN. It will go over 1 week.

Mr. BREWSTER. Did the gentleman's request cover that?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes. I made the statement on last Thursday and asked unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday be transferred to tomorrow, Tuesday. This morning I asked unanimous consent that the business on the calendar for Tuesday be dispensed with, which will put it over until Wednesday of next week.

Mr. BREWSTER. There will not be a regular call of the calendar on Wednesday of this week?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; because it has already been dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

SURVEY VESSELS FOR THE UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The Clerk called the first bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 138, to authorize the construction of certain vessels for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]?

There was no objection.

NATIVE EMPLOYEES WHO DIE WHILE SERVING IN OFFICES ABROAD IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1523, an act to authorize the payment of burial expenses and expenses in connection with last illness and death of native employees who die while serving in offices abroad of executive departments of the United States Government.

Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. CHURCH, and Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin objected.

AMENDING TITLE II, SECTION 208, OF THE ACT OF JUNE 16, 1933

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4679, a bill to amend title II, section 208, of the act approved June 16, 1933 (48 Stat. 205–206), to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to adjust or cancel reimbursable features of said act insofar as they apply to Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE NATURALIZATION LAWS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4100, a bill to amend the naturalization laws in relation to an alien previously lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence and who is temporarily absent from the United States solely in his or her capacity as a regularly ordained clergyman or representative of a recognized religious denomination or organization existing in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I have had this matter up with the author of the bill, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], and we two, just speaking for ourselves, of course, have agreed on an amendment. If this amendment is yet satisfactory to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the amendment's being adopted, because the bill then as passed will accomplish what I really had in mind relating to clergymen. The amendment strikes out the provision relating to a representative of a denomination. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any alien who has been lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence and who has heretofore been or may hereafter be absent temporarily from the United States solely in his or her capacity as a regularly ordained clergyman or representative of a recognized religious denomination or organization existing in the United States, shall be considered as residing in the United States for the purpose of naturalization notwithstanding any such absence from the United States, but he or she shall in all other respects comply with the requirements of the naturalization laws. Such alien shall prove to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor and the naturalization court that his or her absence from the United States has been solely in the capacity hereinbefore described.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "or", insert "religious."

"SEC. 2. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of this act."

Amend the title.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which is, on page 1, line 7, after the word "clergymen", insert a comma and strike out all the remainder of line 7 and all of line 1 on top of page 2. This will include the new word supplied by the committee amendment, the word "religious."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the comma be eliminated, as there will be no necessity for the comma after the word "clergymen."

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is right; it will not be necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment with the comma eliminated.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JENKINS of Ohio: Beginning on page 1, line 7, after the word "clergymen", strike out the remainder of line 7 and all of line 1 on page 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend the naturalization laws in relation to an alien previously lawfully admitted into the United States for permanent residence and who is temporarily absent from the United States solely in his or her capacity as a regularly ordained clergyman or representative of a recognized religious denomination or religious organization existing in the United States."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I have received two letters regarding the bill just passed, which are as follows:

THE BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS,
UNITED LUTHERAN CHURCH IN AMERICA,
Baltimore, Md., April 5, 1939.

Hon. JOHN W. McCORMACK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have been informed that you have presented to the House bill H. R. 4100, which has to do with granting privilege to a clergyman who has regularly entered this country and secured his first citizenship papers to have the time he spends in another country under the direction of an organization in this land count as having fulfilled the years of residence in America when obtaining his full citizenship papers.

We have a young man who would come under this bill. We would like very much to have him serve under our board in one of our mission fields, but as sufficient time has not elapsed for him to secure his second papers, our rules do not permit of our employing him.

We are writing, therefore, to express our hearty approval of this bill and trust there will be no difficulty in having it passed. May we ask you to kindly send us a few copies of the bill?

Very truly yours,

GEORGE DRACH, General Secretary.
M. E. THOMAS, General Secretary.

INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY COUNCIL,
New York, N. Y., April 4, 1939.

The Honorable JOHN W. McCORMACK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. McCORMACK: With reference to the bill which you have introduced in the House, H. R. 4100, I am writing to let you know of my continued deep interest in the adoption of this legislation. The proposed legislation is essentially important in providing for the naturalization of clergymen of various religious denominations or others serving under recognized religious agencies existing in the United States who are sent abroad for important service before they have completed the required period of time for their naturalization as American citizens.

I have brought your bill to the attention of a few missionary organizations with the suggestion that they give you definite data regarding cases of individuals to whom your bill would apply.

I shall be greatly obliged if you will keep me informed regarding the progress that is made toward the adoption of this bill and also whether there is anything more that I can do in support of your proposal.

Yours faithfully,

A. L. WARNSHUIS.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

RED LAKE BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3248, authorizing a per capita payment of $15 each to the members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber on the Red Lake Reservation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw as much as may be necessary from the fund in the Treasury of the United States arising from the proceeds of the sale of timber and lumber within the Red Lake Reservation in Minnesota, according to the provisions of the act of May 18, 1916 (39 Stat. L. 137), and to make therefrom a per capita payment or distribution of $15 to each of the living members of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota, immediately payable upon the passage of this act, under such rules and regulations as the said Secretary may prescribe: Provided, That the money paid to the Indians as authorized herein shall not be subject to any lien or claim of attorneys or other parties: Provided further, That before any payment is made hereunder the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in Minnesota shall, in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, ratify the provisions of this act and accept same.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mrs. O'DAY, Mr. CELLER, and Mr. MARCANTONIO objected.

TRANSFER OF HORSES AND MULES TO HUMANE ORGANIZATIONS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5485, permitting the War Department to transfer old horses and mules to the care of reputable humane organizations.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

"That notwithstanding the first proviso in the fourth paragraph under the heading 'Division of Supply' in title I of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes', approved December 20, 1928 (45 Stat. 1030), horses and mules belonging to the United States which have become unfit for service may be destroyed or put out to pasture, either on the pastures belonging to the United States Government or those belonging to financially sound and reputable humane organizations whose facilities permit them to care for them during the remainder of their natural life, at no cost to the Government."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF GRAIN ELEVATORS AND GRAIN FIRMS

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 156, authorizing and directing the Comptroller General of the United States to certify for payments certain claims of grain elevators and grain firms to cover insurance and interest on wheat during the years 1919 and 1920 as per a certain contract authorized by the President.

Be it enacted, etc., That a new section be inserted in the act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900 (31 Stat. 141), as amended, immediately following section 86 thereof, to read as follows:

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LOSS OF UNITED STATES CITIZENSHIP IN CERTAIN CASES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5188, to provide for the loss of United States citizenship in certain cases.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation from the gentleman from New York with respect to this bill, and I withhold my objection for that purpose.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply deals with loss of United States citizenship by persons who go to foreign territories and vote in plebiscites and elections to annex territory of other countries or persons who vote as citizens in order for other countries to annex territory.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the House unanimously last year and passed the Senate with an amendment, but it came over here about a day before we adjourned and I could not get it up from the Speaker's desk.

The bill has nothing to do with immigration, except that it concerns certain persons amounting to more than 10,000, who in the last 2 or 3 years have voted in foreign countries, although citizens of the United States, to annex territory under these foreign dictatorial governments, and I submit that the committee feels that persons who go out and interest themselves in other countries sufficiently to vote and support other governments are not fit to be citizens of the United States of America.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the Immigration Committee to permit this bill to be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; if the Speaker will allow us the time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Is there anything special that is in the gentleman's mind?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; very much so. I think the House ought to know about this. The members of the committee were not given a chance to know about the discussions of last year or to know about this measure. This bill, Mr. Speaker, has to do with elections in foreign countries. It had its basis at the time the Germans had an election in the Saar territory, and it now has no purpose except further to engender complications with foreign lands, and we ought not to pass this bill. The bill is not necessary and will have a bad effect if it is passed, and for that reason I ask the gentleman to pass it over. If he does not agree to have it passed over, I shall be constrained to object.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. There is another vote about to be taken in other parts of the world.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is the very reason we ought not to get mixed up in it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And they are calling upon American citizens, of birth in those countries, irrespective of the fact they hold a certificate of citizenship in the United States, to vote in the plebiscite in such countries within the next month.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If every man who is in America will stay here and mind his own business, he will not have to go back there.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not want them to go back. I do not want them to vote in other elections. I submit to the gentleman from Ohio if he wants to be strict in his interpretation and feels that Americans ought to be for America, he ought to let this bill pass now without waiting another day.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. We ought not mix in these foreign matters. Let them attend to their own business. The only way to do it is to stay out of there.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The only way to stop them from mixing in is to cancel their papers when they attempt to vote in other parts of the world. Does the gentleman object to that? If the gentleman objects to that, then I——

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Oh, it will be the same story week after week. If the gentleman wants to be in that position——

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. My position is thoroughly satisfactory to me.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If you want an American citizen to go over there, whether to Italy or Germany or any other dictatorial country, and participate in voting there and in this country and still hold his citizenship, then you assume that responsibility.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio and Mr. McDOWELL objected.

TERMS OF COURT IN NORTHERN DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1652, to amend section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the terms of the Federal District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third sentence of section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. III, title 28, sec. 170), is amended to read as follows: "The terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Aberdeen on the first Mondays in April and October; for the western division, at Oxford on the first Mondays in June and December; and for the Delta division, at Clarksdale on the first Mondays in May and November."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 28, sec. 170), is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 90. The State of Mississippi is divided into two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern districts of Mississippi. Terms of the district court for the Jackson division shall be held at Jackson on the first Mondays in May and November; for the western division, at Vicksburg on the third Mondays in May and November; for the eastern division, at Meridian on the third Mondays in March and September; for the southern division, at Biloxi on the third Monday in February and the first Monday in June; and for the Hattiesburg division, at Hattiesburg on the second Mondays in April and October. The clerk of the court for each district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place in his district at which court is now required to be held, at which he shall not himself reside, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. The marshal for each of said districts shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place of holding court in his district.'

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1939."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a brief statement in regard to this bill, H. R. 1652. This bill, just passed in this House, was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary and was known as the Doxey bill. Since my bill was reported to the House, I find that the Senate has passed a bill not identical in language, but dealing with the same subject matter. The Senate bill was introduced by Senator HARRISON. The present bill which we have just considered was introduced by me. The Committee on the Judiciary has amended my bill, House bill 1652, and we have passed it as amended. I wonder if it would be in order to ask that the Senate bill be taken up and strike out all after the enacting clause in the Senate bill and substitute the House bill as amended? It is Senate 70. It deals with the identical subject matter except the language of the House bill is determined to be better language by the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask that all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill be stricken out and the House bill substituted.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield gladly.

Mr. McCORMACK. Both bills are in substance the same?

Mr. DOXEY. Both bills in substance are the same. The only distinction is that the House bill rewrites the entire section and incorporates the entire section 90 of the Judicial Code while the language of the Senate bill amends said section 90 by striking out and changing certain language in certain lines and sentences of section 90 of the Judicial Code. The House Judiciary Committee prefers and recommends the language of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 70, to amend section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended, with respect to the terms of the Federal District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the third sentence of section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. III, title 28, sec. 170), is amended to read as follows: "The terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Aberdeen on the first Mondays in April and October; for the western division, at Oxford on the first Mondays in June and December; and for the Delta division, at Clarksdale on the first Mondays in May and November."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1939.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DOXEY: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That section 90 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 28, sec. 170), is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 90. The State of Mississippi is divided into two judicial districts to be known as the northern and southern districts of Mississippi. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of December 1923 in the counties of Alcorn, Attala, Chickasaw, Choctaw, Clay, Itawamba, Lee, Lowndes, Monroe, Oktibbeha, Pontotoc, Prentiss, Tishomingo, and Winston, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Benton, Calhoun, Carroll, De Soto, Grenada, Lafayette, Marshall, Montgomery, Panola, Tate, Tippah, Union, Webster, and Yalabusha, which shall constitute the western division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bolivar, Coahoma, Leflore, Quitman, Sunflower, Tallahatchie, and Tunica, which shall constitute the Delta division of said district. The terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Aberdeen on the first Mondays in April and October; for the western division, at Oxford on the first Mondays in June and December; and for the Delta division, at Clarksdale on the first Mondays in May and November. The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of December 1923 in the counties of Amite, Copiah, Franklin, Hinds, Holmes, Leake, Lincoln, Madison, Pike, Rankin, Simpson, Smith, Scott, Wilkinson, and Yazoo, which shall constitute the Jackson division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Adams, Claiborne, Humphreys, Issaquena, Jefferson, Sharkey, Warren, and Washington, which shall constitute the western division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Clarke, Jasper, Kemper, Lauderdale, Neshoba, Newton, Noxubee, and Wayne, which shall constitute the eastern division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of George, Hancock, Harrison, Jackson, Pearl River, and Stone, which shall constitute the southern district of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Covington, Forrest, Greene, Jefferson Davis, Jones, Lamar, Lawrence, Marion, Perry, and Walthall, which shall constitute the Hattiesburg division. Terms of the district court for the Jackson division shall be held at Jackson on the first Mondays in May and November; for the western division, at Vicksburg on the third Mondays in May and November; for the eastern division, at Meridian on the third Mondays in March and September; for the southern division, at Biloxi on the third Monday in February and the first Monday in June; and for the Hattiesburg division at Hattiesburg on the second Mondays in April and October. The clerk of the court for each district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place in his district at which court is now required to be held, at which he shall not himself reside, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. The marshall for each of said districts shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at each place of holding court in his district.'

"SEC 2. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1939."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings whereby the bill H. R. 1652 was passed will be vacated, and the House bill laid on the table.

There was no objection.

CUSTODIAL SERVICE EMPLOYEES IN THE POSTAL SERVICE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 892, to extend to custodial service employees employed by the Post Office Department certain benefits applicable to postal employees.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every custodial-service employee (other than charmen and charwomen working part time) employed by the Post Office Department shall, at the end of each year's satisfactory service, be promoted to the compensation rate next higher than that of which he is then in receipt until the maximum rate of compensation for the grade to which his position is allocated is reached. This act shall be effective with respect to service after June 30, 1938.

This act shall not be applied so as to reduce the compensation of any custodial-service employee employed by the Post Office Department or so as to result in the dismissal of any such employee.

This act shall take effect July 1, 1939.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 9, after the word "reached", strike out the balance of line 9 and all of line 10.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: On page 1, line 5, after the word "Department", insert "and the Treasury Department."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane; that it attempts to bring into a bill relating to the Post Office Department an item relating to the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CELLER. Yes, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of the bill is to extend the same privileges to custodians in the Treasury Department that are extended to custodians in the Post Office Department.

Since the bill refers to persons in the custodial service, it is my belief that it would be germane to extend the provisions of the bill to another department other than the Post Office; namely, the Treasury Department.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] makes the point of order that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is not germane to the pending bill. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the point of order is well taken, for the reason that the pending bill deals with only one class of employees in one particular department. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] undertakes to include the employees of another department.

Under the general principles of parliamentary law and the precedents that an individual proposition may not be amended by another individual proposition even though the two belong to the same class, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL STOLEN PROPERTY ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1996, to amend the National Stolen Property Act.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the National Stolen Property Act, approved May 22, 1934 (48 Stat. 794; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 415), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

For the purposes of this act, the value of any falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited securities shall be considered to be the apparent or purported face, par, or market value, whichever is the greatest, of the securities so falsely made, forged, altered, or counterfeited."

SEC. 4. That section 6 of the National Stolen Property Act, approved May 22, 1934 (48 Stat. 794; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 418), is hereby amended to read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the National Stolen Property Act, approved May 22, 1934 (48 Stat. 794; U. S. C., title 18, secs. 413–419, inclusive), is hereby amended by inserting therein the following new section to be known as "section 7":

PUNISHMENT FOR TRANSPORTATION OF STOLEN ANIMALS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4372, to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in the last Congress when a similar bill was before the House I was the only Member of the House that voiced any objection. I stopped the passage of the bill by objecting to its consideration. Later I was advised by the Speaker that he proposed to recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to pass the bill under suspension of the rules. I realized that I would only be taking up the time of the House were I to attempt to force my lone objection against the opinion of the entire Judiciary Committee. Therefore, in order to conserve time I told the Speaker I would speak against the bill but let it come to a vote. The bill passed the House and also passed the Senate, but it received a pocket veto from the President. Here it is again back in the House today, despite the President's veto. It is true it can no longer be referred to as the chicken-stealing bill—chickens have been eliminated.

This bill now deals with cattle, hogs, and so forth, that might be stolen and taken over State lines.

I read with a great deal of interest some outstanding speeches made by members of the Judiciary Committee, one only a few days ago, protesting against the centralization of power in Washington; yet here we find coming from that great committee a bill to place in the control of the Federal Government the protection of cattle, hogs, and so forth. In other words, we are going after the cattle and hog thieves the same as we do after the kidnapers if this bill becomes a law. Why not transfer all the police powers of the States to the Federal Government and be done with it?

The President has vetoed this bill once, not because it contained chickens but on other grounds. The Attorney General is opposed to the bill as stated by his letter included in this report.

Mr. Speaker, I have not changed by mind in reference to the advisability of placing such police powers in the hands of the Federal Government. Therefore, I must object to the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CLEVELAND NATIONAL FOREST, SAN DIEGO COUNTY, CALIF.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 169, to facilitate the control of soil erosion and/or flood damage originating upon lands within the exterior boundaries of the Cleveland National Forest in San Diego County, Calif.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object is there anybody here prepared to explain the bill?

Mr. DOXEY. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I am prepared to explain the bill. I reported the bill from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. TABER. The bill seems to me to be pretty well mixed up. I think the same observation applies to the following three bills.

Mr. DOXEY. They are all similar, the same principle is involved. I reported all three bills.

Mr. TABER. Beginning in line 6 on page 2, I read the following language:

Which are equal to the proportion of the net areas of said forest which are within the county of San Diego, State of California, which receipts are hereby authorized to be appropriated for that purpose until said lands have been acquired: Provided, That as to the receipts used in the manner herein authorized the provisions of the act approved May 23, 1908, shall not be applicable to said county of San Diego.

The thing seems to be kind of mixed up, and I would appreciate the gentleman's explaining the bill.

Mr. DOXEY. I shall be pleased to, as best I can.

Briefly, these three bills refer to the Cleveland National Forest, the Angeles National Forest, and the Sequoia National Forest, all located in California. They are, of course, separate and distinct national forests. The bill under consideration refers to the Cleveland National Forest. Within this forest area are several counties. The law passed in 1908 provided that 25 percent of the gross receipts from the national forests should revert to the counties wherein the land is located within the boundaries of the national forest. In 1911 Congress passed a law providing that an additional 10 percent should go back to the counties within the national forests for roads and trails. This made a total of 35 percent that such counties receive out of the gross receipts from the sale of timber from national forests or from other receipts of the forests, such as recreation, grazing, and so forth.

In every national forest, especially in these three, are a lot of privately owned lands that the Government has never been able to buy. These privately owned lands cannot be managed as well as the Government-owned lands. The mismanagement of these privately owned lands adversely affects the Government lands and the forest in general. The present administration, through the National Forest Reservation Commission, of which I am a member, has been endeavoring to buy some of these lands in these national forests now owned by private individuals. We have not been able to buy all of the privately held lands, because of the lack of funds and for various other reasons.

Here is a county located within the Cleveland National Forest, San Diego County, Calif., which says: "We know the wisdom of buying these privately owned lands that are within this national forest. It is necessary in order to adequately protect the balance of the forests. It is true we get 35 percent of the gross receipts, but we are so interested in buying these private lands in order to protect and improve the national forests from erosion and other destruction that we, the county, are willing to forego and give our 35 percent that is coming to us to the Government to be used in acquiring these lands. In other words, we want the Government to take the 35 percent and use it to buy these private lands within the area of the forests as they now exist."

This is, in substance, a petition from the board of supervisors of the counties in these three national forests, requesting the Government to do what these three bills provide. If the gentleman has any valid objection I want to hear it, because I have given a great deal of study to this question. When a county is willing to say to the Government that it will pay more than one-fourth to buy these lands if the Government will put up the other three-fourths, when the Government has authority to do it, I do not see where there can be any valid objection. It certainly is not a novel situation. Where the facts and circumstances justify it, as they do in these three bills, the law certainly should be enacted as provided in these bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture, with the approval of the National Forest Reservation Commission, established by section 4 of the act of March 1, 1911 (U. S. C., title 16, sec. 513), is hereby authorized to acquire by purchase any lands within the boundaries of the Cleveland National Forest in the county of San Diego, State of California, which, in his judgment, should become the property of the United States in order that they may be so managed with other lands of the United States as to minimize soil erosion and flood damage, and to pay for said lands, from those proportions of the entire receipts from the occupancy of public land or the sale of natural resources other than mineral, within the Cleveland National Forest, which are equal to the proportion of the net areas of said forest which are within the county of San Diego, State of California, which receipts are hereby authorized to be appropriated for that purpose until said lands have been acquired: Provided, That so long as said receipts are used in the manner herein authorized the provisions of the act approved May 23, 1908 (U. S. C., title 16, sec. 500), shall not be applicable to said county of San Diego.

WEST POINT MILITARY RESERVATION, N. Y.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3131, to authorize the Secretary of War to convey certain lands owned by the United States for other lands needed in connection with the expansion of West Point Military Reservation, N. Y., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to get some information on this bill. How many acres of land is the Government going to convey and how many acres is the Government going to receive?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman there are approximately 718 acres of ground the Government wishes to acquire. They are exchanging 416 acres of their own land for 416 acres of the new land. They will, therefore, have to purchase the balance. The cost of the balance will be approximately $10,000, or about $35 an acre. The property the War Department desires to dispose of is at the far end of the West Point Military Reservation, off in a canyon far removed from the academy itself. The ground they would acquire fits into the central portion of the land they now own, bringing it closer to the academy itself. It adjoins part of the firing range the students of the academy are using. This land will serve to round out the academy ground and make a unified whole out of it. This simply cuts off an extreme portion of the land that is not available for practical use by the academy.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The total additional cost to the Government will be how many thousand dollars?

Mr. COSTELLO. Approximately $10,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey to the Palisades Interstate Park Commission, a joint corporate municipal instrumentality of the States of New York and New Jersey, all or any part of a certain tract of land, in the vicinity of Popolopen Creek, Orange County, New York, containing approximately 302 acres and constituting a part of the West Point Military Reservation, N. MINIMUM NATIONAL ALLOTMENTS FOR COTTON

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 247, to provide minimum national allotments for cotton.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry objection was made to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 247, providing for an allotment of cotton for the year following 1939, because I was anxious to insert the following amendment on page 1 at the end of line 8:

Provided, That allotments of acreage to the various States be based upon the ratio of the number of cotton growers and their dependents in each State bears to the total number of such persons in the United States.

Possibly the amendment would have been defeated, but I am so thoroughly convinced of the fairness and justice of this amendment to all persons who grow cotton that I was anxious to have the matter presented for discussion so that at some future date the policy provided might be accepted and adopted as a permanent policy, provided the Federal Government is going to continue to regulate acreage and allocate production.

It is not my purpose at this time to discuss the various phases of the existing agricultural program. It is sufficient to say that it has quite a number of very meritorious features, but I have to confess there are some provisions of the law or practices in the administration that operate against what might be classed as the small cotton farmer, and if the present program is to be conducted he will always be classed as a small and unsuccessful cotton grower.

The provisions of this amendment are so plain they hardly need explanation. It simply provides that in the allocation of cotton acreage to the various States the acreage should be on the basis of farm population, and this is to be obtained in each State in the proportion the number of cotton growers and their dependents bear to the total number of such persons growing cotton in the United States. Such an arrangement would give every man or person the same opportunity for growing cotton, and I submit that this is only fair, because if the Government is going to regulate acreage and production it should not discriminate against the future opportunities by limiting them to past activities. Such a program as that affords no incentive whatever for the ambitious son to improve on the farming operation of his father or whoever may have been in charge of the farm he plans to operate and live on the balance of his life.

The point I want to emphasize is that it takes as much to feed, clothe, and educate a man and his family in one section of the Cotton Belt as it does in any other section of the belt, and if his farming operations are going to be regulated by the Federal Government in order to give him what is sometimes referred to as the "more abundant life" this man and his family should have the same opportunities in one State for the purposes named as he can have in any other State. In other words, it is not fair to say to Mr. A and his family that he is entitled to only 10 acres of cotton and then say to Mr. B, who has the same size family and same equipment as Mr. A, that he shall be entitled to 30 acres. That is, one is expected to work out his future economic salvation with 10 acres whereas another similarly situated is given 30 acres with which to do the same thing. I am fully aware that this situation exists in many cases and when left to the discretion and ambitions of each of these families there is no injustice, but the point I am making and emphasizing is that if the Federal Government is going to exercise such authority as to control and regulate the possibilities and opportunities of these two families there is no reason why it should not be fair and just enough to say to them that they will have the same opportunity if they want it and are willing to discharge their obligation to themselves and their families. I know there will be objections to this amendment by the very large cotton farmer because it decreases his opportunity for making and amassing money by the program we have heretofore adopted. It is primarily for the purpose of assisting farmers in making a decent living and affording a fair chance to give all farmers and their children an equal opportunity in life. It is not for the purpose of affording protection to enormous landholders to profit by this policy and make more money, while others only eke out a subsistence. If such matters were left to the individuals to do and act as they have done in former years there could be no objection, but when the Federal Government comes in and undertakes to make plans for the future economy of the people who are engaged in this particular occupation it should inaugurate a program that will give each an opportunity in a program or policy.

In case my proposed amendment is proven to be wrong I will not hesitate to admit that I am mistaken, but my reason in taking up your time now is to submit the proposal and to say that it shall be my purpose to prosecute this idea until it is shown to me that it is not wise, just, or fair to all concerned.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD in regard to the bill just passed, H. R. 2875, and to include therein a report by Gen. Frank D. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the bill H. R. 2875 was first inadvertently objected to through a misunderstanding, so I am informed by the gentleman who made the objection, I desire to place in the RECORD a full explanation of the bill. The bill provides that pensions payable to the widows and orphans of deceased veterans of the Spanish-American War, Boxer Rebellion, or Philippine Insurrection shall be effective as of date of death of the veteran if the claim is filed within 1 year thereafter. It has been favorably recommended by the Veterans' Administration and the Bureau of the Budget. The report of Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, fully explains the purpose of the bill. The report is as follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, March 29, 1939.

Hon. MARTIN F. SMITH,
Chairman, Committee on Pensions,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: This is with further reference to your letter of January 23, 1939, requesting a report on H. R. 2875, Seventy-sixth Congress, a bill to provide that pensions payable to the widows and orphans of deceased veterans of the Spanish-American War, Boxer Rebellion, or Philippine Insurrection shall be effective as of date of death of the veteran, if claim is filed within 1 year thereafter, which provides as follows:

"That notwithstanding any provisions of law or veterans' regulation, awards of death pension shall be effective as of the date of death of the veteran of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer Rebellion and Philippine Insurrection, if claim is filed within 1 year after the death of such veteran."

Under the general pension law original awards of death pension to widows and children commence the day following the date of the veteran's death. Under the Spanish-American War Service Pension Acts original awards of death pension to widows commence the date of filing formal application. The same is true as to children, except that under the act of May 1, 1926, in case of death or remarriage of a pensioned widow or forfeiture of her title to pension, then payments commence from the date of such death, remarriage, or forfeiture.

Under Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, and the veterans' regulations, awards of death pension to widows and children of the Spanish-American War, Boxer Rebellion, and the Philippine Insurrection are fixed in accordance with the facts found, except that no award of death pension or compensation shall be effective prior to the date of the veteran's death, date of the happening of the contingency upon which death pension or compensation is allowed, or the date of receipt of application thereof, whichever is the later date.

Section 210 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, provided in part "That no compensation shall be payable for any period more than 1 year prior to the date of claim therefor. * * *." However, that provision was superseded by the rule prescribed by the veterans' regulation under Public, No. 2, referred to above.

It should be borne in mind that there is no law providing a service pension for widows and children of World War veterans, the nearest approach to such legislation being Public, No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, as amended, "An act to compensate widows and children of persons who died while receiving monetary benefits for disabilities directly incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service in the World War."

Under the provisions of that act it was provided "That payment shall be effective from the date of enactment of this act in all cases where death occurred prior to the date of enactment of this act and in all other cases payment shall be made from the date the application of the widow, child, or children in the form prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, is filed in the Veterans' Administration: * * *." However, the rules prescribed by the veterans regulations and by Public, No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, as amended, were superseded by the provisions of section 6 of Public, No. 304, Seventy-fifth Congress, August 16, 1937, which provides "That notwithstanding any provision of law or veterans regulation, awards of death compensation shall be effective as of the date of death of the World War veteran if claim is filed within 1 year after the death of such veteran."

Summing up, widows and children of veterans of the Spanish-American War, Boxer Rebellion, or the Philippine Insurrection, lose monetary benefits in the form of service pensions for every day that they delay in filing claim for such benefits after the veteran's death, and it appears rather harsh to require such persons to protect themselves against such loss by taking steps as soon as the next day following the date of the veteran's death in order to receive maximum benefit. No matter how long the veteran may have been sick and his death imminent, the passing on of the husband and father inevitably results in considerable shock to members of his family. Furthermore, most people are reluctant in taking steps immediately after the death of a loved one toward the collection of money due on account of the death. There is the further consideration that most people do not know that an application, no matter how informal, will protect their rights, and, of course, they do not have formal application at hand, nor do they always have the information necessary to execute such applications. It appears that these were at least some of the considerations which led to the enactment of section 6 of Public, No. 304, Seventy-fifth Congress, liberalizing the effective date of awards of death-compensation benefits to dependents of World War veterans, including such grants for death not due to service under Public, No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, as amended.

It is estimated that this bill would affect 500 cases at an estimated cost for the fiscal year 1940 of approximately $35,600.

It is the recommendation of the Veterans' Administration that the bill receive favorable consideration by your committee.

Advice has been received from the Acting Director, Bureau of the Budget, that there would be no objection by that office to the presentation of this report to your committee.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 111, House Joint Resolution 156, objected to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]. I explained the purpose of the bill to him, and he has withdrawn his objection.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of Public Law No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, June 28, 1934, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the surviving widow, child or children, or dependent mother or father of any deceased person who served in the World War before November 12, 1918, or if the person was serving with the United States military forces in Russia before April 2, 1920, who dies or has died from a disease or disability not service-connected and at the time of death had a disability directly or presumptively incurred in or aggravated by service in the World War for which compensation would be payable if 10 percent or more in degree, shall upon filing application and such proofs in the Veterans' Administration as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may prescribe, be entitled to receive compensation: Provided, That payment of compensation under the provisions of this act shall not be made to any unmarried person whose annual income exceeds $1,000, or to any married person or any person with minor children whose annual income exceeds $2,500, and in determining annual income, payments of war-risk term insurance, United States Government life (converted) insurance, and payments under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, ch. 11), and the Adjusted Compensation Payment Act, 1936, as amended, shall not be considered: Provided further, That no compensation shall be paid to a dependent mother or father, or both, in excess of an amount which if added to the monthly payment of automatic insurance or yearly renewable term insurance to either or both such parents would exceed the amount of compensation herein authorized: Provided further, That except as provided in section 6 of Public Law No. 304, Seventy-fifth Congress, August 16, 1937 (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 472 (d)), compensation authorized by this act shall not be payable effective prior to the receipt of application therefor in the Veterans' Administration, but in no event shall compensation herein authorized be effective prior to the date of enactment of this act."

SEC. 2. Section 4 of Public Law No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, June 28, 1934, as amended by section 2 of Public Law No. 304, Seventy-fifth Congress, August 16, 1937 (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 506), and Public Law No. 514, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved May 13, 1938 (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 506), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. For the purpose of awarding compensation under the provisions of this act, as amended, service connection of a disability at the date of death may be determined in any case where a claim has been or is filed by the widow, child, or children, or dependent mother or father, of a deceased World War veteran, except that proof of disability at the date of death and evidence as to service connection may be filed at any time after the date of enactment of this act or the date of death, and evidence required in connection with any claim must be submitted in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs."

SEC. 3. Section 2 of Public Law No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 504), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That monthly rate of compensation shall be as follows: Widow but no child, $30; widow with one child, $38 (with $4 for each additional child); no widow but one child, $15; no widow but two children, $22 (equally divided); no widow but three children, $30 (equally divided) (with $3 for each additional child; total amount to be equally divided); dependent mother or father, $45 (or both) $25 each.

"As to the widow, child, or children, the total compensation payable under this paragraph shall not exceed $64. Where such benefits would otherwise exceed $64, the amount of $64 may be apportioned as the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs may prescribe."

SEC. 4. Section 3 of Public Law No. 484, Seventy-third Congress, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 505), is hereby amended by adding thereto a new paragraph (d), to read as follows:

"(d) The term 'mother' or 'father' shall mean a natural mother or father of the veteran, or mother or father of the veteran through legal adoption."

SEC. 5. Effective on the first day of the month next following the date of enactment of this act the rates of death compensation payable under the provisions of existing laws or veterans' regulations to a surviving widow, child, or children, and/or dependent mother or father now on the rolls or hereafter to be placed on the rolls as the surviving widow, child, or children, and/or dependent mother or father of any World War veteran who died as result of injury or disease incurred in or aggravated by active military or naval service in the World War, shall be as follows:

Widow, age under 50 years, $37.50; widow, aged 50 years or over, $45; widow with one child, $10 additional for such child up to 10 years of age, increased to $15 from age 10 (with $8 for each additional child up to 10 years of age, increased to $13 from age 10) (subject to apportionment regulations); no widow but one child, $20; no widow but two children, $33 (equally divided); no widow but three children, $46 (equally divided) (with $8 for each additional child, total amount to be equally divided); dependent mother or father, $45 (or both) $25 each. As to the widow, child, or children, the total compensation payable under this paragraph shall not exceed $82.50. The amount of compensation herein authorized shall be paid in the event monthly payment of compensation under Veterans Regulation No. 1 (g) and the monthly payment of yearly renewable term or automatic insurance does not aggregate or exceed the amount of compensation herein authorized.

As to the surviving widow, child, or children, and/or dependent mother or father on the rolls on the date of enactment of this act, any increased award herein authorized shall be effective from the date of enactment of this act and in all other cases, except as provided in section 6 of Public Law No. 304, Seventy-fifth Congress, approved August 16, 1937, effective dates of awards shall be governed by the provisions of veterans' regulations promulgated under Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, March 20, 1933.

SEC. 6. Subparagraph (k) of paragraph II, part I, of Veterans' Regulation No. 1 (a), promulgated under Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, March 20, 1933, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(k) If the disabled person, as the result of service-incurred disability, has suffered the anatomical loss or the loss of the use of only one foot, or one hand, or one eye, the rate of pension provided in part I, paragraph II (a) to (j), shall be increased by $25 per month: Provided, That in no event shall the rate of pension (including the $25 increase) for anatomical loss of one foot, or one hand, or one eye be less than $100 per month."

SEC. 7. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to insert in the rating schedules of the Veterans' Administration a minimum rating of permanent partial 10 percent for wounds incurred in line of duty in active service during the World War.

SEC. 8. On and after the date of this enactment, the rate of interest charged on any loan secured by a lien on United States Government life (converted) insurance shall not exceed 5 percent per annum.

Mr. RANKIN (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the bill be dispensed with but that the bill be printed in full at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentlewoman from Massachusetts is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the relief of certain World War veterans, their widows, orphans, and certain dependent parents.

The first section provides for increasing the compensation for veterans and for the surviving widows and orphans of certain veterans of the World War. Section 2 of the bill amends section 4 of Public Law No. 484. Section 5 of the bill also increases compensation to widows and orphans of veterans with service-connected disabilities; and section 6 amends the present law by increasing the compensation to those battle casualties—men who lost arms, legs, or eyes during the World War—by giving them a minimum of $100 a month. The bill also provides for reducing the insurance on loans on veterans' insurance policies to 5 percent and, as I said, it also takes care of certain dependent parents of veterans of the World War, which veterans had service-connected disabilities but died from other causes.

The bill also changes present law to provide that widows and orphans or dependents of World War veterans, which veterans have service-connected disabilities of less than 10 percent but who died of other causes, would, under the present law, be compensated as if their disabilities amounted to 10 percent, and may be given compensation at the same rate provided under Public Act 484.

It also provides that any veterans having battle wounds shall be rated not less than 10-percent disabled.

Sections 3 and 4, you will find by referring to the report, add 3,000 new cases to the rolls. They increase compensation to 14,850 widows and 5,200 dependent parents. The total cost of these sections will amount to $5,032,000 a year. The rest of the bill, according to the estimate of the Veterans' Administration, will bring the entire cost up to $18,750,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, I realize this bill may not go as far as some Members would like to have it go. I realize it probably goes farther than some Members would like to have it go. But we worked on it for a long time, and under the circumstances did the best we could, and we think this measure should be passed.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The committee asked me to use every means possible to bring the measure before the House, and this is the first opportunity I have had. It does not close the door, however, to other veterans' legislation. These cases are so important, however, we think this measure should pass now.

There are some Members who may think we are going a step afield by taking care of the dependent parents of those deceased boys. Some Members have suggested that we put them under social security. If we did, in some States they would get five times as much as they would in other States.

Mr. Speaker, this was a national war, and so long as I am head of this committee I am never going to permit the disabled veterans or their dependents to be shoved off onto the social security and be discriminated against, as the old people are being discriminated against in the different States under the Social Security Act. This having been a national war, a national proposition, we are writing these salutary provisions into national law.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. So the record may be complete, will the gentleman kindly state what the committee is going to do to take care of the widows of veterans who did not have any service-connected disability?

Mr. RANKIN. There are measures now pending before the committee covering that proposition. We will probably take them up later. As the gentleman knows, there are 21 members on that committee and the chairman does not control it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I know the chairman is sympathetic to that kind of legislation.

Mr. RANKIN. I secured the passage of a bill of that kind some years ago, but it died in the Senate.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks at this point, I wish to call attention to the fact that this bill was unanimously reported out of the World War Veterans' Committee.

As ranking minority member of the committee, I do not wish to take up the time of the House in discussing its merits, but would rather have the newer members of the committee have the opportunity.

I believe the bill is a helpful step in the right direction and will do a great deal of good. I am very sorry it did not go further in its provisions, especially for the widows and orphans. For years I have been working to have them given higher rates of compensation, and I am delighted that the measure has done something in this direction. The provision giving an increase to certain amputation cases will aid a number of men who have been heavily handicapped. I earnestly hope that in the near future injustices and inequalities may be adjusted and that benefits which were taken away may be restored. There is still much legislation needed for the veterans and their dependents.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to speak in opposition to the legislation proposed in this bill, but I do want to say that I am disappointed with the provisions of the bill. I had hoped that the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation would put the important things first.

This bill, in my opinion, does not correct the injustices of existing legislation in that it does not adequately provide for the widows, dependent parents, and orphans of the men who died in the service or as a direct result of service. I believe the Members of this House are familiar with the Canadian rates paid to the widows of those men who died in the service of Great Britain, and I believe they are familiar with the French rates as well. We have never properly cared for that comparatively small group of people.

I maintain it is a crying shame and a disgrace for this wealthy Government to pay only $30, $40, or even $45 to the widow of a man who enlisted or who was drafted and who gave his life in the World War. The very minimum, in my humble opinion, should be $75 or $80 a month in order that those widows might live in the same comfort that they had every reason to expect they would have had if their husbands had not gone to the war.

I am also disappointed that the committee has not included in this bill a provision restoring the so-called presumptive group to full compensation. These men who were put on the rolls as the result of the presumptive act were told in 1922 and 1923:

> You do not need to submit evidence and we do not want affidavits. It is presumed under the law that your disability is due to service.

These men are now receiving 75 percent of what they should receive, and that injustice will continue as a result of the Economy Act until the Congress restores them to their rightful place on the pension rolls.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this bill is a departure from previous veterans' legislation in that in its effort to correct injustices among the so-called battle casualty cases it enacts what seems to me to be a new type of legislation. I know several veterans of the World War who have on their bodies the scars of machine-gun bullets and shrapnel, flesh wounds, if you please, who, under this act, will receive $10 a month. I sent a copy of this bill to many of those men, and without exception their answer is substantially as follows: "Yes; I have a flesh wound, but it has never bothered me. If the Government cannot take care of all of us, for God's sake send my $10 to the widows of those soldiers we left in France."

In the minute remaining I would like to refer to the provision of this bill that provides the minimum compensation of $100 per month for the loss of a limb. In this section we are trying to write legislation that prior to this time has been taken care of by the rating tables of the Veterans' Administration. I feel that this legislation will unbalance the existing rating schedules. What is the disabled veteran who is suffering from tuberculosis, certain heart conditions, or even gastric ulcers, and who spends 25 or 50 percent of his time in bed or sick at home, going to think when he receives a rating of $35 to $40, while his next door neighbor, who has suffered the loss of a limb, perhaps below the knee and who wears an artificial limb without discomfort, dances, skates, and so forth, receives $100 under this act? The Veterans' Administration should be permitted to make proper allowance in the case of a man who, for physical reasons, cannot wear an artificial limb. If we set a minimum of $100 for the loss of, say, one foot, how will we adequately compensate a man who has lost both arms? Certainly the loss of two arms is twice as disabling as the loss of one foot.

It is impossible to write a law that will cover every known disability, and I would much prefer to see such matters controlled by the Veterans' Administration under rating schedules.

Section 7 of this bill will place on the compensation rolls thousands of veterans who, while they have scars caused by machine-gun bullets and shrapnel, have suffered no ill effects during the past 20 years. Many of these men have not applied for compensation and have no intention of doing so. Here again this matter can be better cared for by adequate and proper rating schedules. It is true that many men are rated at 10-percent, 15-percent, or 20-percent disabled, who should be rated higher. Young doctors in the Veterans' Administration who have not had the experience of probing for shrapnel, cannot visualize from the scars the internal damage caused by the shrapnel. I cannot approve a bill such as this, containing some very desirable features and some not desirable, because it causes us to vote for bad legislation. But if we desire to secure much-needed benefits, the fact that widows of men who died in service will receive increased compensation is sufficient reason for any Member of the House to support this bill, and because of the section relating to these widows I will, of course, vote for the passage of this legislation.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

In reply to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], I desire to say that I agree with him and that we gave these widows of service-connected veterans a substantial increase, and also provided for the widows and orphans of the presumptive cases. I was one of the men in the House who opposed what was called the economy bill when those presumptives were cut off, and I was one of the men who helped to raise them back to 75 percent.

With reference to the 10 percent, I wish to say that these veterans who do not desire to make claim now do not have to do so, but under this bill if they die of some other disability their widows and orphans will be cared for.

With reference to the amputation cases, I call attention to the fact that there are a great many men with hands off at the wrist or feet off at the ankle who have suffered untold misery since the close of the World War. They were not properly compensated, in my opinion. We took this proposition and went through it from every angle and decided that this was the best way to reach them without further unbalancing the rating schedule of the Veterans' Administration. So, as I said, we did the very best we could.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. Can the gentleman tell me whether this new bill will cover the case we will say of a veteran who had a service-connected disability and as a result of that service-connected disability had to have, we will say, his leg removed? Will this cover a case of that sort and allow that veteran a minimum of $100 a month if the removal of the leg occurred in, say, 1919?

Mr. RANKIN. If the loss of that limb was caused by a service-connected disability, my opinion is that it will.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman tell us if it is the intention of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation to set minimum ratings for all major disabilities, such as of the heart, lungs, and stomach?

Mr. RANKIN. No; we have to depend to some extent on the rating schedule of the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. MILLER. Is not this providing for a separate group and treating it separately?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I may say to the gentleman from Connecticut he is right. We made a special effort to take care of this special class of men who have lost hands and who have lost legs or had an eye knocked out, and who have not been adequately compensated in comparison with other men who have been similarly disabled by losing an arm above the elbow or a leg above the knee.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to emphasize what the distinguished and able chairman of our committee [Mr. RANKIN] said when he remarked that the passage of this bill does not mean that it precludes further legislation on behalf of veterans in this session. If it were not for that fact, I myself would be disappointed at some of the things that are not included in this bill. This bill represents an effort on the part of the committee to include matters which we feel quite certain are going to pass this House speedily, we hope with hardly a dissenting vote, go through the Senate with equal speed, and certainly become law.

As the gentleman from Connecticut has pointed out, there are evidently matters, even matters of clear justice, which have not been adequately dealt with in this bill. For my own part, the way I feel about these matters is approximately as follows:

None of us likes the idea of relief. All of us want to see the American people either employed or in some dignified manner taken care of according to what they definitely deserve. To my mind, the more we can do in the way of taking care of the need of widows of the men who served in the World War and the more we can do toward taking care of disabled men who served in that war, doing it in such a fashion that it is an evident expression of the gratitude of this Government instead of being a part of a relief system, the better off we are. It is from the standpoint that we recognize that the veteran has made sacrifice for the welfare of the United States and for that reason we should make provision for his need that I believe legislation of this character is fundamentally right and should be supported by everybody.

I myself would like very much to see the presumption of service connection restored in the case of every veteran who served in combat or was exposed to enemy fire or other dangers of that kind. Indeed, I feel that in the cases of veterans in that group the law should definitely state that the burden of proof should be on the Government to prove that his disabilities are not service connected. I hope that objective, which happens to be one in which I believe a great many people are interested, can be realized before this session is over.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Gladly.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentelman tell us whether under section 7 a person who suffered from gas would be treated the same as a person who was wounded by, say, a machine gun? Gas allows a wound stripe, but I do not know whether it is considered a wound in the Administration.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I know what would happen if I were administering the law, but I am afraid I cannot answer the gentleman's question. I am not certain what they would do about that.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I assume, perhaps, if it were a gas burn, it might be considered a wound.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

I believe another matter that needs to be taken up is the matter of allowance for permanent and total disability on the part of veterans. I think all of us have had the experience of finding that under present law a great many times a man who is in receipt of $30 for permanent and total disability will, however, be debarred from getting a W. P. A. job, for example, or will be told by a State relief administration in a certain State that because he is in receipt of this allowance for his war service, therefore he is ineligible for a W. P. A. job, while his next-door neighbor is on the eligible list. Therefore in some cases the veteran is penalized because of the very fact of his service. This clearly is wrong. For that reason I am hopeful that progress can be made in increasing the allowance that is now made for permanent and total disability to a point where it will at least come somewhere near to being enough to meet the needs of these permanently and totally disabled men and their families.

Now, may I make this appeal to the House: Please remember that legislation of this kind, considered by a committee carefully and over a long period, has been considered not only from the standpoint of what that committee would like to do, but from the standpoint of what that committee is confident can definitely be passed and become a law in a short space of time. That is the sort of bill we have before us. It will be helpful to many people—not as helpful as some of us would like—but better than what we have now. Let us go forward from this point. [Applause.]

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, nothing is more important at this time to the people of this country than that the United States keep out of war. All this talk about the necessity of America playing her part in world affairs to save democracy is nonsense if it means a risk of this country's being involved in another foreign war. If such an unhappy event materializes, it will mean the end of democracy in this land; it will mean the establishment of a Fascist regime of government regulation, restriction, and bureaucracy that we never could throw off.

Similar nonsense is talk that business—big business, if you please—would have no objection to this country's again participating in war. People who utter such talk stupidly believe that the men who manage business in this country are so short-sighted that they only can see immediate profits. Our businessmen, thank God, know that all American economy would be irretrievably disrupted if this country goes into another war. They likewise have sons who would have to do the fighting. As patriotic Americans, businessmen are against war. I am happy to see the leaders of business, through the National Association of Manufacturers, speaking out along these lines at this time.

As part of my remarks I wish to include the full text of a resolution adopted last Friday by the board of directors of the National Association of Manufacturers, declaring their unalterable opposition to war. The text of this resolution follows:

The National Association of Manufacturers is unalterably opposed to war.

This is the position of the manufacturers, both large and small, as represented by this association. In the words of George Washington, they are opposed to any "entangling alliances."

The devastation of modern war is all-embracing. It takes a withering toll of human and economic forces. No sensible person believes that profit can come out of the wreckage of human lives and economic dislocations.

History has answered that question. Progress comes through peace, not war. Free nations have everything to lose in war. Free institutions are reared through peace and cooperation. Conflict destroys them.

American industry wants peace. This purpose has been frequently and forcefully declared in the previous platforms adopted by the Congress of American industry. American manufacturers pledged every effort to maintain peace.

Happy homes and steady jobs, the ideal of every American, can be achieved only through the pursuits of peace.

The Republic is now at peace. May the God of Nations preserve us from the calamity of war.

Mr. HALLECK asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and to include therein a statement referred to by him.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

FLAGRANT INJUSTICES PERPETRATED ON VETERANS IN THE NAME OF THE LAW

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, it is essential that we do justice to our veterans. There is considerable basis for doubt as to our performance in this respect, judging from the records which are available in the files of every veterans' organization throughout the United States. From the facts which I shall place in the RECORD today in connection with the debate on this bill, H. R. 5452, it is evident that we need to amend the present law, as we propose to do if we are to do justice to the veterans, and before we can take very much credit as lawmakers interested in the veterans. Cases such as these which I am about to present to the consideration of the House are to be found in every local branch or facility of the Veterans' Administration. I have picked out only a few cases at random which are in the records of the service officers of the various veterans' organizations throughout the country. There are literally thousands of similar cases in existence in which unjust treatment has been accorded our soldiers, sailors, and marines who offered their all when the country called for their valiant service and perhaps even the supreme sacrifice.

Here is presented a great problem—one of the greatest which will come before this session of Congress. It is even a tragic problem to these boys now grown to men who still carry in their broken bodies the ravages of Mars, the demon god of war. It is a problem to us who are intent on rendering a conscientious service to our country.

Because most of us are too busy to be able to give much consideration to any problems except those involved in our own committee assignments, I have condensed for your benefit these cases which tend to indicate that there is much to be accomplished in a legislative way if we are to render justice.

Two of the main items included in this bill are sections 7 and 8, and I call your special attention to them. They read as follows.

SEC. 7. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to insert in the rating schedules of the Veterans' Administration a minimum rating of permanent partial 10 percent for wounds incurred in line of duty in active service during the World War.

SEC. 8. On and after the date of this enactment, the rate of interest charged on any loan secured by a lien on United States Government life (converted) insurance shall not exceed 5 percent per annum.

Section 7 is very important and helpful and section 8 partially provides for some long-needed war-risk insurance reform, and is very meritorious.

WAR DEPARTMENT ASKS FOR MINUTEMEN

A few days ago the War Department issued an appeal, and broadcast it widely, both through the newspapers and also through the radio, asking for the reenlistment of 75,000 ex-service men as modern minutemen to be used immediately if the country calls. Here is the article:

[From the Washington Times-Herald of April 5, 1939]

UNITED STATES CALLS EX-SOLDIERS AS RESERVE CORPS—"MINUTEMEN" TO BE READY IF WAR COMES—DRAMATIC APPEAL IS BROADCAST BY MILITARY LEADERS FOR 75,000 UNDER 36 YEARS OLD

(By Robert G. Nixon)

The War Department today broadcast a Nation-wide appeal to ex-service men to join a reserve corps of "American Minutemen," to be instantly ready for action in case of war.

The Army's dramatic appeal was carried over the Nation by radio and through the medium of the press. Seventy-five thousand able-bodied former soldiers were asked to give their services to the country again should war come.

CALL MEN UNDER 36

The call to colors was addressed to ex-enlisted men under 36 years of age, whether married or single. The campaign was ordered by Secretary of War Harry H. Woodring.

The War Department said this corps of 75,000 men of the enlisted Reserve would be used as a part of the "initial protective force" in event of any national emergency.

The other parts of the initial protective force, which the Nation would throw into the field immediately in case of war, consists of the Regular Army of 165,000 men, the National Guard of 200,000 men, and the Reserve Officers Corps of 110,000.

Evidently Secretary Woodring believes the world situation warrants extraordinary action and is trying to take steps to be prepared for the worst. I wonder if it would be necessary to make this appeal or to offer to pay these minutemen while held in reserve, if we had treated the ex-soldier in any other than the shabby way which is indicated by the following case histories:

Case No. 1, Joseph J. Brooke.
Case No. 2, Edward J. Arthur.
Case No. 3, Stanley Dombrowski.
Case No. 4, Silas E. Swenson.
Case No. 5, Frank S. Wood.

The following letter introduces cases 1 and 2:

MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART,
Miami, Fla., April 4, 1939.

Mr. HERBERT A. CHURCH,
Chairman, National Legislative Committee, Military Order of the Purple Heart, 717 Rock Creek Church Road, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR HERBERT: Were I not so intensely engrossed in my local efforts in behalf of those of our fellow patriots more unfortunate than we, nothing would make me happier than to be able to cooperate with you. Truly, for no one have I more respect than for you—and for your extraordinary labors.

However, whenever you desire my cooperation you know that I'll be on the job—eh what? And the better to serve you—under separate cover is being sent to you photographs of the wounds of the two patriots whose cases I will relate herein—two definite evidences of the injustices which currently beset the disabled ex-service man.

CASE NO. 1

JOSEPH J. BROOKE, C–156406.—FOLDER AT BAY PINES, FLA.

Here is an example of the vicious interpretation of disabilities. Why does the Veterans' Administration persist in alluding to scars and then in ignoring the inevitable complications of each and every wound? From the multitudinous correspondence in this case I have selected for forwarding herein the papers which I deem to be of most import: Procrastination with regard to hospitalization for service combat disabilities, conflicting medical opinion within the Veterans' Administration, and (the most cruel) the recent review of his folder by the Board of Veterans' Appeals. Here is an individual who has been totally helpless since he was wounded, who has spent many years in various hospitals, even to as recently as several times in the past few years, and who has been advised by competent medical authority that his sole relief can be attained by remaining in bed, and by others that the leg should be amputated. Were it not that his wife augments the family income through the W. P. A.—well, there are two children in the family.

EDWARD J. ARTHUR, C–174842.—FOLDER AT BAY PINES, FLA.

The photograph shows clearly that this man is hammertoed, and the files will verify that that condition is due to a high-explosive shell. Foreign bodies still in foot. Unable to rest foot on ground without the aid of arch supports. Yet, after procuring braces from the Veterans' Administration for 15 years the powers that be in their magnanimity decree that such arches are no longer necessary. Attached hereto is a statement from a reputable chiropodist; and also two letters from Bay Pines—one wherein he is refused outpatient treatment and the other where he is given the well-known run-around in his attempt to obtain new arches.

These two instances are sufficient to convince even the most skeptical that the unpleasant aroma still pervades over Denmark.

Neither has known a single day since the war when he did not know agony and suffering. Both have been advised from every source the only relief is through constant rest—with their legs in Murphy splints. Yet Brooke receives the munificent sum of $35 and Arthur $40.

Yours in true comradeship,

NATHAN E. WELTZ,
Adjutant and Welfare Officer.

CASE NO. 1

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Bay Pines, Fla., July 3, 1935.

Mr. JOSEPH J. BROOKE,
General Delivery, Little River, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: This is to advise you that, pursuant to a recent decision rendered by the rating board of this office, it has become necessary to reduce your compensation payments to the basis of $35 per month. The reduction will become effective from August 1, 1935, in accordance with regulations governing matters of this kind.

The rating board decision was rendered with special reference to hospital report of June 19, 1935, and special surgical examination of June 18, 1935. It was held that your service-connected disability, edema, right leg, for which you have been receiving compensation, is now disabling to the degree of no percent and therefore noncompensable. Your payments of $35 per month from August 1, 1935, will be on account of your service-connected disability, scar, right thigh, severe.

It is regretted that this action reducing payments has become necessary in your case.

If you are dissatisfied with the decision rendered, it is your privilege to file with this office an application for review on appeal. The necessary appeal form will be forwarded to you on request.

By direction:

E. A. SKELTON,
Adjudication Officer.

[Appeal was filed and rejected, as shown by the following letter:]

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION FACILITY,
Bay Pines, Fla., July 5, 1935.

Mr. JOSEPH J. BROOKE,
8037 Northwest Eleventh Avenue, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: This is to advise you that out-patient treatment for the month of July is not being authorized in your case, inasmuch as further treatment at this time was not found to be indicated after complete examination in your case at this facility.

Very truly yours,

H. C. LOCHTE, M. D.,
Chief, Out-Patient Service.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Bay Pines, Fla., October 31, 1935.

Mr. JOSEPH J. BROOKE,
8037 Northwest Eleventh Avenue, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: This is to advise that your claim has been carefully reviewed by the rating board, special attention being given to report of your hospitalization at this facility, dated August 26, 1935, and the decision confirms the previous rating in holding that your service-connected disability, scar, right thigh, severe, interfering with circulation, is properly rated disabling permanent partial 35 percent.

You will, therefore, continue to receive payments of $35 per month until further notice, and no change in the status of your case is in order at this time.

By direction.

E. A. SKELTON,
Adjudication Officer.

P. S.—It is noted that you have been advised of your right to file application for review on appeal.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,

Mr. JOSEPH J. BROOKE,
1922 Northwest Seventy-ninth Street, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: This will acknowledge receipt of your application form P–10 for hospital care.

For your information, this application has been approved for hospitalization, but due to an overcrowded condition at this time it is necessary to place your name on our pending list until such time as a bed becomes available for you.

In the meantime, please advise this office as to how you intend to travel when you receive a letter to report, that is, whether by railroad, bus, or privately owned automobile. This is in order for us to prepare the proper letter of authority at the time a bed is available for your reception.

You will be advised immediately when a bed is available and instructions will be forwarded to you.

Very truly yours,

M. BRYSON, Manager.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Bay Pines, Fla., March 4, 1938.

Mr. JOSEPH J. BROOKE,
Box 1241, Little River Station, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: In reviewing our records it appears that your application for hospitalization has been on our waiting list for some time.

We regret that we have been unable to assign you a bed. We have only 197 beds to care for a veterans' population of approximately 55,000. For months we have been filled to capacity, and it has been possible to admit only those requiring emergency treatment. It is hoped that this condition will improve with the passing of the winter season.

We assure you, however, that if your condition should become such as to require emergency treatment before we can reach your name, you should have your local physician contact this office immediately by phone or wire, and if emergency treatment is indicated, immediate steps will be taken to effect your hospitalization.

Very truly yours,

M. BRYSON, Manager.

Mr. ROBERT A. BAIRD,
Service Officer, Veterans of Foreign Wars,
Room 326, Courthouse, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: This is in reply to your note on the bottom of our letter dated April 26, 1938, with reference to an application for hospitalization in the case of the above-named veteran.

A check of our records indicates that we do have an application for hospitalization which was approved in this office under date of February 16, 1938, and we regret that this mistake was made. He is No. 77 on the waiting list at this time, and we have 218 on this list. The medical certificate on Form P–10 does not indicate that a real emergency exists; however, in view of the urgency you indicate in your letter, we are authorizing him to report ahead of the waiting list. A copy of this letter is going forward to the Honorable J. Mark Wilcox, Member of Congress, for his information.

The letter of authority to the veteran is being mailed as of this date.

Very truly yours,

Mr. JOSEPH J. BROOKE,
Box 1241, Little River Station, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: We have just received your application for appeal for an increased rating on account of your service-connected disability of scar right thigh, severe, interfering with circulation.

Before we can give further consideration to this feature of your case it will be necessary for you to advise us by letter as to whether or not you have any additional evidence to submit. If you state in your reply that there is no further evidence, then you should authorize this office to have your appeal considered on the evidence already on file.

Thanking you very much for your immediate attention to this matter.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Bay Pines, Fla., November 8, 1938.

Hon. CLAUDE PEPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR PEPPER: Reference is made to your interest expressed in the case of the above-named claimant, and in reply thereto you are advised service connection has been granted and the claimant is receiving compensation at the rate of permanent partial 35 percent ($35 per month), for a service-connected condition diagnosed as scar right thigh, severe.

He was last examined by the Veterans' Administration for compensation purposes during a period of hospitalization from May 4 to May 28, 1938, and since this report did not indicate a material change in his service-connected condition his former rating was continued.

The claimant has exercised his right of appeal from such decision to the Board of Veterans Appeals, Washington, D. C., and his authorized representative, an official of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, has been notified in order that he may present the facts on which such appeal is based.

As soon as this presentation of the facts on which the appeal is based has been completed the claimant's name and C–number will be certified to the chairman, Board of Veterans Appeals, Washington, D. C., who will call for the case when the claimant's name is reached on their docket.

Your interest in the case is appreciated and we will be glad to keep you informed of any further developments.

Very sincerely yours,

M. BRYSON, Manager.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, March 14, 1939.

Mr. JOSEPH J. BROOKE,
Box 1241, Little River Station, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: There is enclosed for your information a copy of the decision of the Board of Veterans' Appeals rendered in the case of the above-identified claim.

For the Administrator.

R. L. JARNAGIN,
Chairman, Board of Veterans' Appeals.

[Enclosure: Copy of decision dated March 10, 1939.]

Brooke, Joseph J.—C–156406—NP–97115:

(Public, No. 2, 73d Cong., WW IR, affirmed.)

(Public, No. 141, 73d Cong., WW IR, affirmed.)

This claim is properly before the board on appeal.

Question at issue:

Increased rating for scar, gunshot wound, right thigh, severe, interfering with circulation.

At a proceeding held in connection with the appeal the veteran did not appear in person but was represented by an assistant State service officer of Bay Pines, Fla., an accredited representative of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Transcript of the hearing is of record.

The veteran, in his formal appeal, stated:

"This claim is based on the ground that proper attention is not given to the loss of circulation from the effect of the wound. That the use of this leg even to walk will cause the swelling of the leg below the knee to such an extent that I must lie from 1 to 3 days with the leg elevated to reduce the swelling so that I am again able to walk."

The records from the War Department show the veteran enlisted July 6, 1917, and was honorably discharged March 11, 1919. The medical record shows treatment from July 15, 1918, to February 27, 1919, at a French hospital, in Base Hospitals Nos. 1 and 6 and at Camp Dix, N. J., for gunshot wound, right thigh, perforating lower third, severe, with injury to anterior crural nerve; in action July 15, 1918, at Chateau Thierry, France. Report of examination by a board of review at the time of discharge shows:

"Healed scar on inner and anterior surface, right thigh, with considerable loss of muscle substance and consequent loss of power and limp."

It was stated that in view of occupation the veteran was 15 percent disabled.

The claim for benefits was duly filed and service connection for the above condition has been established.

The veteran was physically examined by the Administration on various occasions following his discharge from military service. Special surgical examination of June 18, 1935, shows in part:

"Six inches above the right knee, on the inner aspect of the thigh, there is a transverse scar 6½ by 2 inches. This scar is deeply depressed and somewhat adherent. There is considerable loss of muscle tissue beneath the scar. The right leg is enlarged and firm, not edematous. It measures at the ankle 3½ inches; middle calf, 1½ inches; just below the knee, 2 inches; and just above the knee, 1 inch more than the left leg, all positions respectively. There is some weakness of the adductor and flexor groups of muscles of the thigh."

Special surgical examination of August 26, 1935, shows in part:

"Six inches above the right knee and on the inner aspect of the thigh there is a transverse scar 6½ inches long and 2 inches wide. Scar is depressed and adherent; there is considerable muscle loss; scar is 1 inch deep. There is weakness of the flexor and adductor groups of muscles of the thigh. The leg is enlarged and edematous and slightly red, due to interference with return circulation."

This examination reported the measurements of the legs as follows:

"Right leg above knee, 16 inches; left leg above knee, 15 inches; right calf measures 15½ inches; left calf measures 13¾ inches; right ankle measures 12 inches; left ankle measures 8¾ inches."

A diagnosis was made of cicatrix, gunshot wound, right thigh, severe, with residuals and interference of circulation.

The veteran was hospitalized at the United States Naval Hospital, Philadelphia, Pa., from February 5 to 20, 1936, for cellulitis of the right leg. At time of discharge the veterans' condition was recorded as: Cellulitis, right leg—cured.

Special surgical examination of May 6, 1938, shows in part:

"There is a large scar on the inner side of the medial one-third of the right thigh. The scar is 5½ inches long and 1¾ inches to 2½ inches wide. The scar is well healed, nontender but moderately adherent and depressed 1 inch deep. There is apparently some loss of muscle tissue at the site of the wound as well as destruction of the blood vessels. The leg from the knee down to and including the ankle is enlarged from 1 inch to 2½ inches and is rather cold and clammy. No pitting. Circulation is poor. Dorsal pedis artery is felt. Unable to locate plantar pedis artery. No ulcers, no special tenderness over the saphenous vein.

"Diagnosis.—1. Scar, large, inner side, right thigh, mild symptoms. 2. Residuals, old, gunshot wound, right thigh, moderate."

The veteran was subsequently hospitalized at the Veterans' Administration Hospital, Bay Pines, Fla., from September 3 to 16, 1938, at which time the condition was diagnosed as gunshot-wound residuals, right thigh, and scar, severe, interfering with circulation.

The chief medical officer of the Bay Pines Hospital, on September 27, 1938, replied to a memorandum by the adjudication officer, September 19, 1938, that—

"Examination by the surgeon on September 12, 1938, showed no change in this veteran's service-connected disability from the report dated May 6, 1938. This latter report is already in the veteran's claims file."

The case file contains a statement by Dr. Harold Rand, describing the veteran's condition. This has been noted.

Concerning the issue of increased rating for the service-connected residuals of gunshot wound, right thigh, the Board has carefully reviewed the evidence relating to this condition. Due regard has been given to the information furnished by the War Department, the evidence presented in support of the claim, and to the symptoms and clinical findings disclosed on official examinations in file, conducted by the Administration subsequent to the veteran's discharge.

Inasmuch as the various examinations in file fully detail the veteran's condition and are deemed adequate for proper adjudication of the claim, it is the opinion of the Board that reexamination of the veteran at this time would serve no material purpose.

The agency of original jurisdiction has evaluated the condition as disabling to the extent of permanent partial 35 percent, 1925 schedule, extension 5, variant-thigh 6, and 30 percent under the 1933 schedule, page 19, diagnostic code No. 3176, on the basis of a severe injury to muscle group XIV, interfering with circulation.

From this review of the file, with consideration given to the character of the veteran's military service, the findings disclosed on official examinations and all other evidence of record, it is the decision of the Board of Veterans' Appeals that an increase beyond the current rating is not warranted on the evidence of record. It is further held by the Board that the evaluation of the degree of disablement as made by the agency of original jurisdiction is in accordance with the facts in the case under the controlling rating schedules.

APPEAL IS DENIED

The determination of the agency of original jurisdiction on the issue presented accordingly is affirmed and the veteran's appeal is denied.

Approved March 10, 1939, Board of Veterans' Appeals.

CASE NO. 2

MIAMI, FLA., March 2, 1938.

To Whom It May Concern:

On July 29, 1935, Mr. Edward J. Arthur called at my office to see whether arch supports would benefit his foot condition.

It was of my opinion that arches made from his own individual impression should help him. I made him such pair of supports and he did obtain a great measure of comfort and relief.

Mr. Arthur claims that his ankles were struck with shrapnel during the World War and if this being so I do think is greatly responsible for his foot condition. He paid $12.50 per pair for the supports made special for him at that time. He again needs another pair as the old ones are worn out, making it very hard for him to walk. I believe that a new pair of supports will benefit him greatly.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY G. MICHEL, F. C.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Bay Pines, Fla., November 7, 1935.

MR. EDWARD J. ARTHUR,
2160 NW. First Court, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of your letter of November 5, 1935, requesting out-patient treatment.

Before any consideration can be given to out-patient treatment, it is desired that you inform us as to what conditions and disabilities that you desire out-patient treatment for. Upon receipt of this information, consideration will be given to your request for out-patient treatment.

Yours very truly,

H. C. LOCHTE,
Chief, Out-Patient Service.

Refused.

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Bay Pines, Fla., December 2, 1937.

MR. EDWARD J. ARTHUR,
2217 NW. Miami Court, Miami, Fla.

DEAR SIR: We are in receipt of your letter of November 17, 1937, relative to have your arch supports repaired or replaced.

It is suggested that you report to Dr. Corren P. Youmans, 653 Southwest Second Street, Miami, Fla., who will conduct an examination in your case and inspect your present arch supports. Dr. Youmans will then submit his report to this office for the indicated action in your case.

Very truly yours,

H. C. LOCHTE, M. D.,
Chief, Out-Patient Service.

Refused treatment.

CASE NO. 3

MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART,
Philadelphia, Pa., April 25, 1939.

MR. HERBERT A. CHURCH,
Chairman, National Legislative Committee, Military Order of the Purple Heart, 717 Rock Creek Church Road, Washington, D. C.

DEAR PATRIOT CHURCH: Complying with my promise, I am enclosing an account of a case which I have been handling before the Veterans' Administration. Whereas it does not involve major injuries, it does disclose a very typical situation before the veterans' rating boards. Whatever the situation may have been in the past, any veteran going before the Veterans' Administration at this time with a feeling that he will be given sympathetic assistance in the formulation of a possible claim is just "kidding" himself. He will find that the Veterans' Administration is not neutral but decidedly an adverse party.

It would be much more fair and businesslike if the fiction as to the disinterestedness of the Veterans' Administration were abolished and it frankly became what it now is. It would smooth the path of those of us who are representing veterans in that we would then have a system under which we could bring cases before the Administration on clear-cut issues and dispose of them. My experience under the present scheme is very unsatisfactory. After having prepared a case carefully and presented it as skillfully as I am able, I frequently have a decision rendered which entirely ignores the points I have urged and turns on some obscure point which the industry of some official has extracted from the record. The present set-up leaves us service officers in the position of frequently tilting at windmills.

In addition to the case which I have written up, there is a case of a veteran, Donald Hildreth, C 48–836. This man had a leg blown off while serving with the Yankee Division. Simultaneously with the loss of the leg an enormous scar which it took 30 stitches to close was inflicted above the hip. Due to laceration of the nerves, this wound caused the man untold agony; but it was not until 15 years after his discharge that he was awarded any compensation by reason of it. Apparently a great injustice has been done the veteran, even though he did receive compensation for the loss of the leg.

Yours in comradeship,

WADE GOBLE,
Judge Advocate, Department of Pennsylvania.

Dombrowski, Stanley, 6109 Reedland Street, Philadelphia, Pa.—C–278928.

While serving with the Russian expeditionary forces, this veteran was struck by a rifle or machine-gun bullet in the left hand. The wound was inflicted on March 23, 1919. The bullet struck first, the knuckle of the second finger, and continuing its course, smashed the tip of the index finger. The veteran says the bullet came from his left rear and struck his hand while it was extended along the stock of his rifle, thereby accounting for the course of the bullet.

At the time the veteran was discharged from the service on August 16, 1919, his discharge bore the notation, "Disability 25 percent." After some changes in the rate of compensation, the veteran on December 23, 1930, was awarded a permanent partial disability of 10 percent. The permanent effects of the wound at that time seemed to be a smashed knuckle joint at the base of the second finger and an unbending index finger.

UNABLE TO WORK AT HIS PROFESSION

During the past 2 or 3 years the veteran has experienced increasing pain in the hand and great difficulty in handling the tools of his occupation which is that of machinist's helper at the Philadelphia Navy Yard.

The veteran nominated the Military Order of the Purple Heart as his representative to investigate the case. At the request of the service officer of that organization, X-ray studies of the hand were made by Dr. Samuel Bruck, 2104 Pine Street, Philadelphia, a recognized roentgenologist, on April 14, 1939. These studies are herewith submitted. These studies demonstrate even to the eye of a layman that extensive spurs of bone accretion have developed deep into the tissue of the hand from the shattered knuckle joint of the second finger.

When these studies were submitted to rating board No. 3, of the Philadelphia office of the Veterans' Administration by Maj. Wade Goble, service officer of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, on April 24, 1939, Dr. Thomas W. Penrose, chairman of that board said: That in requesting additional compensation the veteran was risking the 10-percent award he already had; that the board had been extremely liberal in making a 10-percent rating; that under the regulations now in effect it was only a 6-percent disability; that since the veteran's occupation before the war was that of laborer, he could only be rated on variant 3, with the result that the board had already done everything possible for the veteran.

The Military Order of the Purple Heart submits that if Dr. Penrose correctly states the principles governing the award of compensation in this and similar cases the beneficent purposes of veteran legislation have been completely smothered in bureaucratic regulations. Here we have a genuine combat-incurred disability which seriously curtails the veteran's comfort and threatens his livelihood. With time his disability has become more serious, in line with common medical experience, yet the Veterans' Administration not only refuses to increase the compensation but would intimidate him as to what he already has.

CHISAGO CITY, MINN., April 4, 1939.

HON. JOHN G. ALEXANDER,
Congressman, Third Congressional District of Minnesota, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ALEXANDER: I am taking the privilege of writing to you in regard to some information on veterans' affairs.

I am an ex-service man, having been disabled since service and drawing a statutory award. I was cut in 1933 by the Economy Act, but received back compensation after about 1 year. In 1936 and 1937 I spent 8 months and 10 days at U. S. V. Fac. 106 at Minneapolis, and I left there with an honorable discharge but did not get any diagnosis. After being home about 1 month I started to doctor and was taken to a private hospital where I got a diagnosis of Buerger's disease by Dr. V. Heseltine, of Taylors Falls, Minn.; Dr. Von De Weyer and Dr. H. B. Zimmerman, of St. Paul, Minn. Also Dr. Redabough, of Hastings, Minn., at St. Johns Hospital in St. Paul, Minn. I had my right leg amputated and two toes on my left foot. After this I was in Soap Lake, Wash., for further treatment.

The Bureau will admit it is an ex-service man's disease as 95 percent of men who suffer from this disease are ex-service men. My first complaint to them was in 1920 to the United States Public Health Service, but, of course, that is like a lot of other things, it is not on their record, and they told me that there was nothing wrong with my legs, which they have done from time to time, but I have had feelings of same since that time. In 1934 I was told the same thing by Dr. DeCourcy, even though my feet were swollen and painful at the time, so I then went to Drs. Chatterton and Von De Weyer in St. Paul, Minn., and was under doctor's care up to the time I entered the hospital. Of course, I have doctored with other doctors and have affidavits in there, at least three prior to 1925.

This is my trouble: I appeal my case every time they turn me down, but in June 1938 I appealed it. On June 27, 1938, it went through the adjudication office and I did not hear anything from them. So I made a special trip down to see Mr. Hibbard in the latter part of August 1938. I then had a hearing in about 3 days with a decision of pending. December 12, 1938, I was informed that it was turned down and that it would be sent to the board of appeals in Washington, D. C., which was misleading as I had not appealed it there. I also saw the rating sheets of December 12, 1938, in which my evidence was misconstrued by the rating board in order to be able to turn me down. However, I appealed it again at No. 106 as soon as possible with more evidence and I have not heard a thing from them to date.

How long is it supposed to take for an average appeal for service connection at No. 106 at Minneapolis, Minn., to go through?

Can you find out what rating Buerger's disease takes, and if not the most of the men suffering with it are drawing total?

The reason I went to a private hospital for my amputation I think has something to do with it, but I have no way of finding out, as I believe it is the fault for the delays. Mr. J. L. Monahan, of the D. A. V., says that I have as good evidence and better than some cases he has handled.

Not being able to work since 1934 to date, my finances are gone after paying private doctors, hospitals, trip to Soap Lake, Wash., artificial leg, but my living expenses, taxes, and incidentals run on the same. I would not have written to you if I did not think I have it justly coming, as I have proven my case way beyond a reasonable doubt, and according to the law I am supposed to get the benefit of the doubt.

Please do not write to the U. S. V. facility at Minneapolis, Minn., as I know by other cases what happens, as they are supposed to be working on my case now.

Thanking you in advance, I remain,

Yours truly,

SILAS E. SWENSON.

CASE NO. 5

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., March 16, 1939.

Hon. JOHN G. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It was indeed an honor to receive your communication of 13th instant.

World War veterans generally are totally ignorant of the disability clause in their contracts, also of the practically impossible conditions imposed when applying for disability benefits. This insurance is a service paid for in cash, as well as in service in war, not in any way related to pensions, compensation, etc., which you, of course, understand.

Officers of the Regular Army and Navy are automatically retired because of age at 64. Spanish-American War veterans are considered disabled on reaching the age of 65 and automatically receive a pension.

In this State and many others old-age assistance is immediately available to aged persons of 65 years and over.

After 27 years' volunteer military service in the Illinois National Guard, the Spanish-American War, and the World War, and in 1931, being then 64 years old, I applied for disability insurance benefits, being adjudged permanently disabled. Three years later I was required to submit to another examination, the insurance company desiring to ascertain if I was still permanently disabled. It was found that I was. Three years later, in 1937, then being 1 month short of attaining my seventieth birthday, the insurance claims council decided I had entirely recovered from my total, permanent disability and stopped paying monthly benefits, in addition to requiring resumption of premium payments amounting to $49.82 per month.

In my humble opinion, Congress should require the insurance company, when, because of age, a policyholder becomes eligible for disability insurance benefits to so rule and not leave the decision to the employees of a government agency, backed by rules and regulations not directly authorized by Congress.

While I have a personal interest in this matter, I also am greatly concerned for what will happen to other policyholders, as they grow older, and find they have been fooled, as I was, by the information pamphlets referred to in the copy of letter I sent you addressed Mr. H. L. McCoy.

Thanking you, sir,

Very truly yours,

FRANK S. WOOD,
512 South Second Street.

P. S.—You are at perfect liberty to use any and all information I have sent you.—F. S. W.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., March 7, 1939.

Hon. JOHN G. ALEXANDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The last issue of the National Tribune contains a report of a debate in Congress in which the Veterans' Administration, in general, and the United States Government Life Insurance Co., in particular, were under consideration, and in which debate you were the outstanding champion of the veterans.

I take the liberty to enclose a copy of a letter I sent the Director of Insurance, which fairly well explains itself.

The insurance company misrepresented their policies, as shown therein.

When others presume to use the United States mails to disseminate false information when soliciting business they are sent to the penitentiary.

Am sure all veterans feel very grateful to you for your personal interest in their affairs.

I am in possession of the forms referred to in copy of letter I enclose.

Thanking you.

Very truly yours,

FRANK S. WOOD,
512 South Second Street.

Corporal and R. S. M., Fifth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, Spanish-American War.

Colonel, commanding Fifth Illinois Infantry, World War, and One Hundred and Thirtieth Infantry, Thirty-third Division, World War.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., February 28, 1939.

Mr. H. L. McCOY,
Director of Insurance, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: After a careful analysis of its rules and regulations, including its nefarious secret code, its deceptive advertising matter, and statements made in correspondence with the writer during the past year and more, I am reluctantly persuaded that the United States Government Life Insurance Co. is a racket, malicious, despotic, and immoral.

You admit, your letter of April 22, 1938, that the following became a part of your insurance contracts March 9, 1918:

"Total permanent disability is defined as any impairment of mind or body which continuously renders it impossible for the disabled person to follow any substantially gainful occupation and which is founded upon conditions which render it reasonably certain that the total disability will continue throughout the life of the disabled person."

About 7 years after the foregoing became a part of the policies of the Government Life Insurance Co., policyholders were ordered to "convert" their insurance by July 2, 1926 (afterward extended 1 year), or lose their insurance.

This order was conveyed through the mails by means of a printed pamphlet, Form 752, revised August 1925, captioned "Information Regarding United States Government Life Insurance." The permanent total disability definition therein is as follows: "No additional premium is charged for the total and permanent disability provision, nor is there any limitation as to the age at which such disability may occur. The amount of insurance plus dividend accumulations less any indebtedness becomes payable in monthly installments of $5.75 per thousand, payable so long as the insured remains so disabled, even though such disability may continue for more than 240 months. Payment of premiums is waived for the period during which total and permanent disability installments are paid."

The dead line for the conversion of one's insurance, "or else," was fixed by the insurance company as July 2, 1927. The next above referred to "Information" pamphlet was current until November 1928.

On this date, November 1928, all policyholders who could do so had converted their insurance, then the insurance company elected to tell the whole truth regarding their contracts.

By omissions, at least, the insurance company, of which you are "director," sent advertising matter through the United States mail, prior to November 1928, and particularly covering the total and permanent disability provision in your contracts, which was utterly false and fraudulent.

A review of the intent of the authors and supporters of Government life insurance for veterans, as revealed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS and public print when this project was being considered establishes the fact that the administration of this agency is not in any way related to the purposes and benefits proposed by Congress when it legalized Government life insurance and designated the United States Veterans' Bureau to administer it, and sundry veterans' affairs.

Apparently the insurance company immediately assumed that veterans were its legitimate prey, rather than its job was to serve the veterans. That whereas they were heroes when the war was on they are just hoboes now.

To that end the services of the best experts were enticed from "old line" and "blue sky" life insurance organizations whose job it was to devise ways and means to hinder and defeat the original intent of Government life insurance for veterans. When the energies and resources of the Nation were marshaling for war, planning to adequately care for the thousands who would thereby be deprived of health and opportunity, the Government Life Insurance Co. was resorting to the basest chicaneries to make it next to impossible for veterans to receive insurance benefits they and their dependents had been assured would be theirs.

There were no patriotic organizations then, such as the American Legion, Veterans of Foreign Wars, with others, and their auxiliaries to safeguard the interests of veterans, and the insurance company was quick to take cowardly advantage of it.

When our soldiers and sailors were engaged in either "intensive training" or in facing the enemy in foreign lands and on the seas, entirely unmindful of the fact they were sniped at from the rear by a Government agency in Washington, the insurance company secretly wrote into its contracts, March 9, 1918, the most insidious betrayal of confidence possible to conceive, that affecting permanent total disability benefit, referred to in third paragraph of this communication.

Furthermore, the insurance company either lacked the courage or the decency, or both, to give general publicity to its duplicity in any manner until more than 10 years after Armistice Day. By that time the insurable veterans had been "hooked" with new contracts.

Anyone reading all of the advertising matter broadcast by the insurance company prior to November 1928 is justified in assuming that a board of examiners of the Veterans' Administration, determines by rigid examination of an applicant for insurance benefits, whether or not said applicant should be awarded total permanent disability benefits. It can be further assumed if the decision is an affirmative one, the amount of insurance benefits becomes payable in monthly installments of $5.75 per thousand at insurance carried and in force.

In reality, however, should the insured find it impossible to properly provide a living and educate his family on the pittance received as disability insurance, and presumes to supplement that income by accepting a wage, salary, or gratuity kindly disposed friends offer, the insurance company promptly stops all insurance benefits, under authority of the pernicious secret provision written into its contracts March 9, 1918, and kept so until November 1928, and the resumption of insurance premiums are exacted.

The veteran is given no opportunity to be heard, nor no notice of the proposed action given him; privileges extended the worst criminal types mandatorily. The courts appointed and controlled by the insurance company, Insurance Claims Council and Bureau of Veterans Appeals, composed of its own employees acting as judge, jury, and executioners.

Under rules of the insurance company, an attorney for a veteran may charge but a very small fee for his services, approximately $30. A heavy penalty is exacted for any violation of that rule. One receives the impression thereby that a beneficent insurance company throws its protecting arms around the veteran. Read further and it will be found that the same code mandatorily provides that attorneys and experts of the insurance company receive $20 a day and expenses when attending court to assail a veteran trying for justice.

It is fair to presume that when a board of examiners of the insurance company determines a veteran is permanently totally disabled, therefore entitled to insurance benefits, that particular case is closed. That is where the enticed experts from other insurance organizations justify their high salaries, fees, and swivel chairs.

The insurance company has a definition of its own making for the word "permanent." Definitions of that word in all dictionaries were unsuited to the plans of the swivel-chair patriots. The word "permanent," according to the insurance company means you are permanently disabled only if you are unable to earn a little something. If a job offers where the veteran is actually disabled, but can articulate well enough to earn, that is considered evidence by the insurance company and its two astute courts that recovery from disability has been made.

From the time a veteran begins to receive insurance benefits until he passes on he is under the constant surveillance of the insurance company, either by questionnaires or examinations, or both. The veteran must comply with all orders of the insurance company whenever and wherever it suits the purposes of the insurance company to so order, or else.

No peace of mind for him. He is kept distraught. He is in the same predicament as the soldier depicted by Kipling in his immortal verse Boots. "There is no discharge from the war."

There is no subterfuge too mean and unfair the insurance company has not resorted to in its efforts to defeat the intent and purposes of Government life insurance as proposed by the framers and sponsors of the original act. One of the most insidious is a small volume of laws. This code will not be found in any public law libraries, nor can it be purchased, although it was published and paid for with public funds. Its contents are used, as a last resort, to club a veteran's case to death should he have the temerity to take his plea for justice into court.

SIX-PERCENT INTEREST CHARGED

The insurance company exacts interest at 6 percent on loans to veterans, secured by the veteran's policy. Another evidence of its concern of veterans.

That a veteran has no rights the insurance company respects is well exemplified in its form 579, with particular reference to paragraphs 16, 18, and 20 thereof. This form "must" be filled out in "detail" by a veteran making claim for total permanent disability benefits. Here are the three paragraphs above referred to.

"Paragraph 16—Requires the veteran applicant for total permanent disability insurance to state if treated by a physician, or physicians during previous year to submit a supplemental statement by such physician or physicians, on physician's letterhead, showing length of time under treatment, history of condition, physical and laboratory findings, diagnosis and prognosis, and any other pertinent medical data relating to the veterans' condition.

"Paragraph 18—Industrial history: Veteran is required to list his occupations since date of his discharge from the service including names and addresses of all employers, beginning and ending dates of employment, usual number of hours worked each day, number days worked each week, average weekly wages, amount of time lost on account of illness, reason for termination of employment. If self-employed, give nature of business, period, volume of business, help employed, gross and net income, time lost on account of physical condition. If unemployed, state periods and reasons. Detailed answers must be made hereto.

"Paragraph 20—I consent that any physician or surgeon who has treated or examined me for any purpose, or whom I have consulted professionally, any insurance company or organization to which I have applied for insurance, or any person, persons, firm, or corporation to whom, or to which I have applied for employment, may divulge to the Veterans' Administration or testify as to, or produce in court, any information obtained by them, or it, concerning myself by reason of the foregoing, and waive any privilege which renders such information confidential."

It would be difficult to even imagine that such arrogant, tyrannical, and impossible requirements would be made of a veteran by a United States Government agency, were not the printed words in evidence. Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin hopelessly outclassed; Capone, "Bugs" Moran, Hines in the piker class comparatively.

By what right, unless might makes right, the insurance company presumes to pry into the most personal affairs of an American citizen, even though he be but a veteran, is inconceivable. What has the ancient history of an applicant for insurance benefits to do with his eligibility for same? Why not complete the tyrannical outrage and violate the sacred precincts of the confessional?

To what ends? The greatest profit accrues to the insurance company through lapses and confiscation of policies. The large salaries enjoyed by swivel-chair patriots must have justification.

The President of the United States has again asked Congress for authority to reorganize Government bureaus in general, and this nefarious "war risk insurance" racket is one of them. More power to him.

Respectfully,

FRANK STOBIE WOOD,
512 South Second Street, Springfield, Ill.

I have pictures accompanying cases Nos. 1 to 3 and only wish they could be inserted in the RECORD, as they graphically show better than words can describe the evident injustices being perpetrated day after day and year after year under our present laws. From the pictures in connection with cases Nos. 1 and 2 it can plainly be seen that the wounds warrant much different treatment and ratings than those given up to this date. In case No. 3 it is evident from the X-ray exhibit that the bone splinters and growths are such as to warrant this veteran in not working at his usual trade of machinist's helper, and it is doubtful if he could find other work. Under the 10-percent ruling of the Veterans' Administration in his case, as seen above, he is forced to work, although the bones in his splintered fingers are a continuous source of pain and anguish. Case No. 4 is a very tragic one, as you will note by reading its history as recounted in Mr. Swenson's letter above. There is nothing which the Government should leave undone to aid this veteran, as he is gradually losing both his arms and legs from Buerger's disease. There is not the slightest shade of doubt but that his disease is the result of his service.

Case No. 5 shows to a slight degree the injustices which have continuously been perpetrated by the interpretations put out under our present World War Veterans' Insurance Act put on the statute books by previous Congresses. The need for correction of these defects in the law is apparent, and section 8 will cover one item wherein a veteran is forced to pay an exorbitant rate of interest on his insurance-policy loans, although the Government can get all the money it needs for slightly over 2 percent and although all other investments of reserves held by the Veterans' Administration have produced only 4⅛-percent return, according to the testimony given by administration officials at our hearings on this bill. Is it justice to force a man who has been trying to protect his estate by carrying life insurance to pay 6-percent interest on a loan when high interest rates are a thing of the past?

In this connection I insert at this point a resolution passed by the American Legion Department Convention of my State last August, which indicates several needed reforms in our Government insurance:

1. That Congress investigate the insurance section of the Veterans' Bureau with a view to determining the equity of the present costs to the veteran.
2. That the policies be changed to provide that the insurance will not lapse for nonpayment of premiums as long as the loan value is sufficient to pay such premiums.
3. That interest rates be reduced to not more than 3 percent, and that such reduction be made retroactive to the date the loans were made.
4. That the nonassignable clause in policy be removed, and that the veteran be given full control over its disposition.
5. That the insurance division of the Veterans' Bureau be requested to improve the service in general and place it on a plane more comparable to that rendered by commercial insurance companies.

The foregoing was adopted by the convention delegates as part of the rehabilitation program for 1938. The full text of the insurance resolution follows:

Whereas there has been a growing dissatisfaction among those World War veterans who are carrying converted Government insurance based on costs, types of policy, interest notes on loans, and service in general; and whereas some posts have made a study of the reasons underlying these dissatisfactions and find as follows:

1. Annual costs: That the net annual cost of the Government insurance is higher than seems reasonable when it is considered that there are no agents' fees to be paid, and that the Government is supposed to pay all operating costs. We find that for some classes of policies the costs are about the same or even a little higher than those of some of the larger insurance companies.

One individual case investigated reveals that the veteran took out a $10,000 straight life policy at the age of 47 for which the annual premium, based on quarterly payments, is $31.60 per $1,000. Inasmuch as the policy does not and has not for many years paid a dividend, this $31.60 represents the net cost per thousand.

At the same age (47) the veteran took out a $2,000 policy in one of the larger mutual companies on which he pays a quarterly premium of $21.08, or $42.16 per $1,000 per year. However, this latter policy has consistently paid an annual dividend of about $10.50 per $1,000, making the net cost approximately $31.66 per $1,000, or the same as the Government.

Both policies have a permanent-disability clause and are very comparable. The premium of the old-line policy is sufficient to pay all agents' fees, overhead, etc., that are not required of the Government premiums.

2. Lapses: The policy contract is such that the insurance lapses if the premium is not paid before the end of the 31-day grace period, even though there may be a substantial loan value. The policy referred to under paragraph 1 and most all other policies issued today provide that the insurance will not lapse for nonpayment of premium as long as there is sufficient loan value to meet the premiums. In case of nonpayment the loan is made automatically.

We have knowledge of numerous cases where this feature has saved policies during the depression. The Government contract could and should incorporate this feature without adding to the cost.

3. Interest rates: The contract provides that loans shall be at a rate not to exceed 6 percent compounded annually. No minimum interest rate is specified. We fail to find any case where less than the maximum rate of 6 percent has been and is being charged.

The World War veteran being no different from the cross-section average of American citizenry, has suffered from the depression of the last decade and the collapse of values just as have the others. Many—yes, most—with or without employment, have been forced to borrow money to keep off of relief rolls as long as possible and to protect investments.

Many policies are rapidly becoming valueless due to the accumulation of interest at this high rate. Many veterans' families, for whom the veteran has earnestly attempted to provide an estate, are going to be left destitute and to the mercies of charity.

The Government has adopted the policy of lending money to others in distress at substantially lower rates and on security that is frequently of a doubtful nature, and we see no reason why the rates to veterans on such gilt-edge security should not be retroactively reduced to around 2½ or 3 percent.

Inquiries made regarding high rates of interest now charged have been met with the argument that this rate increases the dividend, that the policyholder himself is the beneficiary; and that it is a good thing in that it discourages borrowing. In view of the very small dividend paid (on such policies as are paying anything and to the large number that are paying no dividend at all) we believe this argument to be without merit. Further assuming that it has some merit, we do not believe that any veteran wishes to be the recipient of dividends for which a comrade is penalized.

4. Nonassignable clause: The policy contains a provision that it cannot be assigned, which makes it useless as security for loans from banks or other institutions that would be glad to make loans at rates less than 6 percent, even as low as 4 percent.

We are told by representatives of the Veterans' Bureau that this is in the interest of the veteran in that it discourages borrowing, and that it protects the veteran's family by preventing the veteran from assigning his policy and losing it.

This paternal interest may have been proper 20 years ago, when many of us were young and inexperienced. But in our now mature years it would seem that the veteran should have fuller control over his own affairs.

We have knowledge of cases where, had the Government policies been assignable, loans made from the Government could have been negotiated at banks at a lower rate. Further, from such inquiries and observations as we have made, we find that loans made locally with a definite maturity date are more frequently finally paid than are those made from the Government or insurance companies.

5. Service in general: Investigation of complaints of poor service has revealed cases where it has taken months for veterans to secure insurance. There are cases where policies have lapsed because premiums were received by the Bureau a few days late and the veteran did not receive notice of such lapse until 30 or 60 days later.

We see no reason why such conditions should exist and why the veteran should not reasonably expect to receive the same prompt and efficient service from the Veterans' Bureau as he gets from other insurance companies.

After reading these cases, one is constrained to ask the question, "Justice, where art thou?" If these disheartened veterans insist that there is no justice, they can hardly be blamed. Nor is such a situation conducive to the encouragement of service to one's country. No wonder Secretary of War Woodring is hard pressed for recruits for his program of national defense.

In view of the evident need for amendments to the present law and quick action to save these brave men from further needless pain and suffering, I hope you will support this bill. We can never repay them for the sacrificial service they have rendered, but we can see that they get some measure of justice.

War is a horrible thing and a wasteful thing and we want no more of it. These cases are tragic reminders of its ravages and its destruction of human happiness and values. But to these who have fought for us, I say there is nothing which a grateful nation should withhold or leave undone to repay the debt of gratitude we owe them for their sacrifices in order that liberty might live and democracy be preserved.

Economy in government is a good thing and I am for it, but to me it must be secondary when justice and mercy call as loudly as they do in the case of our war disabled.

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and to include therein various papers referred to by him.)

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 5452, reported by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and now under consideration, will benefit about 140,000 disabled veterans, widows, minor children, and dependent parents of veterans. This measure does not go as far as I should like to have it go, but I wish to say to the Members of the House that I strongly favor it and express the hope it will be passed without a dissenting vote.

Many World War veterans who received wounds from shell fire, accidents, or gas have been denied compensation because the Veterans' Administration has held that they are less than 10 percent disabled. This bill provides that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to give every World War veteran who enlisted in the World War before November 12, 1918, or saw military service in Russia before April 2, 1920, a minimum permanent rating of not less than 10 percent for all wounds incurred in line of duty in active service. It is estimated by the Veterans' Administration that this section of the bill will benefit 87,000 World War veterans and pay them $10,500,000 annually. This section 7 also changes the law so as to benefit the widows, children, and dependent parents of World War veterans. As the law now is, before a widow or minor child of a World War veteran can secure compensation they must prove to the satisfaction of the Veterans' Administration that the death of the veteran was due to service or that the veteran at the time of his death had a 10-percent permanent disability contracted in the service in line of duty. Dependent parents under present laws have to prove that the death of the veteran was due to disabilities incurred in the service in line of duty. Section 7 of this bill fixes by law a permanent disability of not less than 10 percent for each and every World War veteran who incurred in line of duty during the World War any wound or wounds. This provision will grant at least a 10-percent service-connected disability for every World War veteran wounded in line of duty and give to him at least a 10-percent rating, although he may have recovered entirely from his wounds, though great or slight. He will receive at least a 10-percent rating and compensation, and on his death his widow and children and dependent father and mother will receive compensation or pension. Section 7 therefore is of great importance to the veterans themselves as well as to their widows, minor children, and dependent parents.

Section 5 of the bill grants increases, it is estimated by the Veterans' Administration, to 27,800 widows now on the rolls, increasing the pensions of these 27,800 widows $2,505,000 annually.

Sections 1 to 4 of the bill liberalize the present law and will add at least 3,000 new widows' cases, at an estimated annual cost of $1,306,000. It will increase the compensation and pensions of 14,850 widows now on the rolls, at an estimated annual cost of $1,426,000. It will add 5,200 dependent parents of 4,300 deceased World War veterans to the compensation rolls at an estimated cost of $2,300,000 annually, making an increase in the compensation rolls of widows and dependent parents of 23,050, at a total estimated cost annually of $5,032,000. There is a limitation in section 1 of the bill denying these increases and other benefits provided in this act to single or unmarried persons whose annual income exceeds $1,000 or to any married person or any person with minor children whose annual income exceeds $2,500, but it excepts specifically from these exemptions payments of war-risk term insurance, United States Government life, converted, insurance, and adjusted compensation.

Under the present laws, before the dependent parents of World War veterans can secure benefits it is necessary to show that the death of the veteran was due to disabilities contracted in the service in line of duty. This act changes that requirement, and provides that benefits shall be paid to dependent fathers and mothers of World War veterans where it is shown that at the time of the veteran's death he had a disability directly or presumptively incurred in or aggravated by service in the World War for which compensation would be payable if 10 percent or more in degree. Section 7 benefits them.

Section 3 of the act provides for an increase in the pensions of the widows of World War veterans where the death of the veteran has not been shown to be due to service but where the veteran has been shown to have been 30, 20, or 10 percent disabled from service-connected disabilities at the time of his death. These widows under present laws are pensioned at the rate of $22 per month. This bill provides a pension of $30 per month for them.

Section 5 of the bill provides an increase of $7.50 a month for the widows of World War veterans where the death of the veteran has been shown to be due to service. The total amount of compensation which could be paid to the widow and child or children under Public, No. 304, was $75 per month, but under this bill it is increased to $82.50 per month.

I have always favored a pension for the widows and minor children of World War veterans, whether death was due to service or whether there was a 10-percent permanent service-connected disability or not. Our pension laws have for years granted to the widows and minor children of Spanish-American War, Boxer Rebellion, Philippine Insurrection, and Civil War veteran pensions, without requiring any proof that the death of the veteran was due to service or that he had any service-connected disability. I can see no good reason why there should be any discrimination between the widows and minor children of World War veterans and the widows and minor children of our other wars. If it is right for one, it is right for the other. I have introduced a bill in each and every one of the Congresses for the past several years to accomplish this purpose, and I shall continue to fight to eliminate this inequality and discrimination.

Section 6 of the bill grants not less than $100 per month compensation to all veterans of the World War, Spanish-American War, Boxer Rebellion, and Philippine Insurrection in case that such veteran suffers the loss of one hand or one foot or one eye. The Veterans' Administration could grant more than $100 per month. It must allow at least $100 per month. The law is not changed in case of the loss of both hands or both feet or both eyes. It is estimated that this will benefit 2,723 veterans under these groups, at an annual estimated cost of $714,000.

OPPOSED TO SO-CALLED ECONOMY ACT

I have opposed, and I still oppose, the so-called Economy Act forced through Congress on March 20, 1933, and have from time to time introduced bills to repeal that act. That act caused untold suffering to hundreds of thousands of disabled veterans and tens of thousands of widows and minor children.

The bill before us does not go far enough to suit others and myself in the House. It is brought up, however, under the suspension of rules of the House, and no amendment can be offered or considered to the bill. We can only vote for or against the bill as it is. The World War Veterans' Committee has brought out this bill that no doubt does not measure up to what they should like to present to the House, but they realize the conditions that confront the House and Senate so far as legislation for veterans and their dependents is concerned, and they seem to think this is the best bill we can get through; and the hope is expressed by some of the members of the committee that we may be given an opportunity to vote for other legislation for the veterans and their dependents before Congress adjourns.

I would not feel justified in opposing this bill because it does not go as far as I should like for it to go. It will at least bring benefits to approximately 140,000 veterans and their dependents, and I am very happy to have an opportunity to help that number. I sincerely trust that one or more additional bills will be brought in by the committee before the Congress adjourns.

There is considerable talk now about another war. We are spending billions for national defense. I have urged many times that no appropriation could be more helpful for national defense than appropriations to do justice to those who have served our country heroically, patriotically, and courageously, and their dependents. This Nation must never be lacking in gratitude to its defenders and their widows and orphans. If our Nation follows that course, it will never want for defenders.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, this measure is no doubt termed by the majority of the Members as a veterans' measure. It, too, can be classified as a measure for peace, national defense, and neutrality. I make that statement having in mind that the care and welfare of a veteran of any war and his dependents is a duty of this country.

There is far more behind this bill than an act of simple justice to the armless and legless veterans, to the widows and orphans and mothers and fathers of men who gave their lives in war for their country.

This bill is another sharp reminder of the cost of war—the price paid in terms of human life, blood and suffering, in tears and grief, as well as money.

Let the mothers and wives of today and the brides of tomorrow examine this measure to learn what they may expect from a grateful Government if they are called upon to sacrifice a son, a husband, or a sweetheart if America goes to war again.

Examined in the light of human life and grief, the cold figures of an increase in widows' pensions from $22 to $30 a month become eloquent and impressive arguments for peace, neutrality, and national defense.

Let me emphasize that national defense does not contemplate sending American boys beyond American frontiers to fight in foreign wars.

Let me stress the fact that neutrality means keeping out of other people's wars, not taking sides in advance, as proposed in the Pittman miscalled Peace Act of 1939. That unneutral proposal would amount to a blind declaration of war. It would make certain that Congress, in the not-distant future, would find it necessary to pass further legislation to compensate with money the loss of human life, a lifetime of crippled martyrdom, and to soften the grief of widows and orphans and bereft parents.

This legislation represents many days of study on the part of the World War Veterans' Committee, during which time testimony was taken from representatives of all veterans' organizations and other interested persons.

While some believe this bill does not go far enough, I feel that it is, at least, a step in the right direction. Moreover, I believe it is one which not only will receive the approval of the body on the other side of the Capitol, but the gentleman at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, who has not always approved veterans' legislation.

Sections 1 and 2 are designed to remove the 10-percent disability provision in the present law. That provision has denied many widows and orphans of benefits to which they were entitled by reasons of the type of service rendered by the veteran and the disability incurred in service, but not adjudged the required 10 percent or more. These sections also add the dependent mother or father to those entitled to benefits.

Sections 3 and 4 simply grant increases in benefits to widows and orphans and other dependents. For instance, in the case of a widow whose husband died as a result of a presumptive service-connected disability, under the present law, she receives $22 a month. This measure would increase that widow's benefits to $30 a month, if she has no child. It would be increased to $38 a month if she has a child. No change in rate of benefit is made in this section for additional children. This section further establishes for dependent mother or father a rate of $45 per month, or both, $25 each.

The estimated cost sections 1 to 4, inclusive, are as follows:

New cases, 3,000	$1,306,000
Increases to those on rolls, 14,850 widows	1,426,000
Dependent parents, 4,300 deceased veterans (5,200 parents)	2,300,000
Total estimated cost	5,032,000

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Does this legislation propose to change already established date of marriage dead line for widows of Spanish War veterans?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. No. This legislation does not concern widows of Spanish War veterans, but concerns dependents of World War veterans, and in their case the existing marriage provision is not disturbed.

Under section 5, 27,800 widows will receive an increase amounting to $2,505,000. In the case of a widow, under 50 years of age, whose husband died of a service-connected disability, and who now receives $30 a month, would receive $37.50 or an increase of $7.50 a month, under this bill. The widow of 50 to 65 years will receive an increase from $37.50 to $45 a month, or an increase of $7.50.

One of the most important sections in the bill is section 6, which concerns 2,723 World War veterans and a small number of Spanish-American War veterans, a group commonly referred to as amputation cases, due to the loss of hand, foot, or eye. This section provides a minimum rate of $100 per month for the loss of a hand, foot, or eye.

There appeared before our committee a number of World War veterans suffering from amputations. Each was frank to state his amputation has been continually aggravated by his daily pursuits as well as being affected by the constant change in weather. All the veterans in this class ask for is a reasonable amount on which to live. It is true that we may be establishing a precedent by fixing a minimum of $100, yet we feel the amount is just in such cases. The total cost of this provision is $714,000.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Is it the opinion of the committee that an amputation below the knee, for instance, is worse than a disability such as gastric ulcers or a condition which will keep a man in bed half the time?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I would be inclined to say that an amputation disability is permanent. A veteran suffering from a disability such as gastric ulcers may have a chance to recover.

Mr. MILLER. I think I can make an observation from experience. I would much prefer to have the amputation than a condition that keeps a man sick half the time.

Mr. RANKIN. The men who appeared before the committee with their arms and legs off testified that they did suffer, a great many of them immeasurably.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. That is correct.

Section 7 is entirely new legislation. It would establish a minimum rating of permanent partial 10 percent for wounds incurred in line of duty, in active service, in the World War. This new rating is designed to take care of 87,000 overseas World War veterans, the men who served in the front-line trenches, whose bodies were drilled by machine-gun bullets and torn by shrapnel and burned with mustard gas. This new rating was established to meet the inevitable aftermath of war. Many men received severe wounds but apparently recovered completely. Only the scars were left to show where the bullets struck. But after a lapse of many years, the effect of the wounds already have become apparent and taken a toll of their strength, and others will crack as the years go by. With their 10-percent rating already established, it will simplify their efforts to receive additional benefits if more serious complications develop. It no longer will be necessary for this battle casualty to search for comrades or officers, many of whom may have died, to furnish affidavits and establish a claim for an honorable wound, for which a grateful government always is willing to compensate a loyal citizen.

Another important feature of this new rating concerns the widow of the veteran. This will obviate the necessity of the widow scouring the country to get in touch with her late husband's comrades in order to establish the service-connection of his disability.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. If the veteran has a battle scar and does not apply for compensation himself, he is assured that if he dies from any other disability, his widow and orphan will be taken care of.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The chairman is correct.

Lastly, is the insurance provision of this proposal. With the depression upon us and many thousands of veterans out of work, those of us who have been fortunate enough to continue our war-risk insurance policies and who have had to borrow money on the policies have been charged 6 percent interest annually on the loan.

The old-line companies today charge 5 percent interest on new loans, while the veterans are expected to pay 6 percent on old and new loans. If this provision is adopted the rate of interest will be reduced from 6 to 5 percent, adding no cost to the Government immediately. However, there will be a decreased amount of income to the United States Government life insurance fund of $1,500,000 per year on outstanding loans, resulting in a corresponding reduction in dividends payable to policyholders.

Members of the House, the total cost of this bill is $18,751,000, a mere drop in the bucket in comparison to the billions being spent on relief, national defense and for other functions of our Government. Every penny of this amount goes to those citizens who have defended their country in times of emergency, or to their dependents and a vote for this measure is your approval of our Government's recognition of service on the part of a group whose contribution to the defense to this country was above and beyond the duty of an ordinary citizen.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO].

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, it is rather futile to attempt to oppose legislation of this character in the brief space of 1 minute. I am not opposed to the entire bill, because I believe that the committee has done well in drafting this legislation when one considers the numerous bills which were considered by the committee. Many bills making far greater demands and seeking to obtain countless benefits for veterans and their dependents were the subject of the committee's deliberations. However, this legislation unfortunately does not mean that these excessive demands have been rejected, since they may become the subject of House consideration at a later date.

Under the present method of considering this legislation it is not possible to so much as offer an amendment to the bill. Under the suspension of the rules only 40 minutes of debate is permitted, the debate is controlled by members of the committee, and at the conclusion of the debate the bill must be either passed or rejected as written. Nevertheless, I wish to call the attention of the Members to section 7 of this bill, which section, in my opinion, should not be enacted into law. Yet to eliminate this section it would be necessary to defeat the passage of this bill today and then consider the bill at a later date under a rule permitting amendment of the bill. Even though this bill were to be defeated today, it would still remain upon the House Calendar and be eligible for future consideration.

This bill is going to add $18,751,000 cost to the Veterans' Administration the first year. No estimate of the annual increases has been made, and so it is not possible to conjecture as to the ultimate cost of this single piece of legislation. Needless to say that the cost will mount steadily year by year for more than 20 years before the peak will be reached.

Section 7 of this bill will cost $10,500,000 alone the first year, placing as it does 87,000 new cases on the veteran rolls. This section requires that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall insert in the rating schedules of the Veterans' Administration a minimum rating of permanent partial 10 percent for wounds incurred in line of duty in active service during the World War. In a word, every World War veteran who received any injury whatsoever in line of duty while in active service shall automatically become entitled to a rating of permanent partial 10 percent. Regardless of the nature of the wound, regardless of the degree of injury, regardless of the character of disability, even regardless of the total lack of any disability whatsoever, nonetheless the wounded veteran shall hereafter be deemed to be not only 10 percent disabled but permanently 10 percent disabled.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] has told you that this is done for the benefit of the widows and orphans; in other words, we are not interested in the veteran who suffered the disability; we are only passing legislation for the sake of the widows and the orphans. I ask you, who went to war and who fought the battles? Is it the widow who married the veteran 20 years after the war is over? Or is it the widow who married the veteran 35 or 40 years after the war is over, as is possible in the case of Spanish War veterans? We grant no compensation to a veteran who is only 10 percent disabled, but the widow need only show a 10-percent disability in order to have her name placed permanently on the pension rolls. Because we are legislating not for the benefit of disabled veterans but only for the benefit of their dependents, we are therefore unable to pay adequate compensation to those who today really bear the marks of war and who actually suffer disability.

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] has just been complaining about the total inadequacy of the compensation given for amputation cases. Well may he do so. The reason that we are unable to properly provide for such genuine disability cases such as he speaks of, is due to the fact that we are providing more generously for those who did not participate in the war, for those who did not suffer any disability, and who perhaps are not properly entitled to receive any compensation. It is because of such legislation as is contained in this section 7 that the benefits payable to the deserving veterans must necessarily be reduced to such a point that it is not adequate to provide for the truly disabled. It is because we pass legislation such as this, which entails a cost of $10,500,000 the first year, with rapidly increasing costs annually, that we are unable to do justice to those whose disabilities originate in their wartime service to the country.

To further emphasize the point that I am endeavoring to make, let me call your attention to section 4 of this bill, which makes pensions available to the dependent parents of veterans whose deaths are not due to service-connected causes. This section alone adds the names of 5,200 parents to the veterans' rolls owing to the deaths of 4,300 veterans. The added cost of this section of the bill is $2,300,000. If you were to reject this bill today, and permit it to be later considered under a rule, you might then offer amendments to this bill to eliminate these two sections, sections 4 and 7, and thereby save a total of $12,800,000, a saving which could then be applied to augmenting the payments to those who have a just and meritorious claim upon the Government for adequate compensation for genuine service-connected injuries and truly permanent disabilities. Even though I may be but the voice of one crying in the wilderness, yet I nevertheless recommend that this procedure be followed here today, in order that exorbitant costs may not be saddled upon the Veterans' Administration and so that the truly deserving may be given more appropriate treatment.

If we continue upon the present course which we are following in regard to veterans' benefits, we will soon find that the annual cost of the Veterans' Administration will exceed the amounts appropriated for that purpose in the years just prior to the Economy Act. Before long the question of economy on the part of the Government is going to be foremost in the minds of the people of this Nation. When that occurs, you may be assured that the Veterans' Administration is going to be found in the embarrassing position of a billion-dollar bureau, merely because we here today are endeavoring to be kind friends of the veterans and so are adding $18,751,000 annually to the more than $500,000,000 which the Veterans' Administration is now costing. Yet this is only one of many veterans' bills to be passed by this House during the present session, with the promise of numerous other measures to follow. Individually, one bill is of little moment, but the mass of legislation each session gradually amounts to a staggering total, a total which the people of the Nation will not endure. The Nation cannot afford a billion dollars for the Veterans' Administration, a billion dollars for national defense, and a billion dollars for agriculture, along with all the other huge appropriations for the various regular departments of the Government as well as for the emergency agencies. In my opinion, we will be better friends of the veterans if we follow the advice of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] and give adequate compensation to those who suffered real disabilities, rather than give permanent rating to passing injuries from which the veteran has completely recovered.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to observe that I am glad to see the insurance clause lifted. The chairman of the committee and the ranking Republican member, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], will recall my somewhat heated remarks on the subject when the widows and orphans bill was revised in the Seventy-fifth Congress. I said at that time, and I say now, that it was unfair after a veteran died to charge against the pension that would be paid his widow and children the amount of the insurance they might draw from the insurance benefits he had bought and paid for.

When we were urged to take out that insurance when we were in the Army, the Navy, or Marine Corps, the one big argument used was that it would be insurance—not a pension. And many a veteran has denied himself personal comforts in order to keep that insurance up for his dependents, as something over and above what the Nation might do in the way of widows' and orphans' compensation.

Had the veteran taken that insurance from a private insurance company, the Government could never have deducted a like amount from monthly pension or compensation benefits; and the veteran paid for his Government insurance in cash the same as he did for any other insurance. It was never a gratuity, it was insurance, bought and paid for.

I am glad that this bill proposes to wipe out the disgrace of charging it up to disability compensation for widows and orphans.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, under doctor's orders against engaging in debate on the floor for a limited time, it is impossible for me to say much here. I simply will state that I am wholeheartedly in accord with this measure. My only objection is that it does not go far enough. I hope my colleagues will not forget those who were willing to make the supreme sacrifice when their country called.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee that brought in this legislation, I want to highly recommend it to the House. I am one of those who did not vote for the so-called economy bill, and I am for restoring everything that was taken from the veterans in that legislation. This bill—H. R. 5452—does not go far enough, but it is a step in the right direction. I am particularly interested in taking care of not only the veterans but their wives, widows, and orphans. I hope the bill passes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ROUTZOHN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 1½ minutes.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Speaker, I repeat a statement made by a previous speaker, that if this were the only legislation to be offered for the benefit of veterans, their dependent parents, their widows and orphans at this session of the Congress, I would not be here favoring this bill without offering numerous amendments thereto. I am here unqualifiedly favoring this bill, however, because I believe it meets a number of wrongs we are attempting to right. We cannot in all instances, because of certain circumstances, hope to correct all the mistakes, right all the wrongs, that have previously been made and perpetrated against the veterans of the World War and those dependent upon them, but this bill does attempt to correct certain mistakes and right certain wrongs.

The committee worked hard, laboriously, and long in an endeavor to satisfy the various demands made upon it by the exigencies of the situation. The earnest desire of the members was to obtain as much favorable legislation as possible and at the same time avoid serious opposition and possible Presidential veto. We have not enlarged the benefits as much as we should or as much as I trust we can and will at a future time. Furthermore, we have not restored to the World War veterans all that has been taken from them heretofore by a false economy measure.

The veterans of the World War are entitled to all that has been previously taken from them, and I am in favor of restoring now, or as soon as it can possibly be effected, all those rights and benefits former Congresses promised, granted, and voted them, and I, as a Member of Congress, will not be satisfied with World War veterans' legislation until we have not only restored those rights and benefits but have placed in the law of the land all the provisions to which the veterans, their parents, their widows, and their orphans are justly entitled. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how the time stands?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi has 4 minutes remaining. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts has consumed all her time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAY].

Mr. FAY. Mr. Speaker, I think the committee has not gone far enough in the matter of amputation cases in giving them $100 a month.

I am chairman of the World War Amputations Association of New York. Recently we made a poll of our members. Seventy-five percent of them are out of employment because no one wants to hire them. I have in my possession two letters from the United States Civil Service Commission telling two men who lost their legs but who were trained by the Federal Government after the war to be linotype operators, that they had passed their examinations for the jobs but that they were physically unfit to fill them. If our Government will not give these men work how can we expect private industry to employ them? [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it is a crime! These men cannot even come to our meetings, because of the small amount they receive as compensation—they are trying to support and bring up large families. [Applause.]

The men who lost their legs or arms in the war are not seeking charity but justice. I appeared before the Veterans Affairs Committee after I had introduced a bill whereby the World War Risk Insurance would be made available to veterans who lost a leg or arm during the war, for it is my belief that inasmuch as we paid for this insurance during the war, we were entitled to collect our just reward when we were disabled permanently for life.

We are getting older and our artificial limbs are getting harder to carry. I know this from personal reasons, for I was a patient at Walter Reed Hospital from November 10, 1938, to March 24, 1939, due to an infection of my stump which was caused by intensive use of my leg last September and October. My mind goes back to a few years ago when I was able to do anything another man with two legs could do.

Let me say that when I appeared before the Veterans Affairs Committee with Morris Novgrod, who represented the World War Amputations Association of the Disabled American Veterans, the chairman, Mr. Rankin, said that it was the first time in his memory that the "Amps" asked consideration. If you do not grant any more than $100 minimum, I trust that in the Congress of 1940 you will have available all records and statistics to prove that these men are entitled to full disability compensation. Private firms will not hire them and now, as I said before, the United States Civil Service Commission refuses to certify for appointment to the United States Government Printing Office two men who were trained in printing work by vocational training after the war by the United States and who are now ineligible, even though they lost their legs defending our country.

Gentlemen, you are taking a long-needed step in the right direction. Please go further and grant them total permanent disability.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that in most cases those who were disabled by service-connected disabilities have been fairly well cared for. It is true, in a number of cases the veterans probably have not received compensation commensurate with their disabilities.

But it is my belief, after having served on this committee for 3 months and having read a great deal of testimony, that the greatest disability not compensated by the Government today is the World War veteran who served his time but who since the war has been disabled and rendered unable to earn a living. That is, there are a considerable number of World War veterans who are disabled for life but because they are not permanently and totally disabled there is no law by which they may be compensated. Of course, I think the duty of the Government is first to those who were disabled in line of duty, but I happen to know a number of veterans who are not in a position to trace their disability and prove that it had its origin while in the service, but they are wholly incapacitated for work, unless it be of the lightest kind, and I am prepared to say now that I will welcome an opportunity to help enact legislation for the benefit of those who have a disability of as much as 25 percent or more and especially those who have disability of more than 50 or 75 percent. I am also in favor of compensating the needy widows and orphans of veterans regardless of the nature or character of the disability causing their death. I have seen a number of pathetic cases of this kind, and I really believe they should be cared for.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken upon this bill have the right to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Mississippi ask that all Members be allowed to extend their remarks on this bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Do I infer from the requests that have just been made that a Member may extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD whether he speaks on the bill or not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The request did not extend that far.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to support this bill, as it is now under consideration before the House, because it is a step in the right direction. There is no question but that the widows of World War veterans who are left with children to support and who have no adequate income are worthy of legislative consideration. In fact, I do not know of any veterans' legislation that would meet with more favor with the veterans generally than a bill that would provide reasonable compensation to widows with dependent children. I know that under the social-security law in most States there is provision for the benefit of widows with dependent children, but in many States this legislation has been so bound around that it has not been effective. I have had occasion at different times to put this to test to groups of veterans, and I find that they react more unanimously in favor of legislation for the benefit of widows and dependent children than to any other proposition of compensation in which they might be interested.

Several years ago I introduced what was probably the first bill drawn along scientific lines and provided for compensation to widows with dependent children. It provided a sliding scale, as most pension laws do, and I think would have been very satisfactory. It met with the approval of many veterans' groups, but was not adopted because of opposition in high places.

While this bill which we have for consideration today may not meet with my entire approval in every detail, it is a step in the right direction, and I am glad to take the step with the committee, and I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOXEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MILLS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the committee on bringing this bill (H. R. 5452) providing certain benefits to our veterans and their dependents, to the House for consideration, as I have always felt that our veterans have not been properly recognized.

For the benefit of the country as a whole, and for the veterans themselves, I wish to have included in the RECORD a comparative study that I have made of the compensation received by the veterans of the various States.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, unanimous consent has been granted every Member of the House who desires to do so to extend his remarks in the RECORD on this bill within 5 legislative days?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

WOULD LIBERALIZE VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, this bill to liberalize the present laws affecting veterans' legislation and to provide important benefits for World War veterans, their widows and dependents, is sane, sound, and reasonable legislation. It is my sincere hope that there will not be a vote cast against it. Certainly there should not be any opposition from any Member of this body.

I desire to compliment the chairman of the World War Veterans' Legislation Committee and all members of his committee for their good judgment in bringing in this important bill, which, so far as war veterans' legislation is concerned, is not only the most important bill brought before this House during the present session, but if I recall correctly, is the only bill which Members have had an opportunity to vote for to provide benefits to World War veterans or their widows and other dependents, thus far during this session of Congress. I trust it will not be the last one for there is much other proposed legislation that ought to be enacted.

My objection to the pending bill is that, in my judgment, it does not go far enough. It is, however, legislation that many veterans in and out of Congress have long been demanding. The American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars, the two largest veterans organizations in America, have repeatedly endorsed every provision in this bill, if I am correctly advised.

I am glad to give my support to this bill, not as a full measure of relief to the disabled veterans and their dependents but because it will give a long delayed justice to a small group that, up until this day, have been neglected and in many cases ignored by the Government they fought so valiantly and unselfishly to defend. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] pointed out that there is no provision in the pending measure to take care of that rather large group of presumptive cases that were unreasonably cut by the so-called Economy Act. I agree with the gentleman that this group has been mistreated. They should not have been cut to begin with, and I join in expressing my deep disappointment that these persumptives are not included under the provisions of the pending bill. It is my hope that this Congress will not adjourn without doing so. But merely because all deserving veterans are not provided for in this one bill, I cannot find it in my heart to oppose the measure, which certainly is commendable as far as it goes.

So again I simply wish to express the hope that Members will give this bill their enthusiastic support. I wish it might be possible to pass the pending bill here today by a unanimous vote. Let us do our duty now by our unfortunate war veterans. They did not shirk their duty to the country they love when the call came, and we must not shirk our responsibility to them now. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, may I say in reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] that, according to the formula he laid down, it would be impossible for us to write a veterans' bill that would suit him, because he objects to it when the bill takes care of the veterans' widows and orphans and then he objects because it takes care of the disabled veterans.

We did the best we could in framing this measure.

May I say in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAY] that he rendered a great service to these amputation cases when he came before the committee in their behalf? We went just as far as we could under the circumstances, and I think we have rendered justice in a large measure to those men who lost a hand, a foot, or an eye, and who have been unable to carry on since the close of the World War.

Mr. Speaker, this brings to a close the debate on this measure, and I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HART].

There was no objection.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentlewoman from New Jersey is detained on official business. The gentleman from New York, Mr. EVANS, is also detained because of illness. If these Members had been present, they would have voted "yea" on the bill just passed.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Florida, Mr. GREEN, has been called away on account of the illness of his brother. He did not instruct me to say so, but I am sure had he been present he would have voted "yea" on the bill just passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FLAHERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article taken from the London Times concerning the National Youth Administration of this country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FLAHERTY]?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Resolution 160.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 160

Resolved, That on Tuesday, May 30, 1939, immediately after the approval of the Journal, the House shall stand at recess for the purpose of holding the memorial services as arranged by the Committee on Memorials, under the provisions of clause 40–A of rule XI. The order of exercises and proceedings of the service shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and all Members shall have leave to extend their remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD until 10 legislative days thereafter on the life, character, and public service of the deceased Members. At the conclusion of the proceedings the Speaker shall call the House to order, and then, as a further mark of respect to the memories of the deceased, he shall declare the House adjourned; and be it further

Resolved, That the necessary expenses connected with the memorial services herein authorized shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House upon vouchers signed by the chairman of the Committee on Memorials and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE]?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Resolution 176.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 176

Whereas the Federal Crop Insurance Act, approved February 16, 1938, provided, in addition to making crop insurance available for wheat, that the Department of Agriculture conduct researches, surveys, and investigations relating to crop insurance for other commodities; and

Whereas appropriations were made for that purpose; and

Whereas legislation relative to crop insurance for cotton is now under consideration: Therefore be it

Resolved, That in order to promote the national welfare by alleviating the economic distress caused by the overproduction of cotton, and to provide for stable supplies of cotton for domestic consumption and the orderly flow thereof in interstate commerce, the Secretary of Agriculture be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives such pertinent data and information as the Department of Agriculture may have assembled relative to such crop insurance for cotton.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this is simply a resolution to procure information, and it has the unanimous support of the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. FULMER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is it not the policy of the Department of Agriculture to give the committee all the information the committee wants, without having a resolution of this kind?

Mr. FULMER. I may say to the gentleman that when we passed the crop insurance bill for wheat the Department was authorized to get all this information, but the bill did not state that the Department must submit this information to the Congress. This is the regular procedure to have the information sent here to go to the Printing Committee.

Mr. RICH. I know the gentleman is interested in cotton, and so are all of us because we want to take care of the cotton farmers, but if you are going to take care of the cotton farmers of this country you cannot raise the price to the skies as you have with all other commodities and then expect the people of the world to buy cotton. We have to get to the point where we can dispose of the stocks of surplus cotton. If you are going to make reciprocal-trade agreements with foreign nations, you ought to find some way of barter to get rid of this cotton so we can help the cotton farmer, but when you expect the American people to pay an exorbitant price for cotton and then leave the cotton stored in the American warehouses, how are you ever going to help the cotton farmer?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5324) to amend the National Housing Act, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] to the fact that the amendment which I presented, and which was added to the bill while it was in the House, was stricken out in the Senate and an amendment substituted. Six times the House passed my amendment, three times in Committee of the Whole and three times in the House, and on the final vote—a roll call—by a very substantial majority the amendment was adopted. I am not going to object to sending the bill to conference, but I do hope the House conferees will remember the action of the House on this amendment. The conferees are agents of the House and therefore, regardless of their own views, should insist on an amendment six times adopted by the House.

The Senate amendment, which is substituted for my amendment, is an improvement over the existing law insofar as the guaranty of the mortgage is concerned, according to various Senators who spoke on the amendment. It provides that the mortgage can be guaranteed only to 100 percent of the cost of the structure, but it must be remembered there is nothing in the Senate amendment that relates to the land or prevents a write-up of the land value, to which I objected and in which view a majority of the Members of the House concurred. I have no objection to the Senate amendment if it is an improvement over existing law, but as I said, it applies only to the structure. It seems to me in conference the Senate amendment could be kept in the bill, but my amendment should also be added. I am frank to say I am still in the dark as to just what the Senate amendment does but I accept the view of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] that it is an improvement over existing law so far as the guaranty on the structure is concerned.

In my opinion, the Senate amendment was written by the Federal Housing Administration, because an official of that Administration gave out an interview in which he said the Senate amendment would accomplish better what my amendment sought to accomplish. It seems very strange to me that an official of the Federal Housing Administration would try to improve my amendment when the Federal Housing Administration was 100 percent against the amendment. I cannot concur in the statement of the Federal Housing Administration that the Senate amendment is an improvement over my amendment. I cannot see for the life of me where there is anything in the Senate amendment that will prevent the write-up of land value, nor can anyone I talked with show me. We do not permit corporations or individuals to do what we are letting the Federal Housing Administration do under the present law when it comes to writing up land values.

In letting the bill go to conference I do so with the hope that the conferees will remember the action of the House on my amendment and that they will feel it their duty to stand squarely back of my amendment.

It was said in debate on this floor when the bill was under consideration St. Louis was the only place where the land values were written up. I ask you to read the debate in the Senate, especially what Senator WHEELER, of Montana, had to say and then you will see that it seems to be an adopted policy to have permitted the land-value write-ups. He stated he personally called to the attention of the Federal Housing Administration write-ups on land values on a number of projects.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I will not object to the bill going to conference. Therefore, I withdraw my reservation of objection and will look forward with interest to the action of the conferees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. STEAGALL, WILLIAMS, SPENCE, WOLCOTT, and GIFFORD.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4852) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1940, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object to this request—I understand we will get time to explain our position in reference to this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
JED JOHNSON,
J. G. SCRUGHAM,
JAMES M. FITZPATRICK,
CHAS. H. LEAVY,
ALBERT E. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I did not sign the report of the conferees on the Interior Department appropriation bill, and I will give you my reasons.

In the first place, let me call your attention to the fact that after the Civil War our national debt was $2,660,000,000, with an annual interest charge of approximately $34,500,000. The public debt in 1921, after the great World War, at its highest point was about $27,000,000,000. Between 1921 and 1929 we reduced our national debt from $27,000,000,000 to $16,000,000,000. When the present administration came into power in 1932 the debt had increased to $20,000,000,000, but from 1932 to 1939 the national debt has increased to the enormous amount of $40,051,484,292, this being the figure as of April 26, 1939, according to the Treasury Department statement.

This year, since July 1, we have increased our national debt $2,858,838,095.55. This means that every day since the 1st of last July you have run in the red $9,625,720, every hour you run in the red $401,071, every minute since July 1 you run in the red $6,684.63. This is an appalling position in which we find ourselves today.

Last week you passed the Treasury and Post Office appropriations bill and in the Treasury Department you gave them $1,050,000,000 to pay the interest on the public debt, which is more than it cost to run the Government in the year 1914, a deplorable situation.

What have you done at this session of the present Congress in the matter of appropriations? Let us just look at the record. This is worth while and the Members of Congress ought to have some realization of the facts as to what you are doing.

You have spent for relief or for W. P. A., $725,000,000 with an additional relief bill of $100,000,000. The first deficiency bill amounted to $23,765,000; the independent offices bill, $1,668,000,000; the legislative establishment, $21,985,000; Treasury and Post Office, $1,700,000,000; War Department, $508,000,000; second deficiency appropriation bill, $177,000,000; Agriculture, $1,085,000,000; the Interior Department, as the bill passed the House, $159,000,000; the District of Columbia, $46,902,000; Department of Labor, $30,533,000.

This makes a total of appropriations already made of over $6,200,000,000.

You still have remaining, after the passage of this appropriation bill, the nonmilitary appropriations for the War Department, which will be $200,000,000 or more; you will have the Navy appropriation bill, which will be $550,000,000 or more; you will have the State, Justice, and Commerce bill, which will be more than $120,000,000; you will have the relief appropriation bill, which the President already has stated will be $1,723,000,000; you will have other appropriation bills coming up, such as flood control and things of that kind, for which you can add $100,000,000.

This means you are going to appropriate over $8,909,000,000 before this session of Congress is over.

Let us now see just where we are with respect to receipts.

In 1938 we received in taxes of all kinds, $6,241,661,000. The President estimated that the 1939 income would be $5,521,000,000; the President estimated for 1940, $5,669,000,000.

Now, if we have spent $8,909,000,00 and we are only going to take in $5,669,000,000, you know that in the year 1940 you are going to be $3,240,000,000 in the red for that year.

This is a horrible and terrible situation which is confronting us and I want to tell you as legislators that the responsibility rests upon the American people to pay this bill, and this Congress is responsible for getting us into this deplorable situation, which is a travesty upon the American children recently born as well as those yet to be born, who will have to pay the debts which we are creating.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield for a question.

Mr. KITCHENS. A few moments ago we voted upon the bill H. R. 5452, which increased veterans' benefits to the extent of $5,032,000. Did the gentleman vote for that?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I voted for that; but let me tell the gentleman this: You owe an obligation to some of the veterans of this country who are still unpaid, and I hope we will take care of them, but let me say that if you continue the way you are going in this radical and ruthless expenditure of Government money, it will only be a few years before the veterans, like everybody else, will give up all claims that they have on this Government, and the Federal Government, by reason of the foolish things that we are doing in the Congress, will have everybody in this Nation wrecked. This is a sad and deplorable condition.

Let me now tell you what the President of the United States said on July 2, 1932:

> I propose to you, my friends, that government be made solvent and that the example be set by the President of the United States.

Has the President said anything about making this Government solvent in the last year or so? No. He has forgotten his promise to our people.

Let me call your attention to a statement that he made on January 3, 1934, in his Budget message:

> Furthermore, the Government during the balance of this calendar (1934) year should plan to build its 1936 expenditures, including recovery and relief, within the revenues expected within the fiscal year 1936. We should plan to have a definite balanced Budget for the third year of recovery and from that time on seek a continuing reduction of the national debt.

This was a statement made by the President and should be carried out, but he has not said anything about it recently.

The President has forgotten that promise also.

Let me call your attention to another statement which was made by Postmaster General Farley at Salt Lake City on August 1, 1934:

> You are having the most economical Federal administration you have had for years.

I wonder what Mr. Farley would think of such statements as that today? It is a real joke now, and it was a joke at the time.

Let me now call your attention to what this conference report really and actually means.

We went to conference and we worked 1 whole day. I have a very high regard for the members of the conference committee on the part of the House. I wish the rules permitted me to say something about the other end of the Capitol, but the rules forbid. The amount of the appropriation as it passed the House was $159,539,815. After it passed the Senate it was $174,975,288. The Senate increased this bill $15,335,473. After the conferees had agreed on the bill, the total amount was $172,604,765.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. This bill is over the appropriation for 1939 in the sum of $26,877,851. What did we do when we went to conference? On 25 items the House receded to the Senate to the extent of $13,065,950. The Senate receded on 16 items in the amount of $1,300,000. I am going to leave it to the House of Representatives as to whether we made a good bargain. When I make a bargain I think it ought to be pretty close to 50-50, do you not? We did not do our duty; that is why I refused to sign the report.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is the gentleman asking me?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; I think we ought to get as much as we give. But I want to ask the gentleman this question. The gentleman said the Senate receded on many items and also stated the small amount involved.

Mr. RICH. Sixteen items in the amount of $1,300,000, and the House receded on 25 items to the amount of $13,065,950.

Mr. COCHRAN. Therefore the gentleman admits that insofar as the item affecting the Jefferson Memorial was concerned there was no money involved; is that right?

Mr. RICH. Oh, we cut that out.

Mr. COCHRAN. But I say on that amendment there was no money involved; is that not right? The Senate receded?

Mr. RICH. We cut that item out. I hope we are through with it forever.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Senate receded, though?

Mr. RICH. That item was agreed to by conferees, and we cut it out; thank goodness.

Mr. COCHRAN. Well, the Senate receded on that item?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is one of the items on which the Senate receded?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Therefore, if the Senate in receding on 16 items and only $1,300,000 was involved, the gentleman admits there was no money at stake on the Jefferson Memorial item. There could not have been because it was simply extending an obligation already made, the money being on deposit in the Treasury.

Mr. RICH. Well, they intended to get six and a half million dollars. That is what they eventually wanted. They wanted to get six and a half million dollars for that memorial, for that land steal that they wanted out there in St. Louis. The question is, Will the House continue to yield? Will the House stiffen its backbone, or will you continue to be jellyfish, wishy-washy representatives of the people, or tweedledees or tweedledums? That is the question that will be in the minds of the American people. Are you going to be tweedledees or tweedledums?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. A moment ago the gentleman said he was sorry the rules did not permit him to say something about the Senate. Could he think of anything worse to say about them than he has said about his own colleagues on the House committee?

Mr. RICH. I will say to the majority leader it needs somebody in the House of Representatives who has backbone, who has intestinal fortitude, who has patriotism to try to save America. I think if anybody on the floor of this House ought to stand here and try to protect the Treasury it is the majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. I will say to the gentleman that the majority leader tries to protect the Treasury in one way at least. He does not speak unless it is absolutely necessary. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I would like to yield, but I cannot yield. I cannot yield now.

Now, I want to call attention to some things in disagreement. Gentlemen, we have to call a spade a spade. Talk about voting $6,000,000 for the veterans. Let me call attention to what we have in here, where you can save some real money, some things that have some merit to them. But when you think of spending $17,000,000 for a battleship, there are some items here that will cost one-fourteenth the price of a battleship and are worth 100 times more; but some place, somewhere, sometime we ought to economize. I do not want to say anything against any Member of the House. There is no man in the House of Representatives that I want to take any fall out of personally. I do not have the least desire to do that. I came here to try to do my duty as an American citizen, honestly and fearlessly.

Let me call attention to amendment No. 20, the Crow Indian irrigation project, in Montana, $500,000, which will cost $1,000,000. Do you want to continue that project? Amendment No. 27 in conference, relating to the reindeer of Alaska, $1,070,000. We are going to ask for a vote on that. I tell you you do not need them. There is no more use of our buying all the reindeer of Alaska than there is in trying to can all the smoke that comes out of the smokestacks of the city of Washington. It is absolutely useless.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. RICH. The Lugert-Altus project in Oklahoma, $500,000, which will eventually cost $5,365,000. I would say from what I have investigated that that project might be well worth while at a time when we have some money. I question very much whether we ought to do it now, but if the House sees fit to do it, this is about as worthy a project as there is in the bill and will accomplish some good for that country out there; but here is a place where you can save one-fourteenth the cost of a battleship. If spent on a project like this, however, instead of on a battleship, and it would do more good if you spent this money and cut out a $70,000,000 battleship.

Amendments 52 and 53, in conference, deal with the Colorado River project in Texas. You are asked to spend $5,000,000 there. You have spent on that project $12,000,000 and you will be asked to spend $15,000,000 more. That dam, Marshall Ford Dam, was built to a height of 190 feet. They put a power project in it and now they have got to raise it 70 feet more in order to make it a flood-control project. When it is finished $14,885,000 will be charged to flood control and $12,623,000 to the generation of power, nonreimbursable—at least, that is what the hearings of the Senate committee show.

Amendment 55, water conservation and utility project, $5,000,000, to be allocated by the President in such amount as he deems necessary to such Federal departments, establishments, and other agencies as he may designate. Do you not think that the House of Representatives should designate where these funds are to be spent? I do, and I hope you will vote down some of these amendments in disagreement and show to the taxpayers that you have some desire to cut down your ruthless spending. If you do not, there is no hope for America with this New Deal administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Will a vote on the adoption of the conference report preclude a consideration of and a separate vote upon the reindeer item and this $5,000,000 item?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendments in disagreement will be taken up separately.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 4: Page 4, after line 2, insert:
"The Secretary of the Interior shall include in his annual report a full statement of all expenditures made under authority of this paragraph."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 9, page 14, line 3, after the word "exhibits", insert the following: "not to exceed $25,000 for employing persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, for special reporting, engineering, technical, legal, and other services determined necessary by the Administrator, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), and without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: Provided, That of the $4,500,000 hereby made available for administrative expenses of the Authority, not to exceed $1,500,000 shall be available for such expenses incurred at the site, and in connection with the construction, of the United States Housing Authority non-Federal projects, and shall be reimbursed by the public housing agencies constructing such projects, and such reimbursements shall be available for administrative expenses of the Authority: Provided further, That hereafter all necessary expenses in connection with the management and operation of projects transferred to the Authority by Executive Order No. 7732 of October 27, 1937, as modified by Executive Order No. 7839 of March 12, 1938, may be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof, and be paid from the rents received from each transferred project: Provided further, That hereafter the funds made available for administrative expenses of the United States Housing Authority shall be available for the payment, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, of actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses to persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Authority: Provided further."

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FITZPATRICK moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 21 of said amendment, after the word "expenses", strike out the words "for the purposes", and in line 22 strike out the word "hereof" and insert in lieu thereof the following: ", notwithstanding the provisions of section 7 of the act of June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1647, 1648)."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 14, after the figure "470" and the parenthesis, insert "Provided further, That the aforesaid $100,000 for advances to individual members of the Menominee Tribe of Wisconsin shall be advanced under rules and regulations approved by the advisory council of the Menominee Indians and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided further, That in no event shall the 'Menominee 5 percent log fund' be used for this purpose."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14 and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 36, line 10, after the word "binding", insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter no individual of less than one-quarter degree of Indian blood shall be eligible for a loan from funds made available under this head."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment to the amendment No. 16.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided, That hereafter no individual of less than one-quarter degree of Indian blood shall be eligible for a loan from funds made available in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 986), and the act of June 26, 1936 (49 Stat. 1967)."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman in charge of this bill.

I am wondering if the effect of this amendment to the amendment would not possibly be to interrupt the educational career of persons of less than one-fourth Indian blood who already have an education loan under the act of June 18, 1934, that is from the educational fund provided in one section of that act. It occurs to me there are students now in school and in the midst of possibly a 3- or 4-year course who have a loan at the present time from the educational fund provided in the act of June 18, 1934. If this motion should be agreed to, it occurs to me from hearing the amendment to the amendment that next fall some of these students who may be in their senior year might be denied a loan. It seems to me an exception should be made at least to permit those students who are now receiving loans to continue to receive these loans to the end of the course in which they are engaged.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman has raised an interesting question, but a question which is an administrative matter, so far as the Indian Office is concerned. The amendment, as the gentleman will note, states that "hereafter" those of less than one-quarter Indian blood shall not get loans under the acts cited. I would assume it does not apply to those now receiving such help.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But those loans are made for each fiscal or school year. I have in mind some students who have received loans for 1 or 2 years of their educational career. This would mean they could not get a loan out of this fund hereafter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman that certainly was not idea of the committee at all. The committee wanted to permit those who are now receiving such loans to continue to receive them. However, the time has come when we cannot throw the matter entirely wide open and permit everyone of thirty-second or sixty-fourth degree Indian blood to receive benefits under this act.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. One further question. Would the gentleman object to putting a proviso on the end of his amendment to provide that this limitation shall not apply to those who are now receiving loans until they have completed their course, or something to that effect?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not think it would be wise to do that at this time. Later on if we find it is working a hardship on anyone, the matter can be corrected. It could be corrected in a deficiency bill, I may say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 19: Page 37, line 7, after the word "annum", insert the following: "Provided further, That hereafter the appropriation 'Development of Indian arts and crafts' shall be available for the payment of not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of members of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board, serving without other compensation from the United States while absent from their homes on official business of the Board."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendent insert the following: "Provided further, That hereafter any appropriation for the development of Indian arts and crafts, made pursuant to the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 891), shall be available for the payment of not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses of members of the Indian Arts and Crafts Board, serving without other compensation from the United States while absent from their homes on official business of the Board."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 20: Page 47, line 19, after the word "Montana", insert the following:

"Crow: The Secretary of the Interior may incur obligations and enter into a contract or contracts not exceeding $500,000 for the completion of a storage dam and reservoir on the Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., at a total cost of not to exceed $1,000,000, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof, and appropriations hereafter made for this project shall be available for the purpose of discharging the obligation or obligations so created."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 27: Page 62, after line 6, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Reindeer industry, Alaska: For the purchase, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem advisable, of reindeer, abattoirs, cold-storage plants, corrals and other buildings, and communication and other equipment, owned by nonnatives in Alaska, as authorized by the act of September 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 900), $820,000; and for necessary administrative expenses in connection with such purchase and the establishment and development of the reindeer industry for the benefit of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska, as authorized by said act, including personal services in the District of Columbia (not to exceed $2,300) and elsewhere, traveling expenses, erection, repair, and maintenance of corrals, fences, and other facilities, $250,000; in all, $1,070,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That under this appropriation not exceeding an average $4 per head shall be paid for reindeer purchased from nonnative owners: Provided further, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to the purchase of reindeer located on Nunivak Island."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if he will yield me about 3 minutes?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, this is the same reindeer item on which the House voted during consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill. The House voted this item down by a considerable majority.

Mr. Speaker, it is needless to go into the details of this bill at the present time, but may I say when it comes to spending $1,070,000 to purchase reindeer in Alaska, when the Eskimo now have 180,000 reindeer of their own, it seems to me it is a most foolish project for the Government of the United States to enter into. This is only to take care of some private interests up there because of a bill passed a couple of years ago. There are 49 different people up in Alaska who own reindeer and will have to be bought out eventually. Why the American people should be forced into a project which takes care of some individuals who have failed in their own business I cannot understand and I think the taxpayers back home will bless every one of you if you defeat this motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of misunderstanding about this item. It is not an attempt by private parties to unload these reindeer at all.

The Lomens, who are the principal nonnative owners of reindeer, had no desire to sell these reindeer. They had pioneered, developed, and were operating a profitable business in them, but the Government decided that because of the mismanagement and the deterioration of the native herds and because of lack of coordination in this industry it was desirable to place all the reindeer under a native Eskimo monopoly, thereby forcing the Lomens out of a very profitable business. They will lose probably a million dollars as it is. The Government is simply buying these herds at an average price of $4 a head so the reindeer can all be consolidated into one Eskimo monopoly, which apparently is a desirable thing to do. Thus, the Government is forcing the Lomens out of business. It is not a proposition of taking over a "white elephant" by any means. The Lomens would like nothing better than to be permitted to continue in the reindeer business in Alaska, but that has now been made impossible by action of Congress and the Interior Department.

Reindeer are vital to the Eskimo. The reindeer is the one animal that can subsist in that Territory. This reindeer business can bring about a splendid economic future for the Eskimos. The reindeer provides food and clothing, and in itself is a fine national defense item, because some day we may have to operate in Alaska and the reindeer would be our food supply. We are faced with the alternative of either building an industry which will make the Eskimo self-supporting or having to feed the Eskimo forever out of Federal relief funds.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. If this proposition goes through, the Eskimo will become independent for all time to come?

Mr. MASS. Yes; and we eliminate the relief problem in Alaska, at least among the Eskimos.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASS. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. THORKELSON. The reindeer is the only four-legged animal that can live in Alaska. Deer and elk cannot live there.

Mr. MAAS. Reindeer and caribou are the only such animals and the reindeer are closely related to the caribou. The reindeer will live and flourish in Alaska when properly herded and properly protected. The only way this can be done on a proper basis is by having one management for the herds in Alaska, which is now impossible due to the diverse ownership. This bill will make possible the creation of a thriving industry that will make the Eskimos in Alaska self-supporting.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the Eskimos herd these reindeer, or are we going to have someone else herd these animals for the Eskimos?

Mr. MAAS. The plan is to train young Eskimos under a systematic program to herd the reindeer themselves. No such comprehensive program is possible under present circumstances.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I have had so much to say about this reindeer problem on former occasions that while I am very grateful to the gentleman from Oklahoma for giving me 5 minutes I do not propose to take all that time because my views on this question are too well known by this House.

I do not know why we are asked today to rescind the action of the House when this particular question arose and this particular language now in the bill was offered as amendment to the bill when it was considered before and was voted down; yet we are asked today to rescind the previous action of the House. Why? Simply because another body at the other end of the Capitol has seen fit to put back in the bill the language this House saw fit to take out on a previous occasion. That is the whole thing in a nutshell.

A great deal has been said here about putting the Eskimos on relief. The same argument could be made about every class of our citizenry in this country. If you were to go down into my section of the country, for instance, or into your section, and buy up cattle and turn them over to our citizens, you would keep them off relief. I cannot follow this argument. My objection to the particular type of legislation contained in this item goes to the proposition that we are entering a new field of endeavor. While we are talking about economizing in government, by this item we would be going into an entirely new field and spreading out and expending more money and more money, although our attention is repeatedly called to the fact that this Government is going in the red by its expenditures in excess of $10,000,000 a day.

This House can do as it sees fit. I have said my last word about this proposition. I have no interest in it. It does not mean anything to me one way or the other, but if this House sees fit simply because the other body has seen fit to do so to put this language back in the bill, after the House voted down similar language after a substantial and lengthy debate, then it is up to the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, we had agreed to yield time to other Members. I did not move the previous question and I feel obligated to yield those Members time. For instance, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has asked for time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was very careful to see if the gentleman or any other gentleman in the House was on his feet after the gentleman from Mississippi concluded. Seeing no one asking for recognition, the Chair put the question on the motion. The Chair believes that of his own accord he would have no right or authority to go back. That could be done, in the opinion of the Chair, only by the granting of unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings. The Chair will entertain such a request.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In fairness to everyone, Mr. Speaker, I make that request at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all proceedings on the motion heretofore pending relating to reindeer in Alaska be vacated. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have conducted our opposition to this amendment, and acting under the rules of the House we have voted it down, and I shall have to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have not taken any time on this matter, and I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to be fair, and I feel the gentleman should withdraw his objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he knows very well that we expected the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND] to close this debate, and it does seem to me it would be taking a very undue advantage of him. Possibly the fault was mine or the fault of the gentleman from Oklahoma that we were not on our feet at the time.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his objection.

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado this question. The gentleman stated I knew that the Delegate from Alaska wanted to close this debate. I knew nothing about that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I assumed that everybody understood that.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the chairman of the committee whether we will get a roll call on this matter after debate is closed? If we are to have a roll call, I shall be pleased to withdraw my objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We cannot prevent the gentleman from having a roll call if he wants it.

Mr. RICH. In order to be fair to the Delegate from Alaska and the chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] desire some time?

Mr. TABER. I would like some time, but it seems there are three or four other speakers in favor of the motion, as I understand it, and I feel that we ought not to use all the opposition time now.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, it is extremely important that this Congress make a decision, and make a decision rightly, on this reindeer controversy. I doubt if we have had anything in the last 3 or 4 years that has been so completely misunderstood as this reindeer question.

In the first place, let me say that I do not believe there is a Member of this body now, and I doubt if we have had one for years, who would have the temerity to say or even to believe that we should permit the native Eskimo of Alaska to starve to death. This is one of the issues here involved.

When the white man went in there the native Eskimo had his great herds of caribou, and the coming of the white man, with the use of firearms and with the destructive methods taught, the caribou soon disappeared and then Uncle Sam went over into Siberia and introduced the first cousin of the caribou, the reindeer, and from 1892 until about 15 years ago the ownerships were all natives. Today they have 500,000 reindeer in Alaska, two-thirds of them are under the Indian Bureau of the Department of the Interior, held and cared for in trust for the Eskimos. The other one-third is in nonnative ownership, there being 46 different nonnative owners.

The conflicts that have arisen by reason of this divided ownership, and the advantages that have been taken by the nonnatives as against the interests of the natives, are resulting in the reindeer herds in Alaska becoming rapidly depleted and for this reason we must iron out this difference. We can do this by simply taking from the nonnatives their property, virtually without any compensation, as I indicated when this matter was up before. The Government can levy a range fee, and thus take their property from them by exercising a legal right, through a remedy grossly inequitable and unconscionable. Nobody would want to do this.

I am not a partisan in this matter, because I opposed it for 2 years until the matter was fully presented to us. The thing we should do, in fairness and in justice, is to pay not what the owners want, but pay for these reindeer what they are worth to the Government, as a matter of necessity for the native Eskimo.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky and Mr. MASSINGALE rose.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Can the gentleman tell me how much is allowed in this appropriation bill for the Eskimos, not including the reindeer part? How much does this bill carry for the Eskimos for schooling and other items?

Mr. LEAVY. I could only answer that question generally.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. The gentleman is a member of the committee, is he not?

Mr. LEAVY. I would state that the per capita cost to the Government of caring for the Eskimo in Alaska is substantially under what it is for caring for the American Indian in continental United States.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I do not want the gentleman to dodge the question. Is not the bill carrying more than $900,000 for the care of the Eskimos and you only have 15,000 of them up there?

Mr LEAVY No; there are nearly 20,000 of them—19,000 of them, I believe, is the exact number.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. What about the amount of the appropriation carried in the bill?

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman may be correct that it is $900,000, but that is only $45 per capita per annum. I want to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. I would like to ask the gentleman for a little information about this bill. I am sure that the gentleman from Washington knows more about the reindeer in Alaska than, perhaps, anybody in this House, except the Delegate from Alaska himself. Here is where I need a little information. On page 62, line 26, there is this language:

Provided, That under this appropriation not exceeding an average of $4 per head shall be paid for reindeer purchased from nonnative owners: Provided further, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to the purchase of reindeer located on Nunivak Island.

What I would like to know, and I think the gentleman perhaps might state it, what is the difference between the Nunivak Island reindeer and the reindeer on the tundra in Alaska?

Mr. LEAVY. The reindeer upon this island represent but a very small percentage of the whole number. I cannot give the exact number. They are on an island where the condition is entirely different from that on the mainland. The herd is a herd of far superior quality, just as you will find distinctions in cattle or horses or any other animal.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The fact of the ownership by certain people of these Nunivak Island reindeer does not make any difference?

Mr. LEAVY. I can assure the gentleman that it does not. There has been no discrimination whatever by the committee that investigated this matter for the Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. There are only 14,000 of these superior animals on the island.

Mr. LEAVY. Yes, the gentleman is correct. We spent $50,000 in connection with this matter last year—I say "we," I mean the Congress of the United States—directed and authorized such expenditure. First we had an appropriation in last year's bill in the amount of $1,000,000 to buy reindeer, and then because of misunderstandings and differences the Congress authorized the chairmen of the House and Senate Appropriation Committees to appoint a congressional committee, not made up of Members of Congress, but a committee representing the Congress, headed by Mr. Rachford, of the Forestry Service. That committee went into Alaska and spent much of the summer there. Their findings and report are before us, and we are just carrying out their findings, an impartial and, I think, most thorough investigation. I want to say again that to me personally this does not mean anything, but we are concerned with this fact: Either we meet the Eskimo problem in Alaska by adopting a policy in reference to the reindeer that has promise in making them self-sufficient economically, or we adopt a policy of starving them to death. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I think there are a few things that the Members of the House ought to know about this reindeer situation. There are about 300,000 reindeer in Alaska. Of those 300,000 reindeer, 200,000 at least are in native ownership. The natives have absolute control over them. That means at least 10 for every man, woman, and child amongst the Eskimos; more reindeer than there are cattle in the United States for the people of the United States; many times more than there are milk cows.

Now, what does this mean? If you take their story at face value there are perhaps 100,000 reindeer that may be bought. If you paid the low price for reindeer, $1.50, that would make $150,000. If you paid the high price or the average price of $4, that would make $400,000. We are asking for $800,000 for that purpose. Now, you can see what kind of a proposition this is that is being put up to you. You see the way these promoters who want to get rid of a losing venture are trying to get help out of the United States Treasury. Why would it not be a little better if the people of this country were thought of a little bit and we did not do the things for the Eskimo that do not need to be done?

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I would like to remind the gentleman in that connection that the initial cost of these animals is going to prove to be the small portion of the outlay from the Government in the long run, because we will have to maintain a bureau to administer that, with a lot of employees and so on. It is estimated that it will run something like $100,000, as I recall, per year to maintain this bureau.

Mr. TABER. And we are going to buy slaughterhouses, and all that sort of trimmings.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This will be a real Santa Claus bill. We have 15 reindeer in every Eskimo's garage. That is better than two cars in every garage and two chickens in every pot.

Mr. TABER. It will improve the market for sleigh bells. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL. I would like to correct the gentleman's statement in regard to the number of reindeer. On page 541 of the hearings the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] asked the following question:

Mr. CARTER. At the present time, if I recollect it properly, you estimate that there are about 500,000 reindeer in this particular area, of which number 180,000 are owned by nonnatives, which would leave 320,000 in native ownership; am I correct in that?
Mr. RACHFORD. Yes, sir; that is right; 320,000.

Mr. TABER. It was 250,000 when this was first started 5 years ago. Then it got to be 300,000, and now they say 500,000. And all the time they say that the reindeer is being wiped out. That means over 15 for each Eskimo man, woman, and child. I wonder whether we need more?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I have been told that these reindeer run on the range and probably are not seen or counted once in 12 months; that it is impossible to count them. They run wild like foxes on the range. Is that correct?

Mr. TABER. No one in the world knows which reindeer belongs to which outfit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, if the statement made by the gentleman from New York be correct, that no one knows who owns the reindeer in Alaska, it would seem that the logical thing to do would be for the Government to take them over so there could be no dispute as to the ownership. As I view this proposition, it is simply one where we are called upon to decide whether we want to make the American Eskimo self-sustaining or place him on the dole. To me it seems that the better way is to make him self-sustaining. That is not paternalism; it is just good business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE] 5 minutes.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything on this subject. I am not a member of the committee which studied it. I have, however, given some attention to the subject. I feel that there is much misunderstanding about it. The misunderstanding, in part, I think, arises out of the association of reindeer in our minds with a yearly custom we followed in this country as children. This is a business proposition; no Santa Claus is connected with the reindeer we are dealing with.

This is a problem with which the Interior Department has been confronted for a long period of years because the Interior Department is the agency of the Government responsible for the Eskimos. This Department has studied this question by sending its own men to Alaska several years ago, and as a result of this study reached the conclusion that the welfare of the Eskimo demanded that this essential problem be solved in some way. The Department undertook to solve it by regulation, but instead of improving the situation it made it worse for both the Eskimo and the white men who were concerned with the industry up there. The Department finally reached the conclusion, as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] stated a while ago, that the logical and businesslike thing to do was for the Government to purchase all the reindeer so they would all be under the supervision of the Eskimo. The Committee on Appropriations, however, before deciding the matter sent a committee of specialists to make a study for the benefit of Congress. As a result of this study the committee reached the conclusion that purchase of the reindeer was the logical way to solve the problem. I may say in passing that the men who made up this special committee were familiar with this kind of thing. It is not a problem with which most of us are familiar, but I feel that we are safe in going on the assumption that the Department of the Interior is not trying to put anything over on the Congress; and I think we are equally safe in assuming that this committee of businessmen which was sent up there to make this study is not trying to put anything over on the Congress or on the Government.

This committee found a very confusing situation existing up there. They stated in their report that it was impossible to tell definitely the number of reindeer. It estimated the number, as was stated a while ago, to be 500,000. Of these, 180,000 were estimated to belong to nonnatives. Much more is involved, however, than the mere number of reindeer that belong to nonnatives, because there is a conflict of interests, a conflict of grazing rights. The Eskimo is not in position to assert himself. He is, I understand, being driven off and does not have the full use and enjoyment of the public range.

As was stated by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY], the Government could arbitrarily impose a grazing fee to drive the nonnatives out if it wanted to, but the nonnatives acquired these deer under governmental regulations; they did nothing improper, and their activity has been looked upon as a proper adventure; but the situation has become so confusing that the Department feels that the question should be settled in the interest of both the Eskimo and the nonnatives.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, is it not true that this proposal originated in the Department of the Interior and not with the reindeer owners?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. That is entirely true. The Department is the one that originated this proposition and sent it down to Congress. The nonnatives who are in the business did not come to Congress undertaking to put this proposition over.

The situation has become so confused that it is impossible to operate until the situation is clarified. It is only natural that the nonnative owners of reindeer would like to have the proposition solved in some businesslike way, either through purchase or otherwise.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman sure he is correct when he states that the Interior Department initiated this proposal? As I remember it, the Committee on Appropriations asked for an appropriation last year to send this committee up to Alaska to study the situation.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. That is true; the Appropriations Committee sent its representatives, but the Department of the Interior, before the committee was appointed, made representations, as I understand, to the Congress recommending to the committee and to the Congress that this kind of solution be concluded.

I do wish to emphasize, because I fear there is a misunderstanding on this phase of the subject, that the nonnative owners did not originate this solution of the matter. The Department of the Interior originated it. [Applause.]

If I am incorrect in that statement, of course, I want the chairman of the committee to correct me. That is my understanding, and I think I am correct.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I may say to the gentleman that he is absolutely correct in his statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, as this debate has proceeded, not only today but when the reindeer bill was before the House, and a few days ago when the Department of the Interior appropriation bill was under consideration and this particular item was debated, I have been continuously struck with greater and greater force by the fact that those who really know something about the matter are those who most earnestly and enthusiastically favor it. I do not know of a single Member of the House, except the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], who has ever been in Alaska and who opposes the proposal now before you in the form of this particular amendment. It is my understanding that when the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] was in Alaska he did not visit the reindeer districts.

It is quite true, so far as I am aware—and I say this only because evidently some Members have a different impression—that the original plan for the purchase of nonnative reindeer in Alaska for the benefit of the natives originated not in the minds of the nonnative owners of reindeer, but originated in the Department of the Interior. It was from that source I first heard of the subject and it took some argument to bring me to the point of favoring it.

When the purchase proposal was brought before the Committee on Appropriations, I think I am well within the facts in saying that not a single member of that committee favored it, favored the purchase of non-native-owned reindeer in Alaska. A number of the members of that committee expressed themselves vigorously against it. But as we studied it more and more, we came to the conclusion that the purchase of the non-native-owned deer was the only permanent solution of the problem.

When I introduced the first reindeer bill, there was much opposition in the House Appropriations Committee. There was opposition elsewhere, some in Alaska. So the first bill died without action being taken thereon. I went to Alaska in 1936 and spent considerable time in the reindeer country. I made a most careful and thorough investigation of the entire subject. I returned to Washington convinced that the reindeer bill ought to pass and I again introduced it. The bill was carefully considered by the House Committee on Territories; it was carefully considered on the floor of this House, and after extensive debate the bill was passed. An appropriation of $2,000,000 was authorized to carry out the purposes of the bill.

Some of you may remember that during the debate on that bill I asked that a provision be put in the bill that it should not go into effect in any particular unless an appropriation of at least $1,000,000 was made to carry the measure into effect. That amendment was defeated because the statement was made, at least privately to me and I think it was made on the floor of the House, that if the bill passed after that debate and after that discussion the appropriation, of course, would be made to carry the bill into effect. I could not conceive that the Congress would do so frivolous a thing as to pass a bill of this kind after extensive debate and authorize an appropriation of money, then fail to appropriate the money necessary to put the provisions of the bill with respect to purchase of reindeer and equipment into effect.

When the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi asks, "Why is this item here now? Did we not pass upon it adversely the other day?" I say in reply that this proposal is here now, this amendment is offered now, because a few days ago the House made a mistake that is bound to be tragic in its consequences to the natives of Alaska unless we here correct it. If democratic parliamentary government means anything it means that those who know a subject, those who are specially interested in it, ought to exercise every possible parliamentary procedure in order to give the House a chance to correct an error that has been made.

Mr. LEAVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. Is it not a fact that by reason of the chaotic conditions existing in the reindeer industry in Alaska during the last 3 years particularly, some herds have dropped from as much as 27,000 down to 2,700 deer?

Mr. DIMOND. That is quite true. The herds have materially decreased. The statement has been made that we have so many hundreds of thousands of reindeer in Alaska, which means so many reindeer for every man, woman, and child who belong to any Eskimo tribe, family, or community. May I impress upon you the fact there are not nearly as many reindeer in Alaska today as there were a few years ago and at the present rate of depletion inside of 20 years at the outside there will not be enough reindeer in the entire Territory of Alaska to fill this Hall of the House of Representatives, unless some measures further than those suggested outside of this bill are taken to prevent depletion of the herds.

Some question has been raised about the last clause of the amendment with respect to the reindeer on Nunivak Island.

The explanation is very simple. Nunivak Island, as the name implies, is an island that lies off the coast of Alaska. Several years ago some reindeer and caribou were placed upon that island and attempts were made under the direction of the Bureau of Biological Survey to create a better animal through cross-breeding of the reindeer with the caribou. Those attempts have been quite successful and at the present time we find there are about 14,000 reindeer on Nunivak Island. Those reindeer, I am told, are measurably superior to the ordinary reindeer which may be found on the other ranges of Alaska. After your committee, appointed by the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee and the Senate Appropriations Committee, had visited Alaska during the past summer, it came to the conclusion that the Nunivak Island reindeer were better reindeer than the others, and more valuable. That committee, let me remind the House, has recommended not that you pay $4 a head for the reindeer owned by the nonnatives of Alaska, but that you pay $5 a head.

The Subcommittee on Appropriations said that under all the circumstances the price ought to be limited to $4 a head except for the reindeer on Nunivak Island.

What does this amendment call for? A total appropriation of $1,070,000. Here are the details: 180,000 nonnative reindeer to be bought at an average price of $4 a head, with a little more added to that, perhaps because the reindeer on Nunivak Island may be considered worth five or six dollars a head, or perhaps more.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wish the gentleman would point out to the House that this solution is not just the solution of this committee but that the Canadian Government, running into the same problem 2 years ago, purchased reindeer from us and are going to adopt the same solution for the problem of the Eskimos in the Mackenzie Valley Basin. Further, as I recall, those reindeer cost the Canadian Government eight or nine or ten dollars a head.

Mr. DIMOND. The gentleman is quite right except as to the price, and as to that I do not know what the Canadians paid for the reindeer they purchased.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do not know the exact figure.

Mr. DIMOND. The price that the Canadian Government paid for the reindeer must have been more than $4 a head.

To continue with the bill, then we have range equipment in the sum of $100,000. The special committee representing the House and Senate scaled the price down when they were in Alaska, and then the House Appropriations Committee cut it down some more, so the figure is now $100,000.

Then it is estimated that the expense of rounding up the deer and counting them and of making the purchase is $120,000. The administrative expense of putting this program under way is $130,000, and this $130,000, as is shown by the justification, involves the hiring of some 40 Eskimo reindeer herders at a wage of approximately $45 a month, together with 160 apprentices at a salary of $360 a year, or $30 a month. Everything has been calculated to the smallest detail.

It is true, as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] has so well said, that it is not necessary to purchase the nonnative reindeer. We can confiscate them. We can impose such conditions upon their use of the range that the nonnative owners cannot possibly live under the regulations. Further, we can bring suit on the part of the Government, since we have plenty of teeth in our statutes to collect taxes, to make the owners pay whatever may be charged for the use of the range, and thus we can take over without purchase all reindeer owned by the nonnatives of Alaska.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Alaska.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I hope the sentiment of this body is not such that anyone will attempt to justify a direct or indirect confiscation of the property of any citizen of our Nation.

I know the difficulties that confront a good many of the Members. I went through the same mental processes but with additional and intimate study and knowledge, I have progressed further than some of the Members have progressed at present because they have not had the time or the opportunity or the duty for gaining such knowledge. What is here proposed is the only course I know of that will save the reindeer for the people of Alaska. And remember, when you benefit the people of Alaska, whether they are Indians or Eskimos, or anybody else, you benefit the people of the United States as well, because Alaska is one of the greatest and finest markets the people of the United States have for their products. [Applause.]

Our welfare is your welfare. We are all tied up together.

You may say, "Why enter upon this plan? This is another subsidy and we ought not to go into it."

Mr. Speaker, if this House, if this Congress, if this administration, or any other administration, says we ought to go back to the economic and political doctrine of laissez faire, all right, then you can vote the bill down, but you know and I know that the laissez faire system is as dead as a doornail. I remember and you remember that you appropriated in the past year some $2,250,000,000 for relief, but our Eskimos did not get a cent of that amount, not a single solitary cent. How many reindeer or how many other animals do you suppose that sum could buy for every man, woman, and child in the United States?

I have been here in the House and watched the appropriation of billions of dollars to help the farmers and other citizens or groups of citizens. Why, then, should we draw the line and say, "Yes, we will take care of all other citizens of the United States; but we have taken over Alaska, we have destroyed all the natural food of the Eskimos, but the Eskimos can take care of themselves because we are going to apply the principle of laissez faire to the Eskimos even if we decline to follow it ourselves, and even if that may lead to the extinction of the Eskimos."

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I am sure the gentleman does not want to leave the impression that while we are appropriating money for the W. P. A. to be spent on people in the United States we have not appropriated money for the Eskimos. The bill we are considering today carries $951,000 for the education and support of the Eskimos, and similar appropriations have been made every year since the W. P. A. has been in existence. I do not believe the gentleman wants to leave the impression no relief has been handed out to the Eskimos.

Mr. DIMOND. Very little of that is for relief. It is for the education and medical welfare of the Indians of Alaska just the same as such aid is given to the Indians of the United States, although we in Alaska have not been given as much as the Indians of the United States have received for education or for medical attention. We have not been given as much pro rata as the others. [Applause.]

I think it is unquestionable that the Federal Government is under the same obligation with respect to the education and medical relief and welfare of the Indians and Eskimos of Alaska that it is under with respect to the Indians of the United States. That doctrine of obligation is almost as old as our Government itself, and appropriations were made for the support and welfare of the Indians before a Federal grant or gift or subsidy to any other citizen of the United States had ever been thought of. So the appropriations carried in this bill for the education and medical relief of the Eskimos and Indians of Alaska is entirely foreign to the subject of the making of grants or subsidies to citizens or groups of citizens generally. True, the current appropriation for the education and medical and other relief of the natives of Alaska includes an item of $40,000 for general relief, or approximately $1.10 for each of the native inhabitants of Alaska; that is to say, the Eskimos and the Indians. During the past year the W. P. A. appropriations alone have amounted to approximately $17 for each man, woman, and child in the United States, and I here repeat that the Eskimos did not share in that expenditure. If anything, we ought to be more solicitous for the welfare of the Eskimos and Indians than we are for the welfare of other citizens. After all, they are the original inhabitants of the land, and as to them we are intruders.

Ask yourselves whether it is possible that all of those of us who have studied the subject so carefully and thoroughly can be mistaken. I repeat that those who have the greatest knowledge of the matter are firmest in the conviction that the Reindeer Act should be put into effect through the appropriation now asked. The Secretary of the Interior and the other officials of the Department of the Interior favor it. It is supported by the Bureau of the Budget. It is supported by the President. It is supported, as witness the amendment now before us, by the United States Senate. It is supported by the special committee of the Members of the other body who visited Alaska in 1936 and made a special inquiry into the matter. It is supported by at least more than a majority of the Subcommittee on Appropriations of the House which has jurisdiction of the bills making appropriations for the Department of the Interior. But above and beyond all of those, the appropriation sought has the earnest and unanimous approval of another body, and that body is one of your own making, appointed by the chairmen of the House and Senate Appropriations Committees. I refer to the committee that made the special investigation in Alaska of all matters pertaining to the reindeer during the summer of 1938, Messrs. Ratchford, Wilson, and Reeds.

These men are eminent in their own occupations or professions. They would not have been appointed otherwise. They have made a thorough inquiry, and they say that the solution now and here proposed is the only solution of the problem; the only practicable way to save a great potential industry; the only way to make the Eskimos self-supporting; and that it is a true measure of conservation which will be of benefit to those who are now living and to the generations yet to come. It is conceivable that all of us are so careless or so lacking in intelligence as to be deceived into doing something that is against public interest? Is it reasonable to say that those who have the greater knowledge are likely to be wrong, and those who have the less knowledge of the subject are likely to be right? If so, we should do as well to pass or defeat our legislation by a cast of dice. Am I not justified in asking why last year you voted to appoint this special committee if you intended to disregard the results of the study and report and advice of that committee? No one yet has made the slightest criticism of the special committee or of its report. And yet, gentlemen argue here today that the report should "go out of the window," and that we should follow instead the suspicions, or the intuitions, or the guesses, of someone else.

Let me repeat that we are asking for this appropriation for the Eskimos and Indians of Alaska, and for no one else. We should not refuse to enact wise and just legislation because some other person or persons may incidentally benefit by it. To adopt that policy might defeat all legislation, for in enacting general legislation someone is almost bound to benefit who may not of himself be deserving of the benefit.

Your special committee has told you with a wealth of detail all of the reasons why the Reindeer Act should be put into effect; told you of the need of the Eskimos and Indians for the additional reindeer; told you of the intermingling of the native and nonnative reindeer; told you of the confusion on the ranges; told you that the non-native-owned deer absorb some of the best range needed by the natives; told you of destruction of the reindeer by wolves and coyotes; and recommended strongly and definitely that the purchase of the non-native-owned reindeer and reindeer range equipment should be made as authorized in the Reindeer Act. So far as I have heard or know there is not a single reason why this House should reject or disregard the report of the special committee, no reason to disbelieve or to discount a single paragraph or a single word embraced in the committee's report.

I urge your support of the motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SASSCER). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH, Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin, and Mr. COLMER) there were—ayes 64, nays 102.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Reindeer service: For supervision of reindeer in Alaska and instruction in the care and management thereof, including salaries and travel expenses of employees, purchase, rental, erection, and repair of range cabins, purchase and maintenance of communication and other equipment, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses, including $3,000 for the purchase and distribution of reindeer, $75,000, to be immediately available, and to remain available until June 30, 1941."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, in addition to providing funds for the purchase of reindeer in Alaska, the amendment which was just rejected provided for administration in connection with reindeer now owned by the natives in Alaska. It is estimated that there are 320,000 native-owned reindeer and this bill, for a good many years past, has provided funds to furnish personnel and supplies and to provide general supervision in connection with the care of these native-owned reindeer. The Department has requested a total of $150,000 for this purpose and the pending amendment provides for an appropriation of $75,000. This amount will permit the reindeer service to continue existing personnel and will also permit the Department to train a number of native apprentices, who will assist materially in placing the reindeer industry on a sound basis. Defeat of the pending amendment would mean complete withdrawal of all Government aid to the natives and I believe it would also result in the early extinction of the reindeer now owned by these natives.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. I understand none of this fund would be authorized for the purchase of reindeer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, no; there has always been $3,000 in the bill for this purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments Nos. 28 and 32 may be considered together, as they relate to the same subject matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 28: On page 3, after line 22, insert:
"Colorado: Consolidated Ute (Southern Ute), $78,000, including the purchase of land, the subjugation thereof, and the construction of improvements thereon."
Amendment No. 32: On page 65, in line 10, strike out $592,460 and insert $483,447.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 28.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46 and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,523,000."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma whether he is increasing the amount from $5,365,000 to $7,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. This simply increases the total in accordance with the agreement of the House and Senate conferees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 48: On page 89, line 17, after the figures, insert ": Provided, That the allocation from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937 for official project No. 505–2–73, Fruit Growers' Dam and Reservoir, in Colorado, shall be immediately available for the acquisition of rights-of-way."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments 51, 52, and 53 be considered en bloc.

Amendment No. 53: Page 94, line 11, strike out "$34,700,000" and insert "$39,700,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendments numbered 51, 52, and 53.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to the fact that this is for increasing the height of the Marshall Ford Dam in Texas. The Congress appropriated $12,000,000 for this dam some year or so ago. They are now asking to increase the height of the dam from 190 feet to 260 feet. They want to spend $15,000,000 more on this particular dam. In the bill they ask for $5,000,000. They will have to ask for $10,000,000 additional before the year is over, or next year. It seems to me that this expenditure could well be suspended for a few years until some Member on that side of the House tells me where we are going to get the money. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, here again we have these irrigation and reclamation projects. We are adding about $15,000,000 to this bill above what it was when we sent it to the north side of this Capitol. This is at a time when we all know we are spending many millions of dollars to take land cut of production. If anyone can make those two things add up to sense they are using arithmetic that I know nothing about. Here we are with the markets on farm products lower than they have been in the past 5 or 6 years. Corn on the farm is 33 or 34 cents. The cost of production is about eighty-odd cents. The parity price on corn is also about eighty-odd cents. Nevertheless corn is selling at 34 cents on the farm.

Hogs are lower than they have been in 5 years. There was a great farrowing of hogs this year. Before fall comes nobody knows where these hogs will be. Still we are adding more land to compete with farm lands already producing surpluses and already asked to curtail production. Here they are asking for about $15,000,000, which will be used to bring in new land, and to bring new production to harass the farmers of America.

I say to you that the farmers of the Middle West cannot go on with the conditions that are confronting them this afternoon and with the prices I have mentioned. It is impossible for them to even expect to save their homes, their families, and the civilization that goes with American agriculture.

Now, so far as these projects have been already instituted, so far as men and women have invested in them and have invested their lives in them, I have never objected. Of course, we ought to protect them, I think, so long as we have heretofore given our promise to them.

There is no reason why we should continue with all these appropriation bills giving them more, and more, and more money. Let us keep faith in the matter of past agreements and undertakings, but let us not encourage new projects such as are in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have often talked on this matter. There is, as I see it, no sense, no equity, no justice in continuing to build irrigation projects under the conditions that confront the farming population today. Such items as this should be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I realize that it does not do much good to make speeches on such an occasion, but I think it is high time to direct our attention and the attention of the country as to the manner in which this House continues to spend millions upon millions of dollars. Hardly any attempt is being made this afternoon to reduce any of the items carried by this measure that was increased in so many places by the Senate. Instead, we agree to all of the increases. We do it without any resistance whatsoever. It seems to me that the least we could do is to hold them to the figures as adopted by the House when it passed here a few weeks ago. We find ourselves accepting the increases by the millions in every respect. Right now you are talking about agreeing to an increase of $10,000,000 in such a casual manner that it gives the impression that it is a mere trifle and hardly worth trying to save.

And what are you doing with the money? It is to add to a dam already under construction and upon which the Government has already spent millions of dollars. It is to build it higher and bigger. It is said it is for navigation and flood control. It is also to bring more lands into cultivation by irrigation. On the one hand we spend Government money for bringing land into cultivation, while on the other hand we spend still more millions to try to control production in other parts of the country. As the gentleman from Iowa says, it just does not make sense. There is no question that we will fail to balance the Budget, but we do not seem to care; we sit supinely by and make no determined effort to cut down expenditures. On measures like these, where the House had gone the limit in the first place, we vote to increase the items still further by millions and millions.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does it not make one almost sick to sit here and see items increased by $1,000,000, $5,000,000, $10,000,000, and be unable to do anything about it?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Certainly it makes me sick, and I should think it would make the American people and the American taxpayers pretty sick.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. To the gentleman from Mississippi, certainly.

Mr. RANKIN. The appropriation carried by this item is for flood control on this river.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes; flood control. But so often it happens that a navigation proposition or a flood-control project turns out finally to be an irrigation development. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, my purpose primarily in seeking recognition at this time is to answer the misapprehensions that prevail on the part of those who have spoken concerning this matter.

This is in no sense an irrigation project, it does not bring into being a single acre of new land; it is entirely a flood-control project. Thirteen million dollars has been expended in the building of a dam providing a storage capacity of 600,000 acre-feet. By raising this dam another 70 feet, using the men working at the site at this time under the 2-year contract the project will have a storage capacity of 3,000,000 acre-feet, just five times the capacity of the present dam; and this greatly increased usefulness will be procured by the expenditure of $10,000,000, much of which is reimbursable. Let me pause here to pay a well-deserved tribute to that young and aggressive Member who represents the district where Marshall Ford Dam is located. I have never seen a Member who worked so faithfully, tirelessly, and effectively as he has.

Let us get the picture down there in southern Texas. Last year there was a flood on this river which resulted in a loss to the people below the Marshall Ford Dam and from there down to the Gulf in excess of $10,000,000 in property. The Department estimates that floods for the last 15 years on that river below this dam in the district represented by that splendid gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the great Rivers and Harbors Committee [Mr. MANSFIELD], who cannot be here this afternoon due to illness, have cost the people of Texas that live in that valley an average of $5,000,000 a year.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I do not have time to yield.

We have spent for flood control and river improvement in our history $2,900,000,000 and not one cent has been directly repaid. Are you going to refuse the folks down there the permission to finish a project that will bring to them the highest degree of protection that the ingenuity of man and American engineering can give them? I am sure not; and I think it would be a great mistake for us now to cease work on this project and let those folks again become the victims of flood ravages for years in the future.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I call the gentleman's attention to the Senate hearings, an amendment offered by Mr. LEAVY, page 84, line 8, after the word "reimbursable", insert "except as to the Colorado River project, Texas."

In view of this amendment how can the gentleman's statement that this money is reimbursable be correct?

Mr. LEAVY. I will answer my colleague. Yes; I offered that amendment. That was on the appropriation bill last year. That is not the appropriation for this year. That was for the purpose of completing one step in this project following the acquisition of money in earlier years from P. W. A.; but the language in the amendment now before the House has the express provision in it that it shall be reimbursable to such extent as the Secretary of the Interior shall find is just and equitable. This, of course, is based upon the allocation that will be made to flood control and the allocation to power development. There is no power development in taking the dam on up to its full height. The power development there has been completed.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. This was a flood-control project until they put the power and machinery there to make it generate power. They now generate power. Now they have to increase the height of the dam 70 feet more. After awhile you will want balloons to put on top of everything.

Mr. LEAVY. I must refuse to yield further. I thought I made clear to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the storage capacity now is 600,000 acre-feet. Add 70 feet to the dam and you will have a storage capacity of 3,000,000 acre-feet, which is sufficient under ordinary circumstances to control the floodwaters of the Colorado River.

This amendment should prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS].

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, being a new Member of Congress, I cannot understand how these things come back from the Senate and from conference with anywhere from $1,000,000 to $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 added to the original appropriation bill passed by this House. I cannot understand the reasoning either that confines the attention of the gentlemen in this House to the poor people in these reclamation and power project regions, when a bill presented to the House for the benefit of those people already engaged in agriculture in other sections of this country, people who have thousands and thousands of dollars invested in farms, farm buildings, and equipment, cannot receive consideration. Their tremendous investments apparently do not mean a thing. Today we have milk selling for anywhere from 81 cents to 91 cents a hundred pounds; cheese selling at 10 cents, 11 cents, and 12 cents, all of these articles produced in the North, where there are tremendous investments in farm properties, farm buildings, herds, and other equipment. By this amendment we go further into the development of new fields. We go from power into reclamation and then into flood control, each one of these steps requiring hundreds of millions of dollars more of the taxpayer's money.

I have no particular desire to hurt anybody engaged in agriculture, but common sense should tell us that opening up new lands, supplying water, power, and throwing in flood control for protection, is no answer to our present problem. It does seem to me that our farmers need protection from foreign competition. To put more land into production, while all agriculture is suffering from so-called surpluses and terrifically depressed markets, would seem to me to add to the confusion that already exists and to further burden our markets with farm produce which, it is claimed, is already excessive.

This policy of spending money like drunken sailors; this going around on the old spending merry-go-round; this utterly ridiculous lack of coordination between the various departments in Washington, has created a condition in agriculture that is unbearable. If the farmers of our country could sit in Congress and witness this insane display on the part of the New Deal, I am sure they would demand an immediate change in policy, and not wait until 1940.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I do not usually take the floor in connection with appropriation bills because usually I do not know a great deal about them. However, the gentleman from Texas, Judge MANSFIELD, is unable to be here today. He has written me a letter, a paragraph of which I desire to read, as follows:

> The completion of this dam will prevent the recurrence of disastrous floods which, frequently in the past, have devastated a large portion of my district. I am, therefore, anxious that the House will see its way clear to accept this amendment.

Everyone familiar with the situation in this part of Texas knows that the district represented by Judge MANSFIELD suffered untold loss last year. If he were here, he could speak so much better for himself than I; but I thought the House would like to know how it affected this grand old man's district and that he is tremendously interested in the House concurring in the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN) there were—ayes 96, noes 55.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment No. 55: Page 94, after line 14, insert the following:
> "WATER CONSERVATION AND UTILITY PROJECTS
> "For construction, in addition to labor and materials to be supplied by the Works Progress Administration, of water conservation and utilization projects, including acquisition of water rights, rights-of-way, and other interests in land, in the Great Plains and arid and semiarid areas of the United States, to be immediately available, $5,000,000, to be allocated by the President, in such amounts as he deems necessary, to such Federal departments, establishments, and other agencies as he may designate, and to be reimbursed to the United States by the water users on such projects in not to exceed 40 annual installments: Provided, That expenditures from Works Progress Administration funds shall be subject to such provisions with respect to reimbursability as the President may determine."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, you have just voted $5,000,000 for a project down in Texas. The majority leader helped put it across. We are glad it is going to help Texas, but in this proposition we are asked to spend $5,000,000 for water conservation and utility projects when we do not know for what we are going to spend the money. This $5,000,000 is to be allocated by the President in such manner as he deems necessary to such Federal departments, establishments, and other agencies as he may designate. I say to the majority leader, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and the Members of the House, let us say what this money is to be spent for and let us appropriate it for those ends. It is high time that Members of Congress say what they are going to appropriate money for instead of putting this power in the hands of the President. What are we here for? Are we nothing but a bunch of twiddle-de-dees and twiddle-de-dums, are we going to have the backbone to say that we are going to spend this money for something in Texas, we are going to spend it for something in Oklahoma, or we are going to spend it for something in Pennsylvania? No; we put this power in the hands of the President of the United States. How do you know whether he wants this money? It is only the idea that somebody has that we ought to appropriate more money.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman mean to tell this House that after the discussion of the House conferees with the Senate conferees he does not himself know what this money is for?

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman from Oklahoma there are many items in this bill where the gentleman from Oklahoma does not know what the appropriations are for. I want to say that many a time I have been in the dark about appropriations. We made an appropriation to the Park Service and neither the gentleman from Oklahoma nor any of the other members of the committee knew what it was for, and that appropriation amounted to over $2,000,000,000. It seems to me that every Member of the House should know what every dollar of the taxpayers' money is to be spent for before he votes to appropriate it. I think it is about time that we cut out some of these appropriations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, Congress authorized this item of $5,000,000 in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act of the fiscal year 1938, but provided that the funds were to be taken from the funds made available by section 1 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938. It also placed a limitation on the expenditure of that money to the effect that no more than $50,000 could be expended on any one project, which made the fund unworkable; in other words, no reasonably sized project could be completed by the expenditure of only $50,000.

Now what has happened? The Great Plains Committee studied the conditions in the Northwest, including those in North and South Dakota, Montana, and other States similarly circumstanced during the drought period and the time they were eaten out of their crops by grasshoppers, and so forth, and the result was that that committe reported that it was necessary in order to meet the relief situation to provide a sum of approximately $5,000,000, to be expended within the discretion of the President of the United States, and to be supplemented by such sums from the Works Relief program as could be allotted to that purpose.

In addition to the tremendous expenditures that have been made in the drought areas for temporary relief without effecting a permanent solution, the conservation and irrigation projects constructed under this amendment will serve to halt the emigration of many farmers who otherwise would be forced to seek other locations. This is to take care of small irrigation projects that would help people to come into our State from the Dakotas and other States. The amendment that has been written into this bill by the Senate is simply for the purpose of lifting the restriction of $50,000 on the amount to be spent for any one project which was heretofore authorized by this Congress in 1938. If the Members of the House wanted to object to the moneys being used, they should have done so a year ago.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOLMES. Are the States going to make any contributions toward this fund?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why, certainly; it is all reimbursable. Every single dollar we are asking here this afternoon is reimbursable within 40 years.

Mr. HOLMES. The State matches the appropriations?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The amount is repaid.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Was the appropriation exhausted that was made a year ago, or is that a continuing appropriation?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; it is a continuing appropriation; but it cannot be used effectively because there is a string attached to it, namely, that only the sum of $50,000 can be used for any one purpose. This amendment is to take that restriction out of the law so the $5,000,000 may be used by the President of the United States, supplemented by such sums as the W. P. A. can use in dirt construction in connection with irrigation projects.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. The Bureau of Reclamation refuses to use the money because they cannot use it judiciously?

Mr. O'CONNOR. They cannot use it judiciously as long as the restriction of $50,000 remains in effect.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. I believe this amendment is very worthy.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It would not make sense for this House not to concur in this amendment this afternoon, because the $5,000,000 that has already been appropriated cannot be used effectively unless the limitation is removed.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Does the gentleman refer to the funds that were appropriated under the Water Facilities Act?

Mr. O'CONNOR. No; this is a special appropriation requested by the President of the United States, and to be supplemented by W. P. A. funds, to take care of small irrigation projects that would cost in the neighborhood of $100,000 or $150,000.

Mr. HOPE. Who would administer this fund? Would it be administered by the Bureau of Reclamation?

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Bureau of Reclamation. These are small reclamation projects.

Mr. HOPE. As I understand, the money we appropriated a year ago was to be administered by the Department of Agriculture. Is this a new project or a continuation of the same project?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is not a new project. It is to be administered by the Bureau of Reclamation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. I would like to have the gentlemen who talk about the matching of the money by States point out the page and the line of the bill that states anything about matching or provides that the States will have to pay a single cent.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. When Members talk about the appropriation being reimbursable, I would like to have them explain whether this reimbursing business does not mean 40 years without interest. All of the reclamation and irrigation bills so far as I know provide 40 years for payment without interest. Is that reimbursable?

Then when gentlemen also talk about reclamation I would like to know why. They say this is not reclamation, but that it is flood control, and still the act itself speaks in several places about reclamation, and when the same matter was under discussion a moment ago it was stated that it should be under the Bureau of Reclamation, and there is a provision on page 92, in line 22, that it shall be under the reclamation law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. The gentleman has his own time, but I will yield to the chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I was interested in the gentleman's statement that none of this money is reimbursable. Has the gentleman read lines 24 and 25, on page 94, and lines 1, 2, 3 on page 95, where it plainly states that this is reimbursable to the United States by the water users.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I will say to the chairman and I hope I may have a moment or two to answer the gentleman that I did not say the act does not use the word "reimbursable," but I do say that when the act uses the word "reimbursable" it means reimbursable over a course of 40 years without interest.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I will yield myself one-half minute although it will not take one-half minute to answer the gentleman from Iowa. Let me say that if and when this work is done, to which the gentlemen so bitterly complains that it certainly will not be money wasted. It will make this country a richer place in which to live and promote the happiness and general welfare of our people. No one will ever have occasion to look back and say that a dollar of the money was wasted. So it would seem that the genial gentleman from Iowa is unusually exercised over nothing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, this item should be regarded as a reappropriation. The history of the item is this: In June of last year the President sent up a recommendation to the Congress with a Budget estimate to carry out the recommendations that were made by the Great Plains drought committee. That recommendation suggested that $5,000,000 be made available to loan to water users for water-conservation projects, for the purchase of rights-of-way, for the purchase of lands, and for supplying costs of materials, the other than labor costs which might be provided by the Works Progress Administration. That $5,000,000 item was embodied in the last deficiency bill that was passed by the Congress last year in the closing hour of the session, in fact.

In the conference with the Senate that afternoon an amendment was agreed to that placed upon the fund the limitation to which the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] has referred.

A further limitation was agreed to that made this money subject to the various regulations and limitations embraced in the W. P. A. or relief appropriations act of 1938. That placed this fund in an unworkable condition.

It required, among other things, that not more than $7 a month could be spent for materials per man employed, and that meant that you could not construct water-conservations projects, because $7 per man a month does not cover the cost of cement or other materials that are needed in building dams.

In addition to that, it meant that none of the money could be used for the purchase of land or rights-of-way, because W. P. A. projects have to be built upon the public domain or its equivalent. They have to be built upon land that is publicly controlled.

This item was designed to be used to supplement W. P. A. funds so that the water users could borrow from it to purchase lands for dam sites and so that they could purchase necessary rights-of-way and so that they could purchase the necessary materials. Under the limitations imposed not a dollar of the $5,000,000 has been used.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman, briefly.

Mr. HOPE. Has this anything to do with the appropriation that was made last year under the Water Facilities Act and which provided for administration by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It does not. The water facilities fund is an entirely different item.

Mr. HOPE. I would like to have the gentleman explain. There seems to be some confusion and I am asking the question for the purpose of getting information.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I am very glad to have the gentleman's question. The appropriation under the Water Facilities Act is an entirely different item and goes to a different work—farm ponds, wells, and so forth. It carries a project limitation, not of $50,000, but now of $25,000. Last year $500,000 was all that was appropriated under that act. It was supplemented by a $5,000,000 allotment of relief funds but very little was done until the beginning of the current season. This year under the Water Facilities Act, we appropriated $250,000 in the agriculture appropriation bill that was recently passed by the House. That was an entirely different item relating primarily to individual farms and should not be confused with this item for relatively small supplemental irrigation projects.

The pending item was never in a Department of Agriculture appropriation bill. It was in the last deficiency appropriation bill of the Seventy-fifth Congress and the limitations with respect to this particular fund came over here in the very closing hours of the session.

It happens that I discussed these limitations that evening with one of the honored and distinguished Members of this House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], whose memory we all revere. He was one of the conferees. Mr. Bacon explained to me at that time that he did not think these limitations were going to render this item unworkable, but it was impossible for anybody to tell that afternoon. We were in the last minutes of the session. The report was not even printed. Nobody knew exactly what the effect of the limitations would be.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. HOPE. Was that item included in the bill and passed?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It was.

Mr. HOPE. But the limitation has made it unworkable?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is exactly correct. The purpose of having the fund come in at this time in this way is to remove those limitations. In effect, it is a reappropriation, and there is no increase of Presidential authority to assign the fund to any agency. He had that authority under the original appropriation.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] stated that there was no proof that the President wanted this action. The gentleman has been very busy. He is one of the hardest working members on the Appropriations Committee. It has escaped his attention that the idea was embodied in the report of the Great Plains Drought Committee. The President sent the item to the House under a special message with a Budget estimate for it in June 1938. It came back again in February this year as the subject of a special estimate from the Budget. It has Budget approval, and has always had Budget approval. I received a letter from Acting Director Bell dated February 4, this year, approving a proposal to free the item from these limitations.

The gentleman from Montana said this should be passed so that in Montana they might take care of some of the people coming from the Dakotas. Primarily, I hope you will pass this bill so that the people in South Dakota will not have to go to Montana or anywhere else. This is to let the people in the Great Plains take care of themselves where they are. It is cheaper than relief in dry years. And the money is reimbursable.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Primarily this is an appropriation so that those people, instead of having to take grants or do W. P. A. projects of a sort that do not increase their income, can have some productive projects that will let these people make a living where they are. It is not for large irrigation. It is not for large reclamation. It is supplementary water conservation for the people on the land where they live and where they have their homes. I hope that with this explanation the committee will support the item.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The Director of the Budget wrote to the President on February 27, 1939, and recommended this appropriation of $5,000,000 with the $50,000 limitation removed.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes. The removal of that limitation and the W. P. A. limitations was recommended by the Great Plains section of the Water Resources Committee which met in Omaha July 30 of last year and then was recommended by the Budget, as has been stated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I am going to get over on the Republican side of the House because I want to talk to the Republican Members on a matter that is of very great concern to them as well as to us. In fact, it is of greater concern to them. This $5,000,000 here provided for is going to be spent in States that are almost exclusively represented in this body by Members on the Republican side of the House. Last year, as the able gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] has indicated, we passed this bill carrying a $5,000,000 appropriation. Not a dollar of it has been spent. It is regretted that it could not have been. It had the $50,000 limitation on projects. Let me tell you why it is regretted that it could not have been spent. In 6 years we have spent—and this is no reflection upon the good people of North and South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and Colorado—we have spent in that region over $400,000,000 for relief. The aggregate expenditure was enormous. To the individual it was parsimonious in the extreme, in many instances as low as $7 per month per family. If we had spent some of that money for the impounding and utilization of the precious water which they have in so limited a degree in that region we would have put a part of those people on their feet—those people who, by the ravages of nature, have been driven from the soil. They are still distressed, discouraged, and disheartened. One hundred thousand families have drifted out. This $5,000,000 permits the engineers in the Reclamation Service to build a few small projects, but of necessity they must be far beyond $50,000, because $50,000 will not build a dam across the Missouri River, across the Platte River, or across any of those streams where they have water. They have no small rivers or small streams or creeks in that region. In the hearings, if you are curious to know, you will find that the Commissioner of Reclamation outlined the eight projects that he proposed to commence and finish with this money. They are all in States in great distress. Much of the labor would be W. P. A. labor. This amendment certainly ought to carry. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, since I made my remarks a few minutes ago it has been called to your attention that these appropriations are reimbursable. They are to be reimbursable to the United States by the water users on such projects in not to exceed 40 annual installments. This is without interest. I do not know of a single one of them but what is to be reimbursed in that way except it be those cases where payments have been waived entirely or have been extended for periods of more than 40 years.

When, therefore, people talk about these expenditures being reimbursable, the facts are they are reimbursable in annual, not semiannual, installments for 40 years without payment of interest. So there is nothing in that argument. They are giving this sum of money to the people to put into these projects, just as is stated and in the appropriation bill itself under reclamation law. They are not flood-control projects, as has been pointed out. Repeating what I said a moment ago, the statement that this money is reimbursable is without force or influence. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I believe amendment numbered 55 will prove very beneficial to the arid and semiarid areas of the Great Plains where water is at such a premium. This is a water-conservation measure. The work would have been carried on during the past year through authorization already made by this Congress had it not been for the $50,000 limitation that was placed in the previous measure.

I commend this amendment to each and every Member of the House because, upon investigation, I believe it will prove decidedly advantageous to those living in a region of the United States where there is not an adequate supply of water. The proposition has the added feature that appeals to those interested in conservation of wildlife—that the great flight ways of the ducks northward and southward traverse this region. These pools, ponds, lakes, and reservoirs which will be created by reason of the expenditure of this money will provide much needed havens of rest for these birds in their flights north and south.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I am for the House concurring in this amendment because it will do more good than any money that has been spent since I have been a Member of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the philosophy of those who live where the rain occasionally falls, or even those where the rain falls plentifully, who oppose this amendment just because it is reimbursable without interest. We have done enough in this country, it seems to me, to show that we intend to give to the farmers of this country cost of production, but somehow or other my friends who talk cost of production vote against it, as was shown the other day in the Agricultural Committee when the cost-of-production bill came up, and that committee refused to report the bill out—thereby, as far as was within its power, preventing this Congress from giving the farmers cost of production.

But in spite of that we are going to get cost of production, because we are going to continue to fight for the farmers of the United States of America in all the districts and in every State in the Union, and not merely for a few in one section or another section.

What will this amendment do? This amendment will give an opportunity to people living in the western part of North Dakota and other semiarid States to raise enough feed and grass for their cattle in the dry areas and, therefore, make it possible for them to continue to live there during drought years without being compelled to move into Montana, or into the State of Iowa, or into other States.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I cannot yield. I have not time.

This amendment simply provides that the President of the United States may use part of this $5,000,000 that has already been appropriated—you are not appropriating it—to continue and to complete such irrigation projects as the Buford-Trenton project in northwestern North Dakota so that we shall not have to send all of our people in western North Dakota to other States of this Nation. It will conserve and increase the wealth of this Nation.

I did not know until today that to look backward was a Republican principle. I thought that was just Mr. Wallace's philosophy and that all the rest of us looked forward to taking care of the people of this Nation regardless of where they live or what their condition may be. [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEMKE. I yield.

Mr. LEAVY. I believe the gentleman will grant that if this amendment is killed today it will be killed on the Republican side of the House.

Mr. LEMKE. I sincerely hope not, and I do not believe that it will be killed, because I believe that the great majority of the Republicans are just as liberal as the Democrats—at least I hope so. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of reclamation. I think it is a sound policy. The Republican Party has favored reclamation; in fact, the Republican Party is the father of reclamation in this country. I have, however, frequently opposed individual reclamation projects because I felt that they were not sound and would not pay out. I have frequently criticized the Reclamation Service because I felt that instead of devoting itself to sound economically feasable projects it was going into great engineering projects which could never pay out.

The item under consideration presents an entirely different proposition. Here you have little projects, projects that have been neglected through all these years, projects on which you can put water on the land at a fraction of the cost of these large projects for which we have voted funds year after year. Furthermore, you are not going to put any new people into the business of farming. This undertaking is designed to care for people who are already on the land struggling to make a living.

The gentleman from Washington has told you how much money has been spent on relief out in this area during the past 5 or 6 years. This money is not to go for relief, it constitutes an investment, one of the best investments that could possibly be made, and the capital invested will be reimbursed because the projects are sound and practical.

There are numerous small streams throughout this area that in time might be developed in such way as to furnish water for irrigation. There is much which might be done in the way of pump irrigation. Of course, with only $5,000,000 it would be possible to institute but few projects. As far as I know none are planned for the State of Kansas; but I am familiar with the area which it is intended to develop, the Great Plains area. This will not only be a sound investment, but it will mean a real saving because it will take people who have been forced to accept relief of one kind or another and make them self-sustaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 76: Page 146, after line 18, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That hereafter no part of this or any other appropriation for any executive department, establishment, or agency shall be used for the payment of long-distance telephone tolls except for the transaction of public business which the interests of the Government require to be so transacted; and all such payments shall be supported by a certificate by the head of the department, establishment, or agency concerned, or such subordinates as he may specially designate, to the effect that the use of the telephone in such instances was necessary in the interest of the Government."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 77: Page 147, line 4, strike out the figure "4" and insert the figure "5."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which the several motions were agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the conference report, the consideration of which has just been concluded, may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House may be excused from attendance tomorrow. The committee has been invited to attend the annual meeting and inspection of the laboratories of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics at Langley Field, Va. Members of the subcommittee who will make the trip are Mr. HARTER of Ohio, Mr. SMITH of Connecticut, Mr. MERRITT, Mr. COSTELLO, Mr. ARENDS, Mr. SHORT, Mr. ELSTON, and Mr. HARNESS.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUCK (at the request of Mr. COSTELLO), for 3 days, on account of illness.

To Mr. HILL, for 1 day, on account of official business.

To Mr. TERRY, for 4 days, on account of official business.

Mr. EBERHARTER rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] rise?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to explain that today during the roll call on H. R. 5452 I was not in the Chamber. It so happens that at the very time the roll was being called on that measure, which provides certain benefits for World War veterans, I was in the offices of the Veterans' Administration attending a hearing on behalf of a veteran who has an appeal pending before the Board of Veterans' Appeals in which he makes claim for increased benefits. Had I been present I would have voted for the passage of that measure.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1939

(Legislative day of Monday, May 1, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou everlasting gracious Power, of whom the manifold universe is a manifold revelation: We worship Thee in the myriad unfoldings of Thy creative beauty, and especially in the conscious loveliness of our fair world, vouchsafed to us, with whom are eyes to see the glorious pageant of Thy divine artistry.

We bless Thee for Thy renewing springs within us, springs of aspiration, hope, and love; for the progress which time brings, albeit the world doth move with faltering steps and slow; and we beseech Thee to grant us the adequacy needful for our work and for the overcoming of those temptations which we daily meet with. Forgive us all our sins, negligence, and ignorances, that the strength of each may be as the strength of ten because our hearts are pure and our minds naked and open before the eyes of Him with whom we have to do.

We ask it in the name of Thy Son, who is a Priest forever, not after the law of a carnal commandment but after the power of an endless life, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SUGAR PRODUCTION IN THE UNITED STATES—RESOLUTION OF LEGISLATURE OF MICHIGAN

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I present a memorial from the Legislature of the State of Michigan for the usual treatment. Ever since the Government began to regulate the domestic sugar business for the benefit of Cuba those who are dependent upon beet and cane sugar for their livelihood have been in trouble. We in Michigan are in particular trouble at the moment because of the latest regulation that has come down from Mr. Secretary Wallace. These regulations already have closed one large sugar-beet factory in Michigan and threaten to close others. There are other sections of the country similarly jeopardized. The trouble is a serious one. The Legislature of Michigan has memorialized Congress upon the subject, and I ask that the memorial be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The memorial presented by Mr. VANDENBERG was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 27

Concurrent resolution respectfully memorializing the Congress of the United States, the President of the United States, and the Secretary of Agriculture to grant immediate remedy and adjustment, by correlating the estimate of consumption to actual needs, based upon the actual consumption of 1938 and the extraordinarily large carry-over inventory of sugar as of January 1, 1939, and that the Sugar Act be amended to provide a larger share of the American sugar market for the American farmer

Whereas the fact that in the continental United States we produce less than 30 percent of the sugar we consume, and sugar is practically the only nonsurplus agricultural product of the United States; and every acre of land utilized in the production of sugar, either from beets or cane, invariably takes such acreage out of the production of some surplus agricultural product such as cotton, rice, wheat, corn, beans, etc.; and

Whereas the production of sugar on our continental farms, especially the production of sugar from sugar beets, is conducive to the employment of labor on a large scale at profitable wages or rates, and the increased employment of labor on a larger scale in the production of sugar in the continental United States would be a great stimulus to prosperity and the general welfare of such sugar-producing areas, and the United States as a whole. The increased prosperity of the sugar-producing farmer would enable him to purchase much-needed agricultural machinery, tractors, trucks, etc., and would reflect directly in increased employment in industry producing such agricultural machinery; and

Whereas we believe it is the inherent fundamental economic right of the American farmer to produce nonsurplus agricultural products, such as sugar, up to the limit of his ability, without restriction, and such production should be protected in our United States market so that sugar will sell at a price comparable or equivalent to the index value of all foods. Foreign sugars should not be permitted to enter the United States market in excess of the amount which, when added to our production of sugar, the total will equal our consumption, so that both the interest of producers and consumers of sugar in the continental United States will be adequately protected, and the production of sugar in the continental United States fostered on a basis of common defense and general welfare, so that regardless of peace or war the citizens of the United States will be protected in their supply of such an essential food as sugar; and

Whereas we believe that the Sugar Act of 1937 was a step in the right direction, but with the removal of restrictions on United States production of sugar, coupled with a proper administration of the act, the sugar industry of the United States can go forward on a sane, sound basis for the best interests of the United States as a whole; and

Whereas excessive sugar consumption estimates out of all proportion to the actual consumption have been made since the adoption of the act, thereby permitting increased importation of foreign sugars, which has depressed prices in the sugar market to its all-time low. There is now available upward of 600,000 tons of cane sugar out of the 1938 quotas, which sugars are mainly the product of foreign countries, and a consumption estimate for 1939 by the Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. Henry A. Wallace, of 6,755,000 tons permits the importation of 3,000,000 tons of foreign sugar to further glut and complicate our American sugar market. It is estimated that on December 31, 1939, the end of the current year for sugar quotas, there will be upward of 800,000 tons of foreign sugars available, over and above our current needs, which sugars are all eligible to be marketed in the continental United States. This in view of the fact that in 1938 a kindly Providence, on a limited acreage, saw fit to give us one-quarter million tons of beet sugar and 150,000 tons of Louisiana and Florida cane sugar over and above our Government marketing allotments for 1939, and this practically 400,000 tons of sugar produced by American farmers in 1938 constitutes a further surplus of sugar. Also, the recommendation of the United States Department of Agriculture is that certain districts, some of them in Michigan, shall not be permitted to market in 1939 a single pound of sugar produced in 1939. This situation, if not remedied in the near future, will destroy the sugar industry of the United States. The enforced carry-over to 1940 of practically 400,000 tons of continental beet and cane sugar produced in 1938 will have the immediate effect of eliminating the opportunity for 64,000,000 hours of labor directly utilized in the sugar industry, and possibly several times that number indirectly employed. Unless immediate adjustment is made on the recommended sugar-marketing allotments, at least one and possibly more Michigan sugar plants, it appears, will be unable to operate this year, thus throwing more American laborers out of work and depriving more American farmers from marketing beets and producing sugar, which is our only nonsurplus agricultural product, at a profit; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Michigan hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States, the President of the United States, and the Secretary of Agriculture to grant immediate remedy and adjustment by correlating the estimate of consumption to actual needs, based upon the actual consumption of 1938 and the extraordinarily large carry-over inventory of sugar as of January 1, 1939, and that the Sugar Act be amended to provide a larger share of the American sugar market for the American farmer; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to all Senators and Congressmen from Michigan.

STUDIES OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION—WORK OF THE SESSION—FINAL ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit at this time and have read from the desk a concurrent resolution, and to make a short statement regarding it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The clerk will read the concurrent resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 15), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, or any duly authorized subcommittee or subcommittees thereof, shall, after the adjournment of the present session of the Congress, make a study and investigation with a view to determining what changes, if any, should be made in the general revenue laws and in the Social Security Act, and shall, at the beginning of the next session of the Congress, make reports by bill or otherwise of their recommendations.

SEC. 2. The Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, or any duly authorized subcommittee or subcommittees thereof, shall, after the adjournment of the present session of the Congress, make a study and investigation with a view to determining what neutrality legislation, if any, should be enacted, and shall, at the beginning of the next session of the Congress, make a report by bill or otherwise of their recommendations.

SEC. 3. The Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives, or any duly authorized subcommittee or subcommittees thereof, shall, after the adjournment of the present session of the Congress, make a study and investigation with a view to determining what changes, if any, should be made in the Interstate Commerce Act, and shall, at the beginning of the next session of the Congress, make a report by bill or otherwise of their recommendations.

SEC. 4. The two Houses of Congress shall adjourn sine die not later than Thursday, the 15th day of June 1939.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have no thought of undertaking to usurp the prerogatives of the leader of the Senate or of the House of Representatives. I recognize the long-established practice, and fully approve of it, of the majority leader sponsoring the times when the Senate is to be in session from day to day, and indicating by his leadership what days the Senate shall be in recess. So I desire to have it understood that by offering this resolution I am not seeking in any way to change that long-accepted practice, of which, I repeat, I fully approve. Nor am I seeking, by indirection or implication or in any way, to criticize the leadership by submitting this resolution.

The Senate, as we all know, has kept abreast of its work. There has been up to this time no default on the part of the majority leader in the matter of transacting the necessary business in order to permit Congress to adjourn within a reasonable time. Conditions, however, over which he has had no control and, in fact, the Senate has had no control now make it apparent that instead of concluding the business of Congress by April, as was indicated when we first met, or by May, as was later suggested by the White House and by the leadership of both Houses, in all likelihood the business of this session will be drawn out certainly into July, and probably into the month of August.

Mr. President, it occurs to me that that is not a necessary program, nor is it a fortunate one either for the people of the country or for the wisdom of prospective legislation. We have adjourned from day to day because we had nothing on the calendar. We meet once or twice or sometimes three times a week, clean up the calendar in a short time, dispose of the business pending here, and of necessity recess. Why continue that program this year from now into the late hot summer? Why did we not arrange to adjourn by the middle of May, as the leader and a good many others of us some weeks ago thought we should be able to do?

Early in this session the President said he was through sending messages to Congress and that he would send no more messages which would delay final adjournment. I think he has kept that promise. Still we see 3 months of prospective delay into the hot season before we may expect to hear presented to the two Houses a motion for sine die adjournment. Why?

As one reason, it is now said that a social-security bill must be passed before we adjourn. No social-security bill has been presented to either House, and yet 4 months of the session have gone by. There is at this time no assurance when the House Committee on Ways and Means, in which such a bill must first be considered, will be in position to bring it to the House for consideration. I am not criticizing that committee. They have been actively and diligently at work, according to my information, and have held hearings lasting nearly 2 months; but that program is a comprehensive one. It is one which affects the feeling of security of probably millions of persons in this country. It is a program which cannot be perfected except by trial and error; and no one need think that by staying here until July this session of Congress can perfect a broad social-security program for the future. Time is required. Calm and deliberate consideration by Congress should be given to so great a measure. Why insist that Congress must stay here now for the passage of that bill? Why not let the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate at their pleasure, during the recess of Congress, proceed to deliberate over that complex and comprehensive bill, and be ready, as directed by this resolution, to report when Congress meets next January?

We hear that we must pass at this session a general tax bill. I do not know who started that report. It has been understood for 3 or 4 months that we should have no general tax bill at this session of Congress. That statement has been frequently carried by the newspapers, and I have heard no denial of it until very recently. Now we are advised that we must wait here until the House finishes considering the social-security bill, because, as we all know, the same committee of the House—the Committee on Ways and Means—has jurisdiction of both the tax measure and the social-security measure. When the social-security bill goes to the House, the members of the Ways and Means Committee must give their time and attention to that bill during its consideration on the floor of the House; and until it has been finally acted upon, they cannot even begin consideration of a general tax program.

I have not heard—other Senators may have, but I have not—of any specific changes in the general taxing system of the Government that it is necessary at this time to put upon the statute books.. I have heard no specific tax advocated. I have heard no definite measure proposed to shift a part of the tax burden of the country from one group of taxpayers to another group of taxpayers. Apparently, there is no great emergency about the tax matter. If there had been, it would have been pressed before this time. I see no reason for suddenly bringing forward a general tax program; and we all know the time that is required for the consideration of such a measure in the Senate of the United States. Many weeks, according to our former experience, have been required for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Finance and amendments offered by many Senators upon the floor of the Senate, which in this instance would carry into the heat of July, into the heat of August, and possibly into the sultry month of September the deliberations of Congress upon the subject of a new tax program.

Mr. President, I submit that the committees ought to do that work without requiring the Members of Congress to stay here in Washington and wait until they are ready to report, and then stay here for minute and detailed and prolonged discussion of all the subjects involved in all the ramifications of a new general taxing system.

Then there is the question of neutrality. We are told that we must stay here until we pass a new neutrality bill. For weeks and weeks the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has been constantly in session, according to the newspapers and current reports, considering a new neutrality bill. I am not advised whether or not the House has touched the subject; but we know that the Senate committee, after diligent investigation and honest and conscientious work, has been unable to agree upon a new neutrality bill and, not through neglect but, as I understand, through inability to reach an agreement upon a program, has permitted a new neutrality bill to remain in the committee until the old law has expired.

The able and distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has stated that it probably will take as long to pass a new neutrality bill, if it contains certain provisions, as it took for the Senate to consider the Covenant of the League of Nations. What does that mean? We all know that there is in the Senate a strong group of Members who have definite and fixed views upon the matter of foreign relations. We know that that group has in its membership some of the ablest men and some of the best speakers in the Senate, some who are capable of speaking day after day. When such men as the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and I and others stood here trying to educate the people of the country on an antilynching bill, some of the members of the group to which I have just referred, who are about to carry on what they refer to as an educational program, denounced us as filibusterers. They now propose, however, according to an open notice, not to indulge in a filibuster—they do not like that name—but they are to engage in exactly the same procedure, delaying from day to day, trying to educate the Members of the Senate, trying to arouse and stir the people of the Nation from day to day, from month to month, through the hot summer season, resisting the passage of what appears to be the sentiment of a majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations on the subject of a new neutrality measure.

It is suggested that we ought to remain here and permit all of the Executive orders on the subject of reorganization to go into operation under the 60-day requirement in the law. If that course is followed, and we remain here, it is automatically settled now that we will be here until July at least, and every order that comes up from the White House will automatically prolong the session of Congress and extend it for a period of 60 days from the time the Executive order comes to Congress; and we hear that others are in preparation and on their way. That means that we would have to stay almost to the middle of July if we did not have anything else to keep us.

Mr. President, I note that a program is proposed in the other House to vote down, on an adverse report, a bill to disapprove the last Executive order submitting a reorganization plan. What would that accomplish in practical results? That would be merely an expression of the sense of a majority of the membership of the House. As I understand the so-called Reorganization Act, it would not shorten the time in which the Executive order will go into effect.

In other words, the law provides the order shall become effective 60 days from the day it is received, if it lies here without affirmative action. I do not know why affirmative action is not sought. I am not one of the leaders, as Senators well know, but with the practically unanimous expression of approval of the program, with no partisan spirit injected into it, I am unable to see the evil consequences which might follow bringing in a bill and asking Congress to vote an affirmative approval of the Executive order. I believe firmly that it would be approved, and I am of the opinion that every Member of the Senate believes that would be done. Then why remain here until July or August merely to permit the time period to expire, when, without any reasonable doubt, both Houses would promptly vote to close the matter if the question were brought to a vote of the two Houses?

Mr. President, I have presented the concurrent resolution, not with any illusion that it is going to be presently adopted. I have offered it for two purposes. One was to submit the suggested program to the consideration of those who have the control of the procedure of Congress. In a friendly spirit I invoke their consideration of it. It would be so much better to let the committees which have already done a great deal, proceed and conclude their work and have their bills ready for Congress when it meets in January. My only other reason was a desire to furnish an instrumentality for entering my humble personal protest against Congress being kept in Washington until probably August, and possibly September, this year, with only a few more bills upon the so-called must list.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I was detained at the opening of the Senator's remarks and do not know whether he mentioned, in connection with the proposed legislation now pending, possible amendments to the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not mention that subject. In the resolution I did mention the Interstate Commerce Act, on which protracted hearings have been held, and the consideration of which, of course, will require a great deal more time, perhaps, in the committee, and certainly on the floor.

I did not mention the Wagner Act, because I observed in the newspapers a statement by the able, distinguished, and courageous Senator from Nebraska, whose courage I greatly admire, and with whose conclusions I am at times in accord, to the effect that it was entirely unlikely, not using his language, but my construction of what he said, that the committee considering the National Labor Relations Act at this time would report a bill amending the act. So, recognizing the sound judgment of the Senator, I did not include the Labor Relations Act. I accepted the statement as one of fact.

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator will yield further, I should like to say on that point that, as the Senator knows, hearings have been under way for some time before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor on the labor relations law. This is an act of such great importance that no thought of amendment should be considered until the evidence has been presented fully and thoroughly digested. The sponsor of the act, the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], has said he heartily approves of the hearings being conducted, he is willing to examine all the evidence that is presented, and that if a clear showing is made of the necessity of amendment, he will give the matter his serious consideration.

My reason for making the statement which appeared in the newspapers and to which the Senator has referred was that it seemed to me important that the committee should proceed with its hearings, that all responsible parties or representatives of all responsible parties and organizations who feel they know something about how the National Labor Relations Act is working, either for good or ill, should come before the committee and present their views, and that then the committee should have an abundance of time to sift and weigh all the testimony. I thought such procedure would be very much better than to rush headlong now into decisive action, either rejecting all amendments or adopting any certain amendment.

I find myself in very hearty accord with what the Senator from Alabama has said, that these are all matters which require committee action, long and careful thought by the committees, preceded by adequate hearings, such as those now being held by many of the committees; and that, after all, it is not so important that Congress be kept in session throughout the summer and into the fall in order that action may be taken on these subjects.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I appreciate the very fine statement made by the Senator from Nebraska. His conclusion is the one I have reached, not only regarding the bill to which he refers, and the necessity of having time for due and orderly consideration by the committee, but the same reason has led me to the same conclusion regarding the other controversial bills to which I have referred, and as to which I see no dire emergency compelling special and hurried action, or requiring very long and protracted sessions of Congress, which we all know do not, in the heat of summer, lead to the best consideration or the wisest judgment in matters of legislation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, about what times does the Senator think would be required for action on the measures to which he has referred?

Mr. BANKHEAD. My resolution suggested adjournment the 15th of June.

Mr. SMITH. I vote "aye."

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would give ample time to pass all the supply bills and any other needed legislation, such as the Congress usually passes in an orderly way.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the comments of the Senator from Alabama and regret very much that I have to disagree with his conclusions. I am sure that all Senators would much prefer to have Congress adjourn at the earliest practicable moment, so that they might return to their homes. We are more comfortable at home; there is less annoyance there from the importunities of those who seek action at the hands of Congress, and we are more likely to obtain rest. Some Senators who are able have opportunity to escape the heat in July and August. But the heat in July and August will not be any greater on Senators than it is on other citizens. The temperature is not a respecter of persons, except of those who go to the seashore or the mountains; and some of us are not able to walk that far. [Laughter.]

It is true that the measures mentioned by the Senator are of the highest importance, and therefore, being of the highest importance, they ought to be right here in this Chamber, and we ought to be right here in this Chamber, giving attention to those measures until all the problems involved are solved. People talk about solving a problem, but no question was ever solved in the history of the earth. No law was ever enacted which could not be repealed. No constitution was ever written which could not be modified or amended or overturned by a revolution. There is a constant struggle to improve that which we have done before, in the light of experience and changing conditions.

But, Mr. President, there is to my mind a far more important and imperative reason why the Congress of the United States should remain in Washington for the next few months. There is no war in Europe now; I do not believe there is going to be any war in Europe immediately; but there may be a war in Europe. The United States has no business in such a war. The people of the United States do not want to be in any war. Nobody but the Congress of the United States can determine whether we shall be in such a war or not, because it is our function and our responsibility and our duty to determine that question. The Committee on Foreign Relations, it is true, for a considerable period has been having hearings on the question of neutrality, and we hope to conclude those hearings at the end of the present week. Complaint is made that those hearings have taken a great deal of time. Is that a proper complaint when we are investigating a matter which touches vitally the interest of this Nation and every citizen under our flag?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator must realize that I did not make any complaint of that nature.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not contend that the Senator did.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the committee is doing fine work.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, we of the Committee on Foreign Relations are undertaking to approach the question from every possible angle in order that, insofar as feeble human beings can do so—though they are supposed to wear the togas of Senators—we may so deal with the question as best to preserve the interests of the people of the United States and yet not cause us to intrude our hands into a struggle from which we can only withdraw them in blood. So, Mr. President, I think Congress should stay right here in Washington until all the visible dangers of involvement of the United States in a foreign war may be removed, insofar as they can be removed.

Suppose we do have to remain here while it is hot. This is the place of our functions. Congress is the agency into whose keeping the people have entrusted their welfare. We must perform those duties which come within our functions. I would much prefer to go home, and would much prefer to ride around over the beautiful landscape of my native State. I believe the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] whispered "and Arizona." I would also rather ride out over the distant State of Arizona. We would all rather be at home in comfort, surrounded by our friends and constituents.

But, Mr. President, that is not the decisive consideration. We are struggling here as best we can with these mighty issues, and it is our duty and our responsibility to remain here so long as it may appear to be necessary or practicable for us to meet and struggle with and survey, so far as we may, whatever falls within our jurisdiction. The function of the Congress—of the Senate and the House of Representatives—is to enact legislation. No power on earth under the Constitution can determine great, vital questions of peace or war except the Congress of the United States. I, for one, know that the people of the United States do not want war. I know that while they expect us to maintain our rights and our dignity and our prestige as a Nation, yet they want the United States so to shape its foreign policies and so to conduct its foreign affairs that we may not become embroiled in any war that shall take place across the ocean on another continent.

Mr. President, the questions before us now involve more than our own particular continental defense. We have already provided and will provide in the future for an adequate increase of the naval forces, and the military forces, and the air forces to protect continental United States, but more and more before the public attention is being pressed the further question of the Monroe Doctrine, and all the possibilities involved in it. All in all, it is the duty of the Congress to see that we do not become involved in a foreign war.

Mr. President, my belief is that the Congress of the United States should remain here in Washington, and in session, so long as there is any danger whatever of involvement in such a struggle as that which seems to threaten.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, first I desire to compliment the leader upon the Democratic side of the Chamber, in view of the statements made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], because of his courtesy and fine executive ability. I think he has handled the affairs of the Senate, so far as they are entrusted to his hands, with marked ability and with a due regard to the best interests of the country.

At the same time I desire to pay my respects to the leader on the other side, the leader of the Republican Party. He has cooperated in a fair and honorable way to discharge the duties of his position and to facilitate the transaction of such business as has come before the Senate.

The Senator from Alabama complains because we are not in session more frequently. I think the Senator forgets that we have several score committees—subcommittees and general committees—in session every day. If I had my way, I should amend the rules of the Senate so that we would devote 3 days of every week to committee work, and not be required to meet in the Senate Chamber on those 3 days, and then devote 2 days or 3 days, if necessary, to work in the Chamber of the Senate. I think our work would then be more effective, and I think that our accomplishments would be more satisfactory. We should not neglect the duties devolving upon the various committees. This morning there have been 8 or 9 or 10 important committees at work. If we had more time for committee work, and if we were not compelled to meet in the Senate Chamber as often as we have met, perhaps we would have been more successful in bringing to the floor of the Senate important measures that have been referred to the respective committees.

Mr. President, I am not quite sure whether the Senator from Alabama desires the adoption of the resolution which he has submitted. I suggest that if he does not desire it to be adopted, but desires it to be referred to a committee, that he divide his resolution because one part of the resolution should go to the Committee on Finance and the other part to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I wish to say a word or two with respect to the Committee on Finance, and the revenue question to which the Senator from Alabama has adverted. I am sure that the Committee on Ways and Means of the other House—if I may be permitted to refer to the body at the other end of the Capitol—have with great ability and great earnestness been addressing themselves to the question of taxation, and I am sure that the members of the Senate Committee on Finance, in subcommittees or individually, have likewise given a great deal of attention to our revenue situation.

Mr. President, it is obvious that we are going to commit what I believe to be a colossal blunder. We are going to appropriate perhaps ten or twelve billion dollars before the Congress adjourns, and to make commitments of five billion or six billion dollars more, knowing that under the proposed revenue measures and under the present laws we will collect only about $5,000,000,000 or possibly $5,200,000,000 or $5,300,000,000. I think it would be prudent and wise before final adjournment for the Congress to revise the revenue laws, increase taxes, burdensome as they now are—and still more burdensome they will be in the future—in order that the deficit may not be four or five billion dollars, as it will be because of the prodigality of Congress and its failure to give to the country such revenues as are necessary approximately to meet appropriations.

So far as I am concerned, I am willing to remain here during the summer, and, while I do not wish to criticize the other branch of the Congress, I think it would be wise if there should be reported at an early date a sound revenue bill, one that would raise at least $6,000,000,000 or $7,000,000,000, and that the Appropriations Committees in the discharge of their duties should reduce appropriations far below Budget estimates, and bring them within speaking distance at least of the revenues which will be derived by the tax bill which I hope will be passed before final adjournment.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I desire to take my stand beside the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] in his remarks upon war. Some days ago I listened to a remarkable speech in this body, as eloquent as any I have heard since I have been a Member of the Senate, from the Senator who now occupies the chair [Mr. GEORGE], who expressed himself upon war.

I think we ought to remain here, sir, because of the imminence of armed conflict. We ought to remain here because such conflict would mean so much to the American people. Recently I listened to a witness before the Foreign Relations Committee, who said something that I have often remarked in the past. He said that the first casualty of war is truth. That casualty has occurred thus far; and, sir, we cannot remedy that particular matter.

The consequences of war to this country are such that I tremble when I think of them. The consequences of war, sir, are far greater than all the other consequences which have been so eloquently portrayed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. The consequences of war are that we shall have no country for which to legislate if once we embark on such a mad adventure. The consequences of war are that this Government of ours, which is the pride and glory of every Member of this body, we will see gone, gone, gone; and there will be no remedy by which we can resurrect it within our lifetime.

I regard the two dictators with every feeling of horror that can actuate anybody, or that anybody can feel. If we shall go to war in an endeavor to destroy those two dictators, we shall have a dictator in the United States, and he will be with us forever. I am not now speaking in personal vein, or referring to any individual; but the necessary consequences of a war at this time will be that we shall have just exactly that which we reprobate among the countries of Europe if we go into any armed conflict and the result shall be even one way or even another.

So war is the great thing overshadowing every other question before the American people.

I recognize the importance of other questions to which reference has been made; I recognize that we ought to legislate concerning them; but, after all, overshadowing every one of them and rendering every single one of them of little importance, is the question of war—war that will mean what we know it will mean; and, sir, it is to the Congress of the United States, it is to the United States Senate, that the people of the United States look to keep us out of war. It is the Congress of the United States, with all its faults, with all its shortcomings; it is to the Senate of the United States, with all its sins of commission and omission, that will keep us out of war in the dark days that are to come; and no other person, no other individual, no matter who he may be. We shall have a replica of the situation of 20 years ago, when it was the Senate of the United States which rescued the country from the position in which it found itself. It was the Senate of the United States which, to its lasting credit, refused ratification of the Treaty of Versailles.

Mr. President, we all want to go away; we all would like to go home, none more than I; but we cannot go home. We must be on guard, sir, literally on guard, every minute of the day and every minute of the night in the days to come, to see that we shall not participate in a war which is none of our concern, and that we shall be neither eased into that war nor driven into it. We can do our duty in that regard only by being right here. Let us stay and do our duty. Let us continue as we have been doing in the past, to represent those who sent us here, in their desire to remain peaceful, and not warlike. Let us go on and prevent any provocative utterances; prevent, if we can, various acts which may be construed as warlike on the part of this Government. Let us be ourselves and, for the people of the United States, let us keep out of war. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss the resolution submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]; in fact, I did not know until a moment before it was presented that it was to be offered or was under consideration by the Senator from Alabama. I shall refer to it only briefly.

At the outset, I appreciate the very generous remarks made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] concerning myself. I share the references in their remarks to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] the minority leader. While I am on that subject, I wish to say that it has been a real pleasure for me to have, as I have had, the sincere cooperation of the Senator from Oregon, the minority leader, in helping to work out the legislative program and to facilitate the business of the Senate.

Mr. President, it is true that the Senate has been in recess on a number of days during this session of Congress; but it has not been in recess because of any lack of industry or because of any desire to neglect public business. We have kept the calendars current. We have recessed only over the week ends and from day to day when the Senate had no important business to occupy its attention.

Of course, we all would like to get away at the earliest possible date consistent with the performance of our duties. However, we were not elected by the people simply to adjourn. As I have always understood, we were elected by the people to try to shoulder our part of the responsibility of operating the Government of the United States.

Early in the session I indicated that it might be possible to adjourn by the 15th of June, and perform all the duties which might seem incumbent upon the Congress, in which I include both branches, of course. It seemed that we might adjourn on that date, or approximately that date, without being guilty in the remotest degree of shirking any of our responsibilities or failing to perform our duties so long as those duties required our presence here. Until very recently I still entertained the hope that we might finish by the 15th of June, or thereabouts. However, I am now confident that we cannot do so without running away from the performance of our public duty.

In his resolution the Senator from Alabama mentions three committees and three particular subjects which he desires to have investigated during the recess by the committees having charge of proposed legislation. What are those subjects, Mr. President? One of them is railroad legislation. The Committee on Interstate Commerce, whose chairman, the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], is present and will corroborate what I am about to say, for the last 2 or 3 years has been devoting itself assiduously and single-mindedly toward the gathering of information which might help in the solution of the acute railroad problem which confronts the railroads and the country with respect to our transportation systems. Bills to that end have been introduced in this session. The President appointed a joint committee made up of three representatives of railway labor and three representatives of management to work out a suggested measure. Bills have been introduced and hearings have been completed, and a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce is now working on the problem of revising the bills so as to bring them to the floor of the Senate within the next week or 10 days. It is my earnest hope that that task may be accomplished. A similar House committee is considering the problem.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, I will say that we have held hearings for approximately 3 weeks on one of the pieces of legislation referred to. The subcommittee then took up all the objections made by everybody and worked for about 2 weeks on that measure. By the latter part of this week or the first of next week we expect to be able to report a bill which I am sure will be as nearly satisfactory as it is possible to make any such legislation.

We are holding hearings upon a bill for railroad reorganizations, to correct some of the abuses in that field; and we shall probably be able to report that bill to the Senate by the latter part of next week.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that information, and I think I will venture to suggest also that, in view of the hearings that have been held and the consideration that has been given to that subject not only by the Committee on Interstate Commerce but by the executive branch of the Government and by the parties in interest, the railroads themselves, and all those connected with them, including management and labor relationships, there is now available practically all the information that could be obtained if the committee were to hold hearings the remainder of the summer on the subject of railway legislation.

So there has been no negligence, no shirking of any duty on the part of the committee, in trying to work out a very intricate and a very difficult problem and in trying to find out what to do about the railroad situation in the United States. I dare say that, with all the care that has been given the subject, and all the care that has been given to the drafting of legislation, when we shall have brought it on to the floor and passed it, we can still say that nobody has the last word in the solution of the railway problem.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The concurrent resolution presented by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], which has brought on this debate, is not officially before the Senate, is it?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it is not.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, I suppose that resolution will be referred to a committee and come up in due time. So we are talking about something that is not at present before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not complaining about that, for that is characteristic of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am referring to it merely because a number of Senators have discussed it.

Mr. NORRIS. But one good way to stay here all summer is to spend the time between now and fall discussing whether or not we will adjourn. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I agree with the Senator, and I myself am not going to discuss it until fall.

So much for railroad legislation. I do not believe that we would be any nearer a solution of the problem next January when Congress comes back and starts over again, as it always does at the beginning of a Congress, on a cold collar, back down the hill, and then start fresh to reach the point where we are now. So I do not think that anything can be accomplished by deferring for further investigation the railroad problem that is now before the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Now, as to taxes. Nobody has the last word in the solution of the tax problem, either, and I suppose that is fortunate, because if the Senate or the other House of Congress should assume that we have the last word in the solution of any problem it would not leave anything else for future Congresses or future generations to do.

No one claims that our present tax system is perfect; no one can deny that it has imperfections. It is like all tax systems that have been added to and pieced out like a quilt, with all hands around the quilt putting in a particular piece here and a particular piece there to give it color and attraction and beauty. Of course, there is no attraction or beauty about a tax, but there is a good deal of color.

The question has arisen whether we shall have a general revision of taxes at this session of Congress or whether we shall not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan. I think, from the expression on his face, he has a bright idea in his mind, and I do not want to lose it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Kentucky, in discussing the question of taxes, drew an analogy between the tax system and a quilt. I was going to inquire if that is the kind of a quilt that is called a "crazy quilt"?

Mr. BARKLEY. I presume that a quilt of that sort might be and sometimes is called a "crazy quilt," but it sometimes affords great comfort to those who have one.

The question of whether we shall embark upon a general revision of taxes has been under discussion here since we came to Washington in January. I agree that if we go into a general revision of taxes we shall be here all summer, because it is impossible in a short time to revise a complicated tax system, whether we simply undertake to remove money from one pocket and put it into another or whether we undertake to abolish taxes that raise the amount of revenue estimated by the Treasury and replace them with taxes on something else which is untaxed or which is not taxed as much as it would be under a new law.

Mr. President, I have felt—and I have expressed that feeling—that it will do business in this country no particular good to be kept in a long state of uncertainty about what taxes are to be.

We have heard a great deal about removing the taxes that are deterrents to business such as the capital-stock tax and what is left of the shadow of the undistributed-profits tax on corporations and one other tax that is supposed to be a deterrent. If we are to assume that we have got to raise the same amount of revenue we are now raising no matter how we may shift the tax, then we must consider the question whether we desire to remove three particular types of taxes that are paid by the business of our country in one form and shift it over into another form under which the amount to be paid will be the same in the long run and in the aggregate, but might be taken out of a different pocket in order to be transferred to the Treasury. Congress has a right to consider that question.

The House of Representatives, as I have understood from the leadership of that body and others dealing with taxation, have planned to send to the Senate probably three simple resolutions, one extending the so-called nuisance taxes which expire this year; another one extending the shadow of the undistributed-profits tax on corporations, which raises about $56,000,000 a year; and another one postponing the step-up of the social-security tax. When those various resolutions arrive in the Senate and are referred to the Committee on Finance, of course, any Senator in the committee or on the floor can propose a general revision of taxes if he so desires; there is no rule that would prevent him doing so; but if we are to be content with extending the expiring taxes and postponing the step-up of the taxes under the Social Security Act, we can perform that duty, in my judgment, speedily and without serious complication and without much delay.

I do not say, Mr. President, that we can get all these bills through by the 15th of June; I doubt it very seriously; we may not be able to get them all through by the 1st of July; but I do not think that either the House or the Senate, separately or collectively, as forming the Congress, have been guilty of any negligence in giving these problems their careful and studious consideration.

So far as neutrality legislation is concerned, it presents a very difficult problem. No two men entertain precisely the same opinion about what we should do. One provision of our neutrality law expired on yesterday. The Committee on Foreign Relations will complete its hearings this week on proposed neutrality legislation, and such legislation, if it is to be comprehensive and is to protect our interests, ought to be enacted, if possible, before there is a war and not after a war is begun anywhere in the world. There are those who advocate the outright repeal of the neutrality law; there are those who believe in the reenactment of the cash-and-carry provision; there are those who advocate the enactment of legislation that will make it possible for, or perhaps the duty of, our Government to designate aggressors, and so on. Opinions of all varieties have been expressed before the Committee on Foreign Relations. I do not know what sort of legislation will be formulated by the committee. I do not know, and I dare say no one else knows at this juncture, what sort of bill the minds of that committee can finally agree to report for the consideration of the Senate; and the same thing is true, no doubt, of the other body; but, Mr. President, whatever our difficulties may be, and whatever may be our differences of opinion, I believe that every member of that committee entertains honestly and conscientiously the opinions that he has expressed both in the committee, here, and elsewhere; and I believe it to be the sincere and prayerful desire of every member of that committee, and even of the Senate and of the other House, so to guide our ship of state and so to shape the conduct of our foreign affairs, always recognizing our own handicaps and our own inabilities in that connection as a body, that our Nation will not only be able to steer its course clear of any war that may occur anywhere else in the world but may at the same time protect the interests, protect the safety, protect the traditions, protect the dignity and the welfare of the American people. How that can best be done may be a subject of disagreement among Senators, but we all want to do that. However, regardless of the problems, regardless of the difficulties, Mr. President, regardless of our differences of opinion on the subject, there is one opinion which I think we can all express, and that is we cannot run away from the performance of that duty.

In the midst of these chaotic conditions, which have not been brought about by our Government, which have not been imposed on the world by anything we have done as a nation, in my judgment the American people would feel a profound sense of disappointment in the Congress of the United States if, in order to avoid the hot summer, or in order to hie away to our homes, whether they be hot or cold, or whether we can go to Europe or to Canada or to the South Seas, we should now say, in advance, that we will pass or even seriously consider a resolution to adjourn on the 15th of June, or any other date in the future.

I appreciate the sincerity of the Senator from Alabama, which is a characteristic that always attends his conduct both as a public servant and as a man; but I think, on reflection, the Senator from Alabama must conclude that his resolution cannot be considered at this time and cannot be adopted.

I do not know to what committee the resolution should go, unless it be the Committee on Rules. The resolution is in three parts. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Alabama desires to have it referred to a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the concurrent resolution will lie over under the rule.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire in advance to confess my shortcomings in attempting to deal adequately with so intricate and complicated a subject as that which is dealt with in the pending measure.

This bill is the result of an investigation made by the Securities and Exchange Commission under a mandate of the Congress of the United States. In the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, section 211, the Commission, in the following language, was ordered to make an investigation:

> The Commission is authorized and directed to make a study and investigation of the work, activities, personnel, and functions of protective and reorganization committees in connection with the reorganization, readjustment, rehabilitation, liquidation, or consolidation of persons and properties and to report the result of its studies and investigations and its recommendations to the Congress on or before January 3, 1936.

Carrying out the mandate contained in the last paragraph of the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, the Commission carried on an investigation for more than 2 years. That investigation led to a study of trust indentures, a form of legal document issued in connection with large financing operations and the issuance of bonds by corporations throughout the United States. I may say that there are today outstanding more than $40,000,000,000 in bonds issued by corporate institutions based upon the legal instrument known as the trust indenture; and four and one-half billion dollars' worth of these bonds have been issued to the public since the creation of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and have, under the securities law, been required to be filed and disclosure made before the Commission as a preliminary step toward the issuance of bonds based upon these trust indentures.

The report of the Commission to Congress consisted of seven volumes. I have here volume 6, which contains 220 pages, giving the Congress in some detail the result of the Commission's investigation of trusteeships under trust indentures. It is a very illuminating document. The work was carried out carefully and methodically, and, as I believe, judicially. The Commission has assembled in volume 6 of the report a wealth of information, the study of which I think will convince any fair-minded man that legislation of this type is necessary and desirable.

As a result of the investigations and the facts disclosed, the Commission, the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bankers' associations, and various organizations throughout the country have been giving careful study to the subject of legislation designed to protect bondholders scattered all over the United States who buy these bonds, but never see the indentures on which they are based, against loss of their money in the investment which they make; designed to protect the bondholders not only through the performance of more rigid duties upon the part of the trustee, but designed to protect them also in having a public place where they may go, if necessary, to find the general terms of the indenture upon which have been issued the bonds in which they have invested their money.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Securities and Exchange Act now require that the indentures be filed with the securities, so that any investor in a security may examine the indenture at his leisure before he buys the security?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; the law requires that a concern desiring to issue a series of bonds or to float a bond issue shall disclose before the Commission the condition of the company and the facts connected with the bond issue, and file a copy of its indenture; but the law gives the Commission no control over the indenture. The corporation merely files with the Commission the instrument which they propose to issue. The Commission has no power to approve or disapprove the form of the instrument.

Mr. President, that has been one of the defects of the Securities Act. I will say also that, notwithstanding the fact that four and a half billion dollars worth of these securities have been issued on indentures since the creation of the Exchange Commission, notwithstanding the investigations which have been carried on by the Commission, notwithstanding the pendency of legislation before Congress on the subject for the last 3 years, notwithstanding the recommendations and the publicity given to the findings of the Commission, there has been no substantial improvement in the form and requirements of the trust indenture since the creation of the Securities and Exchange Commission and since the investigation.

The persistence of these defects in Securities Act indentures shows that mere disclosure of the provisions of the indenture is not enough. Such disclosure frequently takes the form of long, complicated quotations from the indenture itself. Besides, the Securities Act does not require a disclosure of the reasons why the inclusion of particular provisions or the omission of others is harmful to investors, and the most elaborate explanation would not be enough to make the average investor understand why.

Let me say in that connection that these indentures run all the way from 50 pages to as high as 300 pages of complicated legal phraseology, and the average investor, if he had the opportunity to read one, would in all probability be unable to understand it.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a volume which constitutes an indenture of the Michigan Consolidated Gas Co. to the City Bank Farmers Trust Co., and Ralph E. Morton, trustees. It is an indenture of mortgage and deed of trust. This indenture consists of 365 pages of rather closely printed technical legal phraseology. The man who bought the bonds that were issued under this indenture never saw the indenture. The bond which he bought consisted probably of one sheet, which he could fold up and put in his pocket, a sheet with gold letters and gold braid upon it, which made it look beautiful. But he never saw this indenture, and if he had seen it he probably could not have understood it in time to have invested his money in bonds that were issued upon it as a basis.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I wish to ask a question right there about which I am concerned. As I understand, the bill deals with bonds which have been issued by resident corporations or associations, and attempts to provide a better means of protecting the bondholders, who live in different parts of the United States. I am wondering whether the bill has any effect on the holders of securities which were issued by foreign governments and their subdivisions, which are scattered all over the United States, and the holders of the bonds seem to be absolutely helpless. A few voluntary committees or corporations have been organized, and I was wondering whether the provisions of the bill attempted to provide any assistance for the holders of these bonds issued by foreign governments and now held by our citizens.

Mr. BARKLEY. The categorical answer to that question is "no." The Securities Act requires that these foreign bonds be registered.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. But there is no way by which the Government of the United States can control the formulation of the document on which these bonds are issued in foreign countries.

Mr. LOGAN. They are issued by banks of issue or trustees in this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. They are issued in foreign countries somewhat after the same fashion in which the bonds are issued in this country. We have no way of controlling the initiation of the bond issue.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. We have no way of saying what shall be in the indenture. The bonds are sent to this country and are distributed by American financial institutions, and undoubtedly the public has been very grievously imposed upon in years gone by in connection with them.

Mr. LOGAN. Does not the bill provide that where the public has been imposed upon by the issuance of bonds by corporations in this country the Securities and Exchange Commission may appoint a trustee to protect the bondholders and find out what their rights are? That, as I understand, is the chief end of the bill. Why does not the bill contain a provision that the Securities and Exchange Commission may appoint someone representing the holders of foreign securities to see that their rights are protected and make report to the Securities and Exchange Commission? It seems to me it is equally important that the holders of securities of foreign countries should be protected.

Mr. BARKLEY. In ordinary cases the foreign bonds which are issued in foreign countries and sold in this country do not have what we call in America "trustees." Ordinarily there is no trusteeship with respect to these bond issues which are floated and circulated among the people of the United States. This provision of the Securities Act applies to new issues, and not to old issues.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt, I understand that a trustee may be appointed not only for future issues but for past issues, under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is mistaken with respect to the appointment of trustees.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not on the committee, and I may be mistaken; but the fact is that voluntary committees have been organized and settlements made with foreign countries for the bondholders. There has been no restriction as to how much should be charged. No one has had control over any such corporation or committee as may have been organized, and they are allowed to run absolutely wild. I wonder if it is not possible, in legislation such as that proposed, to place these committees, corporations, individuals, or whoever they may be, claiming to represent the holders of the securities of foreign governments, under the Securities and Exchange Commission, so that they may be subject to the regulations of the Securities and Exchange Commission. It seems to me some legislation like that is very important.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that question has been given very serious study and consideration, not only by the Securities and Exchange Commission but by the committee and by the Congress, and by all who have dealt with the subject. What we are trying to do is, in advance of their issue, to set up conditions on which these bonds shall be issued.

A trust indenture is ordinarily prepared by the issuer. In most cases the trustee himself takes no part in the preparation of the indenture. Ordinarily the issuer and the underwriter, which is the institution which proposes to take the bonds and distribute them among the people, go into executive session and prepare the indenture, and in a large number of cases, if not in most cases, the trustee itself never saw the indenture, did not participate in its formulation, and did not know its terms until it became the trustee and saw the indenture which had been previously worked out.

The Senator will realize the impossibility of the Congress of the United States undertaking by any legislation that is conceivable to fix the conditions under which these instruments might be drawn up in any foreign country and sold to the people of other countries, and that problem, although it was considered very carefully, is not within the scope of the proposed legislation.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand. But aside from that, we have the following situation: A few years ago there were sold to the citizens of our country literally billions of dollars of securities of foreign countries. They were sold under our laws existing at that time, and the purchasers of those securities have lost literally billions of dollars. The questions involved have not been settled. In many instances there has been no effort made to settle them. I want to know if the Government of the United States refuses to provide any instrumentality whereby those innocent victims may be entitled to a fair hearing on the part of someone in the Government who can give them some relief perhaps if the matter were intelligently handled.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to my colleague that it is not a question of the Government refusing to give any help to those who have in the years gone by invested in these bonds, many of them bogus and worthless. We have provided in the law which is being administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission that all future issues of these bonds that are attempted to be sold in the United States shall be registered with the Commission; that there shall be a disclosure of the conditions under which they are issued in order that the American investor may find out more than he ever could before with respect to the conditions of the government which issues them, if it happens to be a government, or of the private corporations, if they are private corporations, that issue these bonds for flotation or sale throughout the United States. But we have never yet been able to work out any plan, I will say to my colleague, by which we can anticipate the issue of bonds in any foreign country so as to control the conditions under which the legal instruments are drawn up in connection with those issues. All we have been able to do so far is to require that they be registered in a public place, which is the Commission, where they may be inspected by those who are interested in the investments.

Mr. LOGAN. Evidently our Government thought that something could be done to protect the holders of securities of governments, because when Mr. William O. Douglas was brought to Washington his first job was to investigate these committees and corporations that had set themselves up to represent the bondholders in the United States in negotiations with foreign governments. A state of affairs amounting, I might say, to a scandal was developed by Mr. Douglas' investigation. Nothing has been done about it. It was charged and it was developed that enormous fees were paid at the expense of the bondholders. It does seem to me that while we are dealing with legislation such as this there ought to be some provision that the poor neglected bondholders who were imposed upon should be protected by the Government of the United States against exploitation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator as a matter of principle that we ought to go as far as we can to do that, but the provision which exempts these bonds from the provisions of these sections with respect to the formulation of the indenture is in the following language:

SEC. 304. (a) The provisions of sections 305, 306, 323, 324, and 325 of this title shall not apply to any of the following securities:

(6) any note, bond, debenture, or evidence of indebtedness issued or guaranteed for a foreign government or by a subdivision, department, municipality, agency, or instrumentality thereof.

So that the exemption from the provisions of the bill as pertaining to the formulation of the indenture applies to securities that are issued by the governments of foreign countries, or by any public subdivision thereof, and I do not know how we could write a law that would give Congress or the Commission any power to anticipate or supervise the writing of the obligations by which foreign governments promise to pay money to those who invest their money in their bonds.

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to my colleague that I agree with him, but that is not getting to the point. Some of these committees or corporations representing bondholders, or claiming to represent them, have negotiated settlements with foreign governments. The bondholders have had little to say in the matter at all. These committees, which charge

$100,000 or $1,000,000 to bring about a settlement, are subject to no control whatever, so I understand. I was just wondering if it were not possible to confer authority upon the Securities and Exchange Commission to see that the holders of foreign securities are not despoiled by those who are in it for their own selfish interests.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that at the last session of Congress a bill was introduced in the House dealing separately with committees. The present bill does not attempt to deal exhaustively with the matter of appointing committees. The main object of this bill is to provide for writing an instrument, not only binding the issuer of the obligations but binding the trustee appointed under that issue, in order to protect the men and women of this country who are scattered all over the country, who invest their money, a thousand dollars or $10,000 or $25,000, and who have always been accustomed to look to the trustee for the protection of their interests; and that faith has not always been justified, as the investigation has amply demonstrated.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand you are trying to lock the door before the horse is stolen; but, even after he has been stolen, I wonder if there is not some obligation on the Government to help the holders of securities?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course those holders of securities that have been purchased in the past can now form committees. They have the right to form their bondholders' committees, their protective committees, and do that now under the law, and they have the right to come into court to enforce their rights against the issuer. One of the difficulties has been the looseness with which the obligations and the duties of the trustees have been provided for in these indentures. This was a defect we are trying to correct here. It is a sort of process of locking the door before the horse is stolen; and my experience has always been, both personal and legislative, that there is not a great deal you can do about it after the horse is stolen.

Mr. LOGAN. You can get him back.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; you can go and find him and get h'm back. But to lock the door then is not a very adequate remedy.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. But the subject that the Senator has brought into the discussion is one that is not dealt with in the pending bill for the reason that it does not undertake to deal with the creation of committees primarily. If it may be found possible to work out legislation that might more conclusively protect those who have heretofore invested their money in the foreign securities, just as in our own securities in this country where the door was locked also after the horse had been stolen, I would be profoundly in sympathy with such legislation, but the bill does not attempt to deal with it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. If I understand the theory of the bill, the form of the indenture is not definitely described, but it is provided that unless the form of the indenture meets certain requirements, the securities issued under it may not go into interstate commerce. That is, the regulation of the form of the indenture is indirect. My suggestion following that of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] is this: If the form of the indenture can be controlled by denying access to domestic bonds in interstate commerce, I know of no reason why we cannot say that a foreign bond shall not be permitted to enter the channels of commerce or go through the mails unless it was issued in a certain way. In other words, we have the same right to control the one as the other.

Mr. LOGAN. I think so. I do not think we should say that the trust indentures in this country should be subject to a certain law, but that the securities of foreign countries can come in here and be turned loose in any form they please.

Mr. ADAMS. All we do is to control the handling of bonds in interstate and foreign commerce. It seems to me we ought not to permit our channels of interstate and foreign commerce to be used for the transmission of foreign bonds which are far more deleterious and unsafe than those which have a domestic trustee.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with the Senator heartily.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I make one other statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Kentucky made a statement which I do not think ought to stand entirely unchallenged, and that is that the trustees never know the contents or substance of the indenture. I do not know anything about the practice elsewhere than in the little locality where I have practiced, but I know from my own experience that when you seek to have a trustee accept an indenture, if you are compelled to submit your indenture to a trust company it is scrutinized by the attorneys for the trust company, who nearly always have insistence on certain provisions. I know nothing about New York, Chicago, or Kentucky, but I do know that in the western area there is a definite control by the trustee of the form of the indenture.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I did not say that the trustee never sees the indenture. The Senator from Colorado misunderstood me. I said that in many cases, if not in most cases, the draftsmanship of the indenture is conducted by the issuer and the underwriter. That the trustee, of course, sees it when it is asked to become a trustee, and the trustee may look it over and make suggestions with reference to changes in it, but the experience of the past has been that in most cases where the trustee has done that the changes were designed to relieve the trustee in many cases from some of the duties which ought to be performed by the trustee. But if the Senator got the impression that I meant that trustees generally have been so negligent that they never even looked at these indentures, he got the wrong impression.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I misunderstood the statement of the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not mean it at all in that sense.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. With reference to the observations made by his colleague, it seems to me that there are many objections to attempting, certainly at this time, to legislate to cover the situations to which he refers. I wish to illustrate what I mean. A few years ago, right after the war, many of the cities of Germany, including the Reich itself, issued securities amounting to hundreds of millions, and even to several billions of marks. I know that a large number of German-Americans, sympathizing, as was proper, with their mother country, and desiring to help the rehabilitation of the country, purchased thousands and millions of those marks, marks that were issued by various cities and various provinces and by the German Government itself. They purchased them from Germany. They had friends and relatives in Germany, and they purchased through them the obligations of the cities and of the Reich, to which I have referred. Within the past few days I have received a number of communications from American citizens who had very great faith in Brazil a few years ago, and they purchased many of the bond issues or portions of the bond issues of São Paulo and many others of the Provinces of Brazil. They have written to me, and several of them came to see me personally, to inquire whether or not our Government had undertaken or would undertake to afford protection, because for some time they had not received the interest upon the bonds.

I do not see how we can protect against those instances, because usually the purchases were made in foreign countries through foreign interests. As stated by the Senator, in a number of instances the holders of bonds have formed committees; but they have been voluntary committees formed by the holders of the securities, and, of course, they have not been subject to the scrutiny or supervision of the Federal Government. It would be very difficult to meet that situation by legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me respond to that suggestion for just a moment. I agree with the Senator that it is utterly impossible for us to attempt to fix the terms under which foreign securities shall be issued. After they have been issued and are distributed among American citizens, all we can do is to authorize the security holders to take such steps as they may see fit to take in order to protect themselves. However, we cannot, by any legislation of our own, attack the validity of foreign obligations; especially the validity of foreign government obligations. Such an effort would lead us into complications which we have not yet seen fit to undertake, and which I doubt if we ought to undertake. What we are trying to do in the proposed legislation is to prescribe the conditions under which the bonds shall be issued and the long, legalistic documents written, under which trustees are appointed, so that the men and women of the country who go down into their pockets and invest their money in the bonds of such corporations will have all the protection which the law can throw around them, not only in the formation of the instrument, which they may never see—and in most cases can never see—but by putting additional obligations on the trustee, who is primarily the representative of the security holders and not the representative of the issuer or the underwriter. We have attempted to do what I have described.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] suggested that we have undertaken in general terms to prescribe the conditions and terms of the debenture. Approximately 34 pages of the bill deal with what shall or shall not be contained in a debenture which is filed for qualification with the Securities and Exchange Commission by the company or institution desiring to issue the bond.

We give the Commission no power over the business of the company. We give the Commission no authority over the terms, the rate of interest, or the sinking fund. We give the Commission no authority whatever over the business features of the indenture and the obligations. The bill exempts issues of $1,000,000 or less from its provisions. We say: "If you are going to issue bonds to the extent of more than $1,000,000 under a debenture plan, the debentures shall contain the provisions that are set out as necessary in the bill now pending." Of the 34 pages, 26 could be lifted bodily and put into the indenture without any change, if those who are instrumental in its formation desire to do so.

I will say also that we must base this legislation upon the authority of Congress over the mails and over interstate commerce. All our legislation regulating the issue of securities is based upon the use of the instrumentalities of interstate commerce and the mails. That is our fundamental authority for dealing with the subject.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that the foreign government bonds spoken of are nearly all issued without any indenture at all, so that the bill never would affect in any way the issue of foreign government bonds?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true. I stated practically the same thing. The large majority of them are issued without any indenture at all, so there would be no object in attempting to deal with that subject even if we had the power.

Mr. President, I am now attempting to make only a general statement with respect to the objectives of the bill. In studying the history of the debenture in this country it is amazing to realize how utterly helpless and hopeless those who invest their money in such bonds have been and now are with respect not only to knowing anything about the situation but with respect to having anything to do with it. The debenture and all its terms have been prepared and agreed upon, and the trustee has been appointed before the bonds are distributed to the public. If I, in my home in Kentucky, or if the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] out in Little Rock, or if the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] out in Butte, Mont., desires to purchase $10,000 or $20,000 worth of the bonds which are being distributed by an underwriter, he has no voice in the selection of the trustee. He has no voice in the writing of the terms of the loan. Of course, it may be said that he can always refuse to invest his money in the bonds. That is undoubtedly true; but if everybody refused to invest his money in bonds because he had not had anything to do with the appointment of a trustee or the formation of a trust indenture, there would be much more complaint than there now is in this country to the effect that securities cannot be sold because of a lack of faith in the investors who purchase such securities.

Mr. President, some of the indentures have gone so far as not only to exculpate the trustee from responsibility for ordinary negligence but even to the extent of exculpating him from responsibility for willful misconduct in the management of the trust. The trouble has been that trustees have looked upon the relationship as a sort of glorified clerkship, in which they assume no obligation to keep in touch with the condition of affairs, or to notify the bondholders of the condition of affairs, or to advise them of approaching default in the payment of interest or principal. Even after default, in many cases they have been grossly negligent in notifying the bondholders.

Of course, a bondholder knows when he fails to receive an installment of interest on his money, and he may set in motion inquiries leading to the ascertainment of such information as he can obtain with respect to the cause and probable duration of the default. But the difficulty which surrounds bondholders scattered widely all over the United States, under the terms of the debentures, many of which are apparently designed to protect the trustee more than to protect the bondholders, has been that bondholders are not even furnished with a list of other bondholders so that they might get in communication with them in an effort to form committees or take other effective steps designed to protect their interests. In many cases the trustee himself—or itself, if it is an institution—does not possess a list of the bondholders; and the only reason a list of bondholders is now available at all in the hands of the issuer of the obligation is because of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, which require disclosure of payments of interest to bondholders, for purposes of income tax.

So, Mr. President, the bill undertakes to write into the law the minimum provisions thought necessary to protect the investors of the United States in the bonds of corporate institutions. In my judgment the bill will strengthen the confidence and faith of investors in the purchase of such securities. It will make them understand that a law has been passed, and that there is an agency of our Government which is designed to see to it that in order to issue bonds in the first place a copy of the debenture must be filed with the Commission in Washington. The debenture must comply with the minimum terms of the law which we are now trying to enact; and when the debenture has complied with the minimum requirements of the law which we are now considering, every investor, although he may not know the trustee, although he may never see the indenture, although he may not be familiar with the legal terminology of the indenture, may know that the Government of the United States, through its agency, has provided in advance for as large a modicum of protection to him as it is possible to frame at this time in the form of a statute. The bill makes it impossible for a trustee to agree to a trust under an indenture which relieves him from the responsibility for ordinary negligence.

This bill requires that such an indenture shall contain provisions making it mandatory that the trustee shall exercise the ordinary prudence that any other kind of fiduciary would exercise under similar circumstances in regard to the management of the trust. It requires that he give, upon request, to every bondholder in America a list of other bondholders, so that in case of any difficulty, in case of default, or in case the assets of the corporation are being or have been dissipated the bondholders may communicate one with another in the formation of protective committees looking toward the taking of legal steps which may be available to them in the protection of their interests.

The bill requires that the trustee shall do what he has not been in the habit of doing heretofore, that is, keep somewhat in touch with the concern which has issued the bonds, in order that he himself may be advised as to whether the terms of the indenture are being complied with or whether before default the bondholders are entitled to information that would enable them to take steps to protect themselves under the indenture.

We have all read of the recent case of McKesson & Robbins. The newspapers were full of it. It was a scandal in the financial circles of the United States. That case shows how important it is that the obligor be required to furnish to the trustee adequate evidence of its performance of its obligations under the indenture. The McKesson & Robbins Co. sold an issue of bonds in 1930, $16,000,000 of which are now outstanding. In the indenture the company agreed to maintain a certain current asset position and to furnish financial statements every year; but although three-quarters of the company's assets were represented by inventory and accounts receivable, the indenture did not require the accountants to make a simple "test check" of inventory and receivables.

Only last December a $20,000,000 shortage was discovered in those items, which would have been discovered years before if such a "test check" had been made. While the resulting loss will fall first on the stockholders, it is not yet certain whether the bondholders will not also sustain a loss.

Section 315 (d) of this bill——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I will yield in a moment. Section 315 (d) would have authorized the highly reasonable requirement of a "test check" of inventory and receivables in such a situation.

I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. As I understand the case referred to by the Senator, there was the usual requirement of investigation by a certified public accountant. There is nothing in this bill that would require anything additional to what was required and was done by the accountants, who simply did not do the job they probably should have done. Is not that the fact?

Mr. BARKLEY. There is a provision in this bill that gives the Commission some supervision over the conduct of certified accountants and the type of experts who are required to do this work.

Mr. TAFT. The certified public accountants in this case were Price, Waterhouse & Co., who have a reputation of being among the best certified accountants in the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no information as to that. The Senator is probably correct as to the firm that did the work. But the passage of a law which would fix a more rigid responsibility upon the trustee and upon the obligor and even upon those who are selected to investigate and check up on the current financial situation of a concern, which is supposed to be a going concern, would undoubtedly result in a more desirable and concurrent body of information, so that if the trustee had occasion to advise the bondholders of conditions he would have certified information upon which to base his advice and his own comment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. Perhaps the question I had in mind was answered in the colloquy between the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Kentucky. If so, I trust the Senator will pardon me for asking the question again. If the McKesson & Robbins situation had developed while such a bill which the Senator is now advocating had been in existence, would there have been a liability upon the part of the trustee for the loss suffered by the bondholders?

Mr. BARKLEY. There would not have been an automatic liability; or if the Commission had been negligent in the exercise of its discretion in determining upon the type of investigation and check-up and certified accountants, and certification was made, of course, the trustee would not be liable because of any failure to perform its duty by the Commission, which is given discretion in the bill to deal with and pass upon and supervise the type of expert investigation which shall be made in connection with these matters.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator realizes what was in my mind, namely, a bank or a trust company acting as trustee. Such institutions have deposits, and they would have two obligations—one to their depositors and one to the holders of bonds. If there were default or some misconduct which affected the holders of the bonds, it might readily, if there were liability, react to the very serious damage of the depositors, might it not?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is possible.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask one further question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. In the State of Colorado we have by statute an official who is known as the public trustee. Indentures or deeds of trust may run to the public trustee whose duties are, in a measure, prescribed by statute. Would the provisions of the bill which is now before the Senate apply to a trust where the trustee is such a public official?

Mr. BARKLEY. It probably would where the issue is under a million dollars.

Mr. ADAMS. Does not the Senator mean where it is over a million dollars?

Mr. BARKLEY. No. The Senator is speaking now about a State officer created by the State of Colorado to deal with the local issue of securities in the State. Of course the authority of the trustee set up by the laws of the Senator's State, with which I do not happen to be familiar, I will say, might conceivably be extended to the point where he could exercise jurisdiction over an issue of bonds which might not be sold wholly within the State of Colorado but might be transmitted in the mails or through instruments of interstate commerce to purchasers of the bonds outside the State.

Mr. ADAMS. But the bill which is before us governs all trustees either corporate or private.

Mr. BARKLEY. It governs the trustees that are made trustees under indentures that have to be filed with the Commission under the form set out in the law.

Mr. ADAMS. I notice in the hearings a statement by one witness that if the bill were passed it might lead to an increase of what he designated as "private placements" as distinguished from regular trustees. I wondered what that signified.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think what that witness had in mind was the possible matter of cost of coming to Washington and filing applications. But the bill attempts to simplify and consolidate not only the filing of applications for qualification of the indentures but with the filing of the application a disclosure as to the bond issue itself; so that it can be a simultaneous transaction and, therefore, reduce to a minimum any additional cost that might be involved in the selling of the bonds under this indenture scheme.

Mr. ADAMS. But if a private individual were selected as a trustee as distinguished from a corporate trustee, it would make no difference in the application of the proposed law?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, this bill requires that at least one trustee of bonds and indentures issued under it shall be a corporate institution. There are some States that require personal trustees, and in those States the bill provides for an additional trustee, but there must be at least one corporate trusteeship under the bill as it is now being considered.

Mr. President, I might briefly refer to the risk of liability for the trustee. The bill will hold the trustee to the standard of ordinary prudence, but only in the period after default. Section 315 (c) is the one that provides for that. These sections are scattered throughout the bill, and I am not going to attempt to read them. Under section 315 (d) (1), before default the trustee is liable only for the performance of the specific duties set out in the indenture. Of course, there is a difference in the obligation that would devolve upon the trustee before default and after default, although there is a provision for a 4-month period prior to default in which certain obligations are incurred and certain funds are to be accounted for and set aside out of certain proceeds of the business itself and other things set out in the proposed statute. There is, however, no reason why any competent trust institution should fear to act under one of these indentures, particularly in view of the safeguards provided by section 315 (d) and 315 (e). This is the view of the American Bankers' Association's special committee and of the F. D. I. C., which insures practically all these banks.

Under section 315 (d) the trustee is protected for action taken in reliance on proper certificates or opinions, or at the direction of the holders of not less than a majority in the principal amount of the outstanding bonds, and it is also protected for errors in judgment made in good faith after reasonable investigation.

Section 315 (e) protects the trustee against the risks of groundless lawsuits by irresponsible parties. Under this section such parties may be required to file an undertaking to pay the reasonable costs of the suit, including reasonable attorneys' fees.

Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to say that in the formulation of this legislation, not only by the Securities and Exchange Commission but by the Committee on Banking and Currency and by all those who have had anything to do with it, an effort has been made to accommodate the legislation to the necessities that required its introduction. In the formulation of the bill the Commission and the committee have had the advice and the cooperation of the American Bankers' Association through its trust committee, and although that committee did not unanimously agree that the bill was workable, and livable, and refrain from registering objection to it, a majority of the members of the trust committee of the American Bankers' Association have expressed their belief that the bill is workable and livable, and have stated that they have no opposition to it. In the hearings and in all the consultations we have had the invaluable advice and cooperation of those in the American Bankers' Association who have been charged by it with the duty of considering not only legislation of this type but the practices of bankers in dealing with trusteeships. While the American Bankers' Association did not initially sponsor the legislation, while they did not inaugurate the proceedings which have resulted in it, they are not opposed to it, and it is their official opinion, if I may say so, that the bill is workable and reasonable, and that they will not and do not oppose its enactment.

Mr. WAGNER. And livable.

Mr. BARKLEY. And livable. They use the word "livable." Any law that is livable in these days of complexity has something to be said in its favor.

We also have had the cooperation of the American Association of Savings Banks, representing the investor; and we have also consulted with the Investment Bankers' Association, although up to date the Investment Bankers' Association have not brought themselves to a position where they either agree to the bill or withdraw opposition to it. But, Mr. President, I can very well understand why there would be opposition to legislation of this sort among those whom it affects. There was opposition among the railroads to the passage of the act to regulate commerce in 1887. There was opposition among the great packing institutions to the passage of the stockyards law and the Meat Inspection Act more than a quarter of a century ago. There was opposition among many of the bankers of our country to the creation of the Federal Reserve System. It was a natural opposition, because many of those who deal in these matters have a conservative turn of mind based upon their conservative experience. But I dare say that among those who opposed the act to regulate commerce, those who opposed the Food and Drug Act, those who opposed the Meat Inspection Act, those who opposed the Stockyards Act, those who opposed the Federal Reserve Act, there would not be found today one who would be willing to take the responsibility of advocating the repeal or abrogation of these regulatory statutes.

It may be a source of regret that we have to indulge in legislation of this sort. It would be a happy situation if our economic and financial and moral conditions were such that all men recognized the legal and moral rights of every other man so that in real truth Jefferson's aphorism that "that government is best which governs least"—a sentence taken out of 12 volumes of letters and writings of the author of the Declaration of Independence—might be fulfilled.

But in the complexity with which we are surrounded, in the acute interchange among all our people of their economic and social and moral and financial relationships, we cannot hope to return to or attain such a degree of perfection among the people of the world that we can say it is not the duty of Government now and then to inject itself into the regulation of these matters which involve the welfare and the happiness and the prosperity of the people.

All we have tried to do in the pending bill is to protect the investor; and, after all, he is entitled to more consideration than he has been receiving. If I own a corporation and I want to borrow money and I issue bonds and distribute them among innocent persons scattered all over the Nation, certainly our Government owes a prime obligation to the innocent investors to surround them with all the protection that is wise and proper and possible within our jurisdictional limitations.

There is in the pending bill nothing that is unfair to any corporation which issues bonds. There is in it nothing that is unfair to any trustee who accepts responsibility under trust indentures. Going from one end of the bill to the other, there is the thread of granting adequate protection also to the third party to the transaction, who, after all, furnishes the money which enables the corporation to issue its bonds and continue in business; and that is the investor, the man or the woman who purchases bonds with money that he or she has earned in the sweat of the brow and by the exercise of wisdom in the accumulation and saving of earnings.

I am sorry to have consumed so much time in this general statement; but I felt that the importance of the subject warranted it. I shall now be satisfied to yield the floor; and if there are any other questions on the part of any Senator with respect to the provisions of the bill which I can answer, I shall be glad to do so.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Mr. LEE obtained the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, at this time, while we are considering legislation to provide for the regulation and sale of certain securities, I believe it is appropriate that we consider the termination of the issuance of tax-exempt bonds.

In my campaign I announced my opposition to tax-exempt bonds. My position was printed in my campaign literature, and I denounced the special privilege of tax exemption from every platform in the State.

In my opinion, the mere fact that a person derives his income by clipping coupons from Government bonds is no reason for exempting that person from paying income taxes. The people themselves said so when they passed the sixteenth amendment, which authorized Congress "to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever source derived."

But judicial interpretation has thwarted the will of the people by reading into that amendment tax immunity.

However, today we not only have a President who believes that Congress has authority "to lay and collect taxes on incomes from whatever source derived" but it is beginning to look as if we have a Supreme Court that might likewise agree with the simple language of the amendment.

On April 25, 1938, President Roosevelt sent a message to Congress asking for legislation that would put an end to tax exemption. When I heard that message read to the Senate I could scarcely refrain from shouting my approval. Other Presidents had spoken against tax exemption, but this President was going to do something about it. I now quote in part from that message:

> Whatever advantages this reciprocal immunity may have had in the early days of this Nation have long ago disappeared. Today it has created a vast reservoir of tax-exempt securities in the hands of the very persons who equitably should not be relieved of taxes on their incomes. * * *
> Both the States and the Nation are deprived of revenues which could be raised from those best able to supply them.

Later in the message the President said:

> Tax exemptions through the ownership of Government securities of many kinds—Federal, State, and local—have operated against the fair or effective collection of progressive surtaxes. Indeed, I think it is fair to say that these exemptions have violated the spirit of the tax law itself by actually giving a greater advantage to those with large incomes than to those with small incomes.

Then later the President said:

> I therefore recommend to the Congress that effective action be promptly taken to terminate these tax exemptions for the future. The legislation should confer the same powers on the States with respect to the taxation of Federal bonds hereafter issued as is granted to the Federal Government with respect to State and municipal bonds hereafter issued.

Mr. President, as stated at the outset, this was one of the planks in my platform, and, naturally, I am for it. Furthermore, I am convinced that the great majority of the people of Oklahoma are for it. But I regret to say that Mr. Phillips, the Governor of my State, favors tax-exempt bonds and has used his office as Governor to oppose any effort on the part of the Federal Government to tax the income derived from State and local bonds.

Not only did Governor Phillips send protests to the Oklahoma delegation by letter and telegram, but he also sent the attorney general of Oklahoma to Washington to appear before the special committee of the Senate in official protest against President Roosevelt's efforts to put an end to the special privilege of tax exemption. His statement appears on page 446 of the hearings before the Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries.

On March 31, 1939, I received a telegram of protest from Governor Phillips, and on the same day an article appeared in the Oklahoma City Times under the headline, "New Deal Tax Plan Hit by State Officials," in which the Governor was reported as vigorously opposing the efforts of the Federal Government to end tax exemption.

Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the telegram and the news item referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the telegram and item were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., March 31, 1939.

Senator JOSH LEE,
Senate Office Building:

We hear in Oklahoma there is another threat to revive in the Senate the Federal taxation of State securities. My letter to you of January 16 was in hope that you would join in opposition to this move. I concur wholeheartedly in the letter sent by air mail today by Attorney General Williamson. Do not think he has made his letter strong enough. It affects every county in the State, every school district, and every city and town. It is vital now when we are attempting to fund the deficit caused by extravagant overspending and to generally lower the cost of government to the people. We hope you will join us to resist this in order to lower the cost of government.

LEON C. PHILLIPS,
Governor of Oklahoma.

[From the Oklahoma City Times of March 31, 1939]

NEW DEAL TAX PLAN HIT BY STATE OFFICIALS—PHILLIPS, WILLIAMSON JOIN IN CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT LEVY

Governor Phillips and Mac Q. Williamson, attorney general, Friday sent protests to Oklahoma's United States Senators against predicted Federal taxation of State and local government incomes, and then joined in the hottest attack on New Deal policies to issue from the statehouse since President Roosevelt took office.

Phillips said a Federal levy on the revenues of cities, towns, school districts and States, which is now being contemplated in the United States Senate, would "wreck every county government in Oklahoma."

"If Oklahoma City has to pay a tax on its water and police revenues, that overthrows my idea of government," he continued.

POLITICAL REVOLUTION FORECAST

"Local self government will be gone, and regimentation started. It can lead to a political revolution—not with guns maybe—but a break-down of our theory of government."

Williamson, who sat in on the Governor's press conference, chimed in with the observation that such a Federal tax would lead "to the overthrow of any party sanctioning it."

The Governor and the attorney general both mentioned President Roosevelt directly, recalling his message to Congress "attacking tax-exempt bond buyers and holders."

CHANGED BOND PRICES SEEN

They pointed out that even the anticipation of a Federal tax on the income from State, city, and school-district bonds would render the bond market uneasy and make it difficult for the State to sell its new $18,000,000 deficit funding bond issue.

"It will change the price of those bonds if such legislation is talked of, let alone passed," the Governor said.

Williamson addressed letters to JOSH LEE and ELMER THOMAS, the two Senators, declaring it is "axiomatic" that the buyers of State and local government bonds will pass on the Federal tax to the people—by demanding a higher rate of interest on the bonds.

Phillips backed him up with telegrams to the Senators in which he said the attorney general had not made it strong enough.

NEW DEAL RAPPED

"It is vital now when we are attempting to fund the deficit caused by extravagant overspending, and generally to lower the cost of government to the people," the Governor said, "We hope you will join us to resist this in order to lower the cost of government."

Williamson, ordinarily cautious in his public statements, abandoned his mild manner in commenting on the United States Supreme Court's decision last Monday that Federal and State Governments can levy a tax on the incomes of each other's employees.

"The Supreme Court is adopting the theories of the New Deal bright young swivel-chair boys," he said. Asked if that was "on the record," he and the Governor chorused, "Yes, sir."

Both said that as far as the Supreme Court went in its decision, they weren't concerned with the levying of taxes on State employees.

"It is the trend that is significant," Williamson said.

"That is just sugar-coating to cover up the bitter bill," the Governor said. "If they can tax State employees 5 percent, they can tax them 50 percent. They can tax the Blackwell power plant, the Oklahoma City water-plant revenues."

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I wish to repeat that I am not speaking for myself alone when I announce my own hearty approval of President Roosevelt's effort to end tax exemption, for I am confident that the people of my State are also with him in that effort.

Those who favor tax exemption would make it appear that if a person who derives his income from interest on State bonds is required to pay an income tax on that income just as any other person must pay, such a levy would be a tax upon the State itself. That is, of course, the old stock argument of those who benefit by such exemptions.

On that point, the quarrel is with the Supreme Court. I quote from its recent decision dealing with taxation of Government salaries, in which Justice Stone, speaking for the majority, said:

> The theory, which once won a qualified approval, that a tax on income is legally or economically a tax on its source, is no longer tenable.

Although that case decided the question of income tax with respect to salaries, yet the fundamental principle of taxation seems to apply with equal force to the question of taxing income derived from Government bonds.

I quote more fully from the opinion of Justice Stone on the point that taxation of income is not taxation on its source:

> The present tax is a nondiscriminatory tax on income applied to salaries at a specified rate. It is not in form or substance a tax upon the Home Owners' Loan Corporation or its property or income, nor is it paid by the Corporation or the Government from their funds. It is laid upon income which becomes the property of the taxpayer when received as compensation for his services; and the tax laid upon the privilege of receiving it is paid from his private funds and not from the funds of the Government, either directly or indirectly. The theory, which once won a qualified approval, that a tax on income is legally or economically a tax on its source, is no longer tenable.

This would seem to indicate that the Supreme Court is ready to interpret the sixteenth amendment to mean that Congress has power to lay and collect a tax on a person's income, even though it is derived from State and local bonds.

However, I believe that Congress should not wait for judicial interpretation to remove this tax inequity; but, in accordance with the President's request, I believe we should pass legislation with this purpose in view.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. MILLER. Merely for the purpose of clarification, I should like to say that the Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries has, as the Senator knows, conducted rather extensive hearings on the economic questions as well as the legal questions which are involved. That committee has not as yet made a full report to the Senate. It will do so next week. The committee, however, reported to the Senate as to the legality, the right of the Congress to enact legislation taxing salaries. That report was made in advance of the Supreme Court decision. The committee has not determined whether or not, in its opinion, the Congress has a right to tax the income from bonds issued by States and municipalities, and, likewise, to give to States the reciprocal right to tax income from Government securities.

We have not reached a determination of the legal right of the Congress in that respect. Some Senators, members of the committee, are of the opinion that a constitutional amendment will be required in order to effectuate such a plan. Other Senators of probably equal ability are not of that opinion. I am advised that the committee will report to the Senate next week, and then it is the purpose of the committee to give to the Senate the benefit of its hearings and studies.

I wish to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that the Congress will have before it all the information which I believe is available on the question, both on the economic side of the question and its legal side. I agree with what the Senator has said. I am one of those who agree that we should not continue to provide storm cellars for the protection of any class of citizens; that all ought to bear their just proportion of the expenses of government.

Mr. LEE. I thank the Senator for that information and for his contribution to my statement. I wish to say in line with what the Senator has just stated that unless a bill originates in the House which has for its purpose removing the tax exemption on income derived from bonds, I shall join with other Members of this body in attaching such an amendment to the next revenue bill that comes over from the House.

Mr. President, in the United States today $50,000,000,000 are invested in tax-exempt bonds, some partially and some wholly exempt. Those who own these bonds are excused, according to the exemptions, from paying taxes on the income derived from them. Other people must bear the burden which the owners of these tax-exempt securities escape. Therefore, this extra burden of taxation is borne by those who are too poor to purchase bonds.

Tax exemption is a special privilege enjoyed only by the rich. The poor are not able to buy bonds and the middle class are not able to buy enough for the exemption privilege to benefit them. Therefore, only those with large incomes are able to salt away a strongbox full of these tax-exempt securities.

Furthermore, the larger the income the greater the benefit from tax exemption, because those whose incomes are in the upper brackets must otherwise pay heavy surtaxes. Hence, the exemption privilege means more to them than it does to those whose incomes are in the lower brackets where the taxes are not so high.

For example, a man with an income of $500,000 would realize more from a tax-exempt bond bearing 3 percent interest than he would from a taxable bond bearing 10 percent interest. In other words, the exemption privilege is worth more to him than 7 percent in interest; whereas, to a man with an income of $5,000, the exemption privilege is worth only two-tenths of 1 percent in interest.

Therefore, I repeat that tax exemption is a special privilege enjoyed by a special class.

If a person has an income from renting a building, practicing law, teaching school, running a store, or working in a shop, or any other occupation, he must pay income taxes both to the State and Federal Governments, but if he has an income derived from the interest on tax-exempt Government bonds, he is excused from paying taxes on that income, yet there are those who favor the continuation of this tax-exemption privilege.

If a married storekeeper living in Oklahoma has an income of $5,000, he must pay income taxes amounting to $146.22, but if his neighbor has an income of $5,000 from the interest on tax-exempt bonds, he is excused from paying any income taxes whatever on that income.

Then, again, if a married man living in Oklahoma, after paying property taxes and paving taxes, has an income of $10,000 derived from renting his own property, he must pay income taxes amounting to $737.85; but if his neighbor has an income of $10,000 derived from the interest on tax-exempt bonds, he is excused from paying any income taxes whatever on that income.

Then, again, if a married man living in Oklahoma has an income of $50,000 derived from the oil business, he would be required to pay income taxes amounting to $11,132.41; whereas if his neighbor has an income of $50,000 derived from tax-exempt Government bonds, he would be excused from paying any income taxes whatever on that income.

Then, again, if a poor farmer does not make enough to pay his property taxes, his farm is sold from under him; but if a rich man has an income of $1,000,000 derived from tax-exempt bonds, he is not required to pay one thin dime of taxes on that income.

Such favoritism is not only unfair and unjust, but it is economically unsound.

The Government is losing millions in revenue because of these tax exemptions. By taxing incomes which are now exempt, the Government will gain much more in revenues than it will lose on account of increased costs, but, of course, those who favor tax exemption argue that if you do not exempt the bonds from taxation, you must pay higher interest rates in order to sell them and that this increased cost offsets the gain in revenue.

But that is not true because only those with large incomes are able to purchase bonds, and these large incomes are subject to heavy surtaxes which would return much more in revenues than the additional interest would cost. Mr. Hanes, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, reports that it would not be necessary to increase the interest rate more than one-half of 1 percent at the most and perhaps as low as one-fourth of 1 percent.

Therefore, I repeat, the Government loses much more in revenue than it gains in lower interest rates.

Of course, the savings in revenue would differ according to the tax laws of the different States, and also according to the amount of the income of the purchaser, but let us take a specific example.

Suppose a school district in Oklahoma issues $1,000,000 worth of bonds bearing 3 percent interest, and suppose the entire issue is purchased by a man having an income of $500,000. If the bonds are tax exempt, the Government loses each year in income taxes $21,197.77; whereas, if the bonds were taxable, the increased cost in interest charges would average only $3,750 a year, according to the estimates of the Treasury Department. The difference between $21,197.77, which would be the loss in revenue if the bonds were tax exempt, and $3,750, which would be the increased cost if the bonds were not tax-exempt, is $17,447.77.

In other words, the net loss in revenue on that $1,000,000 issue of tax-exempt bonds is $17,447.77 each year. Then suppose these bonds were issued for 20 years. The total amount of net loss in revenue on that $1,000,000 issue of tax-exempt bonds would be $348,955.40.

For that amount many school bells could be kept ringing, and remember that figure represents the savings on only $1,000,000 worth of tax-exempt bonds; whereas, altogether there are $50,000,000,000 worth of tax-exempt bonds in the United States today.

We could do much for the school boys and girls with the revenue the Government is now losing on account of tax exemptions. In fact, President Roosevelt's entire humanitarian program is lagging for the want of revenue with which to carry it forward.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I understood the Senator to say that we were losing revenues which would be of help to the schools, and that schoolboys and schoolgirls are kept out of schools on account of that loss of revenue. Is the Senator speaking of the Government tax or the school tax or the State tax?

Mr. LEE. I am speaking of both. There are 25 States that do not tax their own local or State bonds, and they would benefit by the taxation and increase their own revenue. And then the Federal tax would apply to State and local bonds as well as Federal bonds.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it the Senator's idea that any of those States would tax their own school bonds?

Mr. LEE. Some States—in fact, nine States—do so today.

Mr. HUGHES. Tax school bonds?

Mr. LEE. Yes; tax their school and local bonds.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. In connection with the statement made by the Senator a while ago with reference to the attitude of the Governor of Oklahoma and others, the Governor of Arkansas has also taken the same attitude with reference to the taxation of governmental securities. I wonder if the Senator would mind putting in the RECORD as a part of his remarks the table appearing on page 625 of the hearings conducted by the Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries, which shows conclusively to my mind, and I think to the mind of any disinterested person, that the fears expressed by the Governors of the various States and by mayors of various cities of our country against the exercise of the reciprocal taxation right are not well founded. The table, apparently authentic, to my mind contains absolute proof that such fears are not well founded.

Mr. LEE. I shall be glad to include the table referred to as a part of my remarks, and I ask leave to have it printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. LEE. In conclusion, Mr. President, I spoke of the revenue which the Government is losing. That revenue applies to States as well as to the Federal Government, because 25 States exempt State and local bonds from taxation. As I have just pointed out, the loss in revenue is much greater than the additional cost represented by an increased interest charge. As pointed out, estimated, and reported by the Treasury Department, the increase in cost of financing would amount, at the most, to one-half of 1 percent interest; and it is estimated that perhaps it would not be necessary to increase the cost more than one-quarter of 1 percent. Those in the surtax income brackets are particularly interested, because surtaxes are applied to larger incomes, and only those with larger incomes are able to buy bonds to any great extent. Their incomes are pushed up into the surtax brackets, but, because of the tax-exemption feature, the State, and the Federal Government lose the income derived from such securities. If we had the income which the Government is now losing, we could carry forward much of the program which is now falling behind. So far the Federal Government has been unable to pay an adequate old-age annuity to the old people for want of revenue. We have not been able to pay the farmers parity payments for want of revenue; and yet those best able to pay taxes are not paying them because of tax exemptions. I am opposed to tax exemptions, because they constitute a special privilege to a special class; and a special privilege is undemocratic, un-American, and unfair. It is unfair to other Americans to grant to certain classes special privileges which others cannot enjoy because of low income. Therefore, I believe we should proceed at once to put an end to tax exemption, in order that we may increase the Government's revenues and at the same time distribute the burdens of taxation according to the ability to pay. Think of the inconsistency of turning unemployed people off the relief rolls with $50,000,000,000 of tax-exempt bonds in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly in opposition to Senate bill 2065, introduced by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and providing for the regulation of trust indentures. The subject is a complicated one. There are 62 pages of language in the bill, which it is practically impossible to understand without almost a month's study; but in substance the bill regulates certain features of trust indentures and gives the Securities and Exchange Commission certain discretion to regulate other features of trust indentures. Trust indentures, of course, are the documents, the mortgages, in effect, which are made, usually by corporations, to secure the bonds which they issue. Bonds and notes may be issued without indentures, and such instruments would not be affected in any way by the bill.

The measure under consideration proposes that certain features of the indentures shall be strictly in accordance with the proposed act, and in four or five other respects it gives discretion to the S. E. C. to establish what shall be included. The bill makes a substantial extension in principle of any legislation now in existence regulating the sale of securities.

The existing S. E. C. Act is based on the theory of full disclosure. It provides that all facts relating to any security issue shall be filed with the Commission and shall be made perfectly apparent to anyone who wants to look at them. The trust indentures themselves must be filed with the Commission so that anybody before he buys securities may ascertain what is in the indentures and may then determine whether he wants to buy the securities. But this measure goes further. It provides what shall be in such trust indentures.

In many respects the provisions of the trust indentures guide and affect the whole provisions of the bonds themselves. In principle I can see no difference between regulating trust indentures and giving the S. E. C. power to regulate the rate of interest that may be placed in bonds or the length of the term or the call price or any other feature of the deal, for many of the indenture provisions are just as much features of the deal as is the rate of interest. In fact, it may be said that under the bill the S. E. C. can say to a corporation, "You cannot sell a 4-percent bond because we think, as a matter of fact, anybody who is willing to buy your bonds ought to get 5 percent." In other words, this is an extension beyond anything Congress has done along this line; it is a further extension of Government regulation of the sale of securities. I do not think this is a time when we ought to take that additional step; indeed, I doubt very much whether we ever ought to take it. I was strongly in favor of the original S. E. C. act and I believe that full disclosure is a principle to which we should adhere. I do not believe we ought to go beyond that point.

There is a theory that the investor cannot read a trust indenture. The Senator from Kentucky says that frequently it is hidden away in 200 pages. That is entirely true, and no investor is ever going to read a trust indenture, and no investor is ever going to read a registration statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. Here [exhibiting] is a typical registration statement filed with relation to securities issued by the Gruen Watch Co., which I think probably contains approximately 150 pages.

The truth is that we cannot hope to secure such information for the buyer of every security that he will know exactly what he is purchasing. Any man who buys securities is bound to rely on the advice of someone else. There are experts who give such advice. They can examine the trust indentures and examine the registration statements, and there is nothing we can do that is ever going to protect an investor who gets a bad adviser. If he gets a bad adviser, he is likely to get a bad security.

The theory that we can protect a man against his own stupidity, that we can protect him against his unwillingness to look into the facts of the case, is, I think, untenable. It is beyond, certainly, the power of the Senate of the United States or the other House of Congress or anyone else to provide such protection. All we can do is to see that there is no fraud; that there is no concealment of facts; that there is no deliberate misrepresentation. We can make certain that the facts shall remain available; that those who desire the facts and want to act on them shall have the facts so that they may digest them or may get someone else to go through and digest them and give them advice.

I believe, therefore, Mr. President, that we should not take this additional step of undertaking to regulate private business transactions and say what shall be and what shall not be in a trust indenture, which is a contract between the bondholders and the trustee and the company that issues the bonds.

What does this bill mean in practical results? There is only one objection to the S. E. C., and that is that it has increased the expense and difficulty of issuing securities. In order to prevent fraud, I believe that is justified; but certainly there is no question that the expense involved in hiring lawyers to go through the Securities and Exchange Act, to prepare a registration statement of the kind I have indicated, to employ accountants, experts, and engineers to prepare the necessary certificate—involves a substantial additional outlay.

We had testimony before the committee that if any company wanted to issue less than a million dollars of securities it would hardly be worth the trouble and hardly worth the expense, and they had better raise the money in some other way. In the case of the issuance of securities representing over a million dollars, the expense becomes of rather minor importance compared to the amount involved; but there is that disadvantage even with the S. E. C. When it comes to an indenture, more expense is involved, for it is necessary to prepare an indenture, which is quite a task in itself; it is necessary to agree with the attorney of the trustee; to agree with the attorney of the underwriter; and then to come to Washington and sit down with an attorney from the S. E. C., go over with him a 200-page document, and spend probably a week in Washington talking to some young attorney of the S. E. C. I think the S. E. C. will probably have to add 10 or a dozen attorneys to its staff just to handle this kind of work. That means more delay, more expense, and more discretion in the Securities and Exchange Commission. I do not believe the importance of the subject justifies such an additional burden on the ordinary sale of securities, and the attempt to develop more business.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Is it also true that the bill will tend to centralize in New York City the business of trust indentures?

Mr. TAFT. I think it is. I shall come to that subject a little later, if the Senator is willing to wait for a moment.

Of course, I am not particularly concerned with the trustees. A trustee is able to look after himself. It is true that he has inserted in a number of trust indentures provisions protecting himself against liability and making the trustee in a way a kind of clerical representative of the bondholders. I am concerned, however, with the persons who are trying to sell securities in the United States. After all, these are all three-cornered deals. Every time a trust indenture is executed we have the company that wants to borrow the money, we have an underwriter or an investment banker, and then, as a third party, we have a trustee. This bill is directed altogether at the provisions of the trust indenture that govern the trustee. I think a good many of the clauses of trust indentures could well be improved; but I do not believe the importance of the subject justifies the additional burden on the man who wants to borrow money, the additional burden on the free sale of securities at a time when we should be encouraging the investment of money in private enterprise. The only way in which we shall ever get back to a normal condition of prosperity is to try to get people to put their money into corporate securities in a way which will gradually lead to building up business and gradually bring about more employment.

The Senator from Kentucky did not exactly say, I think, that the pending bill was sponsored by the American Bankers' Association, but he implied that that association almost sponsored it. In the first place, the American Bankers' Association represents the trustees, and I have not very much concern as to what may happen to the trustees; but, as a matter of fact, I should like to read the statement of the representative of the American Bankers' Association when he appeared before our committee in support of this bill. Mr. Page testified as follows:

> As I stated in my testimony on the bill in the previous session of Congress, trust institutions do not welcome Federal regulatory legislation of this type. The American Bankers' Association does not believe that the bill is necessary. It would have preferred to continue its efforts to bring about a satisfactory system of voluntary control, similar to that now in use in connection with personal trusts, and throughout the committee's discussion of the subject I have so indicated to the Securities and Exchange Commission. In substance, the American Bankers' Association does not desire to appear to favor nor to oppose the passage of the bill.

What happened was that a very much more drastic bill on the subject was introduced several years ago, a bill so drastic that the trustees felt that no trustee could ever accept a corporate trust if its provisions went into effect. So they went to the Securities and Exchange Commission and said, "Let us help ameliorate this bill," and they did so, on condition that if their views were reasonably met they would not oppose the passage of the bill. As a matter of fact, every banker who appeared before us, with the exception of Mr. Page, I think, opposed the bill very strenuously, and particularly all the bankers from the smaller cities of the country, because they all felt that the provisions which required complete divorcement of the trustee from any connection with the company in any way would prevent banks in the smaller cities from ever acting as trustee, and therefore the bill would drive these trusts to the big institutions in New York. At this point I answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] by saying "yes"; the opinion of all the bankers who appeared before us was that the passage of this bill would seriously handicap the smaller banks in the smaller cities, and would force this trust business to New York; and, strangely enough, the only bankers who were willing to accept the bill were bankers from some of the large banking institutions of the city of New York.

As a matter of fact, I do not believe anybody is sponsoring or really urging the enactment of this bill today. If so, I do not know who it is. The bill comes, of course, from the Securities and Exchange Commission. It was gotten up 2 or 3 years ago; and I venture to say that today the Commission itself has largely lost interest in the passage of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. KING. In reading the record—I do not recall the page—when I hastily examined it yesterday, I found two references to the Securities and Exchange Commission as urging the passage of the bill. The word "urge" was used by the person who testified, and who, as I recall, spoke for the Securities and Exchange Commission. So the Securities and Exchange Commission, not the people, is urging the enactment of the bill. The Commission wants to increase its power, its authority, and its jurisdiction.

Mr. TAFT. I do not know anybody in the country who is interested in the passage of the bill except the Securities and Exchange Commission. Mr. Douglas was the original sponsor of the bill, but apparently he has lost interest in it. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] the other day referred to an interview of Mr. Douglas by Arthur Krock. The article says:

> In Mr. Douglas' opinion the activities of the S. E. C. have reached their practical peak. He thinks its scope is now as wide and deep as it effectively can be.

If that is not a condemnation of this bill by Mr. Douglas, I do not know what it can be.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. BARKLEY. I happen to know that Mr. Douglas not only has not withdrawn his endorsement of this bill or changed his position with regard to it, but that in the last communication he made before retiring from the position of Chairman of the S. E. C., among three recommendations that he made was one for the passage of this particular legislation.

Mr. TAFT. I read further from the article of Mr. Krock:

> The Chairman went on to say he thought that at some later time an eminent drafting committee—

Should revise the law—

> But the quest for recovery is affected now by any tampering with laws in the category of these two acts, he said, and revisions can well await a more propitious time.

I do not know whether or not Mr. Douglas is still for the bill, but I do know that if he is his position is absolutely inconsistent with the statement he made to Mr. Krock, because he knows this is not a time at which to impose additional restrictions on business.

Other gentlemen have taken the same position. Mr T. Jefferson Coolidge, former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury in this administration, wrote a letter to the committee, in which he said:

> This bill therefore will, in our judgment, accomplish little public good, will increase the difficulty and expense of obtaining funds for expanding business, and in many cases will make it impossible to obtain necessary funds on reasonable terms, to the special disadvantage of small concerns lacking well-established individual credit. We believe the disadvantages will far outweigh any possible advantages.
> Certain sections of the bill will have a tendency to drive local business away from the local centers, where it has its home, and force it into the metropolitan centers, where is will not receive, in our opinion, as understanding treatment.

Furthermore, the opinion of the Federal Reserve Board was asked. I cannot find that the Board itself ever took any action, but the Board did transmit this letter from its Federal Advisory Council:

> The Federal Advisory Council desires to call the attention of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to Senate bill 477 relating to the regulation of trust indentures under which securities are issued.
> The Council feels strongly that the imposition of some of the liabilities as provided in the bill would create contingent liabilities for banks of deposit accepting corporate trusteeships which might be dangerous to themselves and the banking system as a whole.

In other words, they say this bill imposes on corporate trustees such a heavy burden that it might well endanger their deposits, and after all, we have an interest in protecting the depositors and the stockholders of corporate trustees.

Furthermore, the Council believes that the bill would materially increase the cost of and make more difficult long-term public financing, particularly to smaller corporations, and would thus tend to hinder expansion of plants and businesses at a time when such expansion is particularly desirable in the interest of business recovery.

* * * * * * *

The Council requests the Board to submit this expression of its opinion to the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency with the request that it be put in the record of the hearings before its subcommittee considering the bill.

One Commissioner, Mr. Eicher, appeared before our committee in favor of the bill. He took no further tremendous interest in it and so far as I can see the Commission itself has in effect lost interest in pushing further the provisions of this trust indenture bill, and has left its entire charge to some of the subordinate attorneys of the Commission.

I think something can be done along this line. I think, in the first place, the Commission has never tried to write a sample or model trust indenture. If it does, the model will be very largely followed. Writing a trust indenture is a pretty mechanical thing. I think most attorneys would be more than glad to receive the Commission's suggestions.

I call attention to an article in the Yale Law Review of February 1939, by Talcott M. Banks, Jr., in which he suggests such a course:

If the Commission should render its resources of experience and expert personnel available for a study of the modern indenture, with a view to perfecting its form and improving its protective features, such work would receive most interested cooperation and would have profound influence. No one is satisfied with the usual indenture of the present day. Its abbreviation and clarification is earnestly to be desired. Lawyers and businessmen alike would welcome the appearance of simple, standard clauses adapted to achieve the various indenture purposes. If the Commission were to recommend such provisions, framed after careful study and consultation, the authority of its recommendation would assure that the suggestions would be considered by every draftsman, and, so far as they proved valuable, widely adopted. Here is a way in which the unique resources of a Federal agency could be of great assistance, without any of the risks of concentrated authority or unwise regulation.

Mr. President, I do not desire to go through the bill, but on page 5 I find this language:

Abuses of the character above enumerated have been so widespread that, unless regulated, the public offering of notes, bonds * * * by the use of means and instruments of transportation * * * is injurious to the capital markets * * * and to the general public.

There have been some abuses. Frankly, it seemed to me there was a complete absence of proof that any of the losses which occurred in 1929 had really resulted from any of the properly criticised provisions of the trust indentures. I would say that 99 percent of the losses resulted because the company failed, because the company was not good, because it could not pay its debts, and not because of anything done by the corporate trustee. I have seen a good many corporate indentures, and, personally, I never regarded the position of trustee as particularly important. Until a default occurs there is very little the trustee can do. When default occurs, the matter is almost inevitably thrown into court, and the whole thing is left up to the court. There is a good deal more abuse in the formation of the bondholders' protective committees, of which I think there might well be a study, and legislation to deal with them, than in any action of the corporate trustees. Furthermore, there is always a recourse against a corporate trustee, if he does something wrong, and the position of a trustee is such that he is not anxious to assume any responsibility if he can help it.

There is one provision in the bill to which I shall call attention only as being typical. I refer to the provision which deals with conflicting interests. There is a provision beginning on page 23 and running for about 10 pages, that a trustee shall resign whenever his interest as trustee in any way conflicts with any other interest. It seems to me that any trustee who assumed to act when he has a substantial conflicting interest certainly subjects himself to a suit for damages, which the courts will properly enforce. But there is set up in these pages a long, artificial attempt to say when an interest is in conflict and when it is not. Think of this. A trustee must resign if he is "the beneficial owner of, or holds as collateral security for, an obligation which is in default as hereinafter defined, (A) 5 percent or more of the voting securities of an obligor"; that is, of the company which issues the bonds. That means that if a trustee bank had a loan out to Mr. X and Mr. X had put up 5 percent of the stock of an obligor company, and that loan should be 30 days overdue—which would be a default—if for some reason after 30 days Mr. X did not pay the loan, the trustee would be defined by law to have a conflicting interest; and if he proceeded and acted, and happened to overlook the matter, he would subject himself to complete liability, although he was not at all affected by the conflict in interest; or he might have completely to resign the trust, and find someone in another city, probably, to take on the trust.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. TAFT. I wish Senators would read the provisions from page 23 to page 30 with relation to the attempt to say when a trustee has a conflicting interest which shall disqualify him, and when he has not. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator realizes that there is nothing new in legislation prohibiting conflicting interests of those acting in a fiduciary capacity. In the National Bank Act of 1933 there is a provision by which affiliations on the part of bankers or officers of banks with underwriters are to a great extent prohibited. The New York Stock Exchange will not accept as trustee for a listed bond issue a bank which is trustee under other indentures of the same obligor.

Mr. TAFT. Whenever there is any substance, I would entirely agree, for, as a matter of fact, a bank which takes on a conflicting interest subjects itself to liability to the bondholders. It cannot afford to do it. But the question is one of substance, and it seems to me the courts would finally decide that question. I do not think we can sit here and say that ownership of 5 percent of the stock of a company which is in default on an obligation would create a conflict of interest, whereas there would not be such a conflict in case of ownership of 4 percent. What sense is there in any such provision of law?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator does not advocate that he, as a trustee under an indenture providing for the issue of bonds of a given obligor, ought to be in a position to have a conflicting interest, whether it were substantial or otherwise—and of course it has to be substantial to be of any importance. He ought not to be in the embarrassing position of having to decide, as a trustee, between, for instance, a prior or a junior set of obligations of the same obligor. He ought not to be in a position where he would have to decide as between different issues of bonds, or different relationships, or different interests, so that there might be any inducement for him to favor one as against the other, or relax in any way in the performance of his duty to one because he is interested in another which would be conflicting.

I am sure the Senator would not justify such a situation. He may not think that any of these matters are substantial, that they contain substance, and that is a matter of opinion; but where there is an important conflict—and the bill undertakes to set out the conditions under which there are conflicts—certainly no trustee ought to be put in the position, embarrassing as it might be, where it might in any way advance or promote his selfish interest or the selfish interest of one security as against another, because he occupies a dual situation with respect to these obligations.

Mr. TAFT. I would say that any trustee who finds himself with a conflicting interest should resign. I would say that it is absolutely impossible for us to provide by legislation when he has a conflicting interest and when he has not a conflicting interest. He acts at his peril. If he refuses to resign when there is a conflicting interest, he takes a chance. But I cannot understand the basis on which 5 percent or 10 percent of the stock of a company makes a difference, and some other figure does not.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator then relies on the moral sensibility of the trustee to resign when he ought to resign?

Mr. TAFT. I rely on the trust law, which provides that a trustee who acts and is influenced by conflicting interests is liable to those against whom his act may operate injuriously.

Mr. BARKLEY. People who suffer loss because of that dual relationship ought not to be compelled to go into court in order to enforce their rights against the trustee. He may have acted in an unprofessional or an unethical way by retaining the trusteeship.

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator wishes to relieve everyone who is wronged from the necessity of going to court, then he might as well advocate the repeal of all the laws and the handing of administration over to some administrative officer. All we can do is to provide a legal remedy for people if they are wronged.

Mr. BARKLEY. We are seeking to provide such a condition that it will not be necessary to resort to the legal remedy when it may be too late to take advantage of the remedy.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall later call the attention of the Senator to some evidence adduced before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce with reference to one of the most important trust companies in the United States, located in the city of New York. They found themselves in a conflicting position, representing on the one hand the bondholders, and representing on the other hand the stockholders, also representing their own institution as a lender to one of the big holding companies of this country. As I shall point out, even some of the most prominent law firms of the city of New York said theirs was an untenable position. They did not intend to put themselves in that position. Some may think they did, but I do not believe they intended to. But they found themselves in that situation, and they still are in that situation, and some litigation has been started in St. Louis as a result. But they never should have been permitted to be in that position in the first instance. They were not only in the position with reference to the lending of money, but they were also in the position with reference to stock which was sold, representing the bondholders.

Mr. TAFT. I do not contend that there may not be abuses in the situation, but I do contend that there are remedies already provided, that we do not need to add to the authority of the Securities and Exchange Commission in order to deal with the evil. As a matter of fact, when we started consideration of the subject, it seemed to me that we should draw a very simple bill prohibiting about three things; that we might reasonably take care of those cases without giving any additional authority to the Securities and Exchange Commission. I must say the bill was modified to some extent; but I think there are still left in it four important matters in which discretion is left to the Securities and Exchange Commission to decide what shall go into an indenture and what shall not. That seems to me to be an addition to power. The advantage of a short bill, merely providing that certain things shall go into an indenture, would be that one would not have to come to Washington and spend a week trying to work the indenture out with the Commission.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. I feel quite sure that the Senator recalls that in the hearings before the subcommittee we were told that a great many trustees had recognized the necessity of complying with the requirements of the bill, and had changed their practice. One witness said it therefore was not necessary to enact the legislation because the evil had been remedied.

Mr. TAFT. No; I do not think that was the testimony. The testimony was that some trust indentures had followed this measure in all respects, I think, except the clause with regard to negligence, to which they objected, as I remember. I think it is quite true that most trustees would follow the suggestions of the Securities and Exchange Commission. My principal objection to the bill is the necessity for the applicants to come to Washington and to submit the whole deal to the Securities and Exchange Commission and to get its approval of the deal.

Mr. HUGHES. As I recall, the Senator from Ohio made an objection in the subcommittee, and he probably has the same objection now, to the expense involved in the applicants coming to Washington. I understand that the bill, in its present form, provides that the applicant shall come to Washington when he makes his application, but it is not necessary to come here a second time when the bond issue is made. What is necessary to be done by the applicant can all be done at one time.

Mr. TAFT. I think the applicant would have to come to Washington first with respect to the trust indenture and get that settled before he finally comes to the matter of the securities themselves. I do not think the applicant is going to be saved an additional trip. I think he is going to have to spend additional time in working out the trust indenture even as the bill is today, which is an improvement over what it was when consideration of it was begun.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It probably would be necessary for the Commission to pass on the qualification of the indenture, which means that it would have to comply with the law before the other step was taken. But both applications can be filed simultaneously, unless the indenture is found not to be in compliance with the law. That is all the Commission has the power to do. The Commission does not dictate the terms of the indenture.

Mr. TAFT. Oh, yes; it does. The Commission passes on three or four features, including the negligence clause.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are three questions as to which the Commission has some discretion. One is with reference to notice concerning defaults. Two of them have relation to notice before and after default, and the other has relationship to the authority of the Commission to pass on the type of expert accountants, certification, and things of that sort. Those are the only three matters of discretion that are still left in the Commission under the bill.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct. But that is discretion, and that is enough discretion so that the only way an indenture can be approved is by the applicant coming to Washington, employing additional lawyers, and sitting down with the attorneys of the Commission to work it out. I may say once more in reference to the conflict of interest that I think the particular provisions of the bill regarding conflict of interest are so tight and so arbitrary that a large number of banks in small cities could not conform to them and act as trustees in any trust indentures for companies within those cities. That is the testimony of the bankers, and that is a necessary result. That is one reason for the statement on the part of Mr. Coolidge and others that the bill is going to force the trusts into the New York banks because the local company evidently will find that the local bank is disqualified to handle the trusteeship of its indentures.

Mr. HUGHES. As I understand—and does not the Senator also so understand—an issue of a million dollars does not come under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. TAFT. That is correct; an issue of a million dollars does not come under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HUGHES. Small communities, the local communities of which the Senator speaks, would not have many issues of more than a million dollars, I take it.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator may be surprised to learn that they do. In the city of Cincinnati, from which I come, the issues are very often in excess of a million dollars. The most strenuous opponents to the measure were gentlemen from Boston and some from Cincinnati and Cleveland, cities of intermediate size, where there are issues of considerably more than a million dollars.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I know that in Boston there are issues of more than a million dollars, and if this business is forced away from Boston it will mean not only a loss of the business but it will have a generally depressing effect.

Mr. HUGHES. As I recall, more than 70 percent of the business was done in Chicago and New York, and it is now. I did not class the Senator's city of Boston as one of the small cities.

Mr. TAFT. Too much of it is done in New York now. The passage of the bill would put it all in New York.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not agree at all to the suggestion that the bill is going to drive business out of any place into some other place. Eighty-five percent of all this business now is done in New York and Chicago, and 95 percent of it is done in New York, Chicago, and seven other cities—Boston, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, and San Francisco.

So, those nine cities already do 95 percent of all the trust indenture bond business of the United States. There is nothing in the bill which will drive any business from Boston to New York or away from Chicago to New York, or away from San Francisco either to Chicago or New York, or away from one city into another city.

Mr. TAFT. That is what Mr. T. Jefferson Coolidge says would happen, and I think he is a banker who knows more about the business than even the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know Mr. Coolidge, and I admire his ability; but I do not accept dogmatically a statement made by any person to the effect that a measure of this character is going to run business out of one city and into another. Certainly 85 percent of it has been run by something or other out of other places into the city of New York and the city of Chicago. Certainly they have facilities for financing bond issues that are more satisfactory to the industries of the country that desire to issue bonds than exist elsewhere.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not reasonable for us to want to keep the little we have?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly it is, and even to get more than you have. I am not at all opposed to that. I am very fond of the city of Boston, but I cannot conceive of any provision of the bill that would take away from Boston a bond issue that some Boston concern desired to float on the market.

It is said that the bill may result in increased cost. I doubt that, because of the provision that simultaneous applications can be filed as to the disclosures and the qualifications of the indenture. Conceivably a second trip to Washington might be required; but I do not know; that is problematical. However, so far as the extra cost is concerned, if there should be any, it would apply just as much to a New York or a Chicago application as it would to one from Boston, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, St. Louis, or San Francisco.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate except to summarize my feeling about the bill. It is not a tremendously important bill. It does not extend the power of the Government indefinitely into great new fields. But it does extend the principle of present Government regulations in a small field. It does abandon, apparently, the theory that what we are interested in is giving the security holders of the United States the opportunity of finding out the facts. We are going beyond that now. We are saying that people shall not make the deals they want to make. We are saying that the Securities and Exchange Commission shall step in and tell people what their deals shall be. We are imposing an additional expense, which means that it is going to be just that much more difficult to finance new enterprises.

Mr. President, it seems to me our present condition is due in part to the psychological fear of putting money into any new enterprise lest it may be lost. That is due to the fact that people are afraid of Government regulation and of additional taxation. I do not know how we are ever going to bring about recovery in this country unless we get people into such a state of mind that they will feel again that they can put money into American enterprises, into new enterprises, large and small, into stocks and bonds and securities of companies, and thus provide new capital, develop new machinery, and put more men to work. I have no question that the reaction throughout the country to the passage of the bill is going to be an additional discouragement.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The thing that will encourage the men with money to put their money in bonds and stocks is the belief that they are going to get it back.

Mr. TAFT. With due respect to the Senator from Kentucky, I think that that is absolutely untrue. I do not think that there is an investor who will invest in one single bond merely because the bill is passed; and who would not have invested in it anyway. I do not think there is any fear of substantial bond issues in this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is all speculative. But the Senator, I am sure, would not contend that the fact that we are trying more adequately to protect the man who puts his money into bonds will result in retarding his desire to put his money into bonds. Certainly, if he feels that all possible protection is thrown around him in the exercise of his right, it is not going to keep him from putting his money in bonds. Whether it will induce him to put his money in bonds is another question, which may be speculative and debatable, but certainly it is not going to discourage him.

Mr. TAFT. It is going to discourage industry from going ahead and trying to expand. It is going to discourage industry from putting out more bond issues, just as the Securities and Exchange Commission Act has. In that case I think it is worth the money. I think we must prevent fraud. But this is going further. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I observe that the Senator is touching upon the very point which had occurred to me, and about which there did not seem to be much discussion. I wish to ask the Senator whether or not the consideration by the committee involved the idea that the investor is not the starter. It is not the buyer who is the starter of the Securities and Exchange Commission and its activities. It is management. The management of business starts the Securities and Exchange Commission into action. Therefore, what I should like to know is whether or not the investigation by the committee went into the subject of the possible effect of additional control by the Government upon the activities of management, as bearing upon the question whether or not we shall have new money poured into industry by reason of adding more Government control than we already have.

Mr. TAFT. Answering the Senator, I do not think I could do better than to quote again the opinion of the Federal Advisory Council of the Federal Reserve Board, which is made up of one man from each district in the United States. The Council says:

> The Council believes that this bill would materially increase the cost of and make more difficult long-term public financing, particularly to smaller corporations, and would thus tend to hinder expansion of plants and businesses at a time when such expansion is particularly desirable in the interest of business recovery.

I do not put my opinion above theirs, and I put their opinion above that of any of the Senators who have discussed the bill, with all due respect to the Senators.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to prolong the colloquy; but I think all of us will agree that when a corporation starts to issue bonds and borrow money, that operation, of course, depends upon the success with which it can borrow money from the public in order that its enterprise may go forward with the borrowed money and additional capital which is brought to its service. In the six hundred and more trust indentures which were examined by the S. E. C. the overwhelming and predominating defect was a lack of protection to the investor.

If I am the owner or the head of a corporation, I have no right to appeal to thousands of citizens scattered all over the country to lend me money—not my money but their money—in order to carry on my industry unless I am willing to give them the maximum amount of protection which would induce them to invest their money in my bonds, and to assure them that they are protected in the event they have to assert their rights.

I will say to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] that there is nothing in the bill which attempts to control management. There is nothing in the bill which authorizes the Commission to pass upon the desirability of the loan, the merits of the loan, the rate of interest, the sinking-fund requirements, the terms of payment, amortization, or anything connected with the business. The bill provides only that before the corporation issues bonds as an inducement to gather to itself the money of thousands of persons scattered all over the country the indenture upon which the bonds are issued shall contain certain protective features in the interest of the investor, the lender of the money, who certainly has a right to be protected in his desire to advance to corporations the money which will enable them to expand or to operate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio permit me to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. The author of the bill has just made a statement which seems to be to be of great importance if it is accurate. I am not very familiar with the bill. I have read it over but have not made a study of it. However, I gathered the impression that management was very strenuously controlled by the pages which quite strictly define the disqualifications of trustees. That is to say, it appeared from a reading of the bill that it restricts the freedom of management in selecting and keeping a trustee in which the management has confidence or a trustee with which suitable arrangements adapted to the locality can be made. It happens that I have had some practice in the issue of such indentures, and I can conceive that the bill, if passed, might deter me or entirely stop me from putting out a refunding issue of bonds partly on account of the control which the bill would immediately impose upon me in the selection of my trustee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not regard the selection of a trustee to be the trustee of obligees or bondholders as a part of the management of the business, because if one trustee who might be desirable is disqualified under any of the provisions of the bill which set out disqualifications, of course, it does not follow that it is impossible to select a trustee who does qualify. The mere selection of a trustee has no influence at all on the management of the business, except remotely, in case the corporation gets into trouble.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, before that.

Mr. BARKLEY. In case the corporation gets into trouble, the trustee may have an obligation to keep a little more in touch with the current course of the corporation's business, so as to know to what extent the rights of investors are protected both before and after default. However, so far as concerns the management of the business, fixing the rate of interest, the terms of payment, the amortization, or passing upon the desirability or necessity of the loan itself, the bill gives the Commission no authority whatever.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator recognize that in nearly all indentures issued by factories, quarry companies, or companies engaged in active production of any kind, there is a control of the management of the business throughout the indenture? For example, development is limited to a certain ratio between liquid assets and cost of development; and throughout the life of the indenture there must be an active, and in some instances a very intimate, relationship between the trustee and the management. So, at the outset, management is interested in the selection of the trustee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course I can understand that; and there ought to be a close connection—even closer than has heretofore existed in many cases—between the trustee and the operation of the concern, because that relationship may very vitally affect the interests of the bondholders for whom the trustee is acting, and their ability to assert their rights in a given set of circumstances.

For example, if a bond issue is being floated, and a trustee is appointed to represent the whole situation, of course those who have put their money into the bonds of the company cannot be ignored. If later something occurs in the management of the business, or in the dissipation of its assets, or in the issue of additional bonds of some other sort, which would affect the interests of the prior obligees who are represented by the particular trustee, there ought to be a way in which they could have some voice, and some knowledge of the situation, because in a real sense the bondholders, those who have put their money into the bonds of the company, are certainly entitled to equal rights with those who have simply bought stock and put their money into the company in another form.

All the bill does is to tighten up on the obligations of the trustee, and compel him to keep more closely in touch with the operations of the company, to see that the terms of the indenture are complied with. If that obligation involves management in some way, or if it impinges upon what might technically be called management, it is only necessary because of the right of those who have invested their money to be protected all along the line.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to make one point in connection with the discussion. The Senator said that bondholders have always been accustomed to look to the trustees. The truth is that bondholders have not been accustomed to look to the trustees. If the Senator has any bonds of his own, or if he has any clients who have bonds, I venture to say that he does not know, and none of his clients knows, who are the trustees on those bonds. No; the truth is not that they look to the trustees.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not make that statement.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator made that statement earlier in the day.

Mr. BARKLEY. In many cases the bondholders does look to the trustee if he happens to know the trustee. If the trustee is an outstanding institution whose reputation for soundness and integrity is known all over the country, that fact undoubtedly has an effect upon the willingness of the investor to buy the bonds of the concern which is issuing them.

Mr. TAFT. I question the accuracy of that statement. I question whether any investor knows who is the trustee on a bond issue. Not only that; the fact is that 99 percent of the bondholder's safety depends not on the trustee, but on the solvency of the obligor, and the way in which the obligor is managed. The bondholder looks to the obligor. If the obligor remains solvent and earns money, the bondholder will get back his money; and if it fails, he probably will not get back his money.

The only reason why I do not feel strongly on the subject of the bill is that I do not think its importance is sufficient to justify taking the afternoon to discuss the question. The truth is that nobody looks to the trustee. The trustee's position makes very little difference in the ultimate result. The only thing I object to is that the bill imposes additional machinery, making it more difficult for anyone to float a bond issue. It discourages financing. It discourages putting money into capital. I believe that today the people of the country, from the President down, are anxious to convince the businessman that the Government wants to help him, and not to hamper him; that it wants to reduce regulation and taxation, and wants to encourage him to go ahead and put back to work some of the 11,000,000 unemployed.

Mr. WHEELER obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I have concluded.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Ohio a brief question. Will the Senator from Montana permit me to ask a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I will if it will not take too long.

Mr. LODGE. It will not take long at all. I merely wish to recur once more to the question of taking business away from other cities and putting it into New York.

Mr. WHEELER. I fear it will take a long time to answer that.

Mr. LODGE. It will not take long to answer the question I desire to ask; I wish to get it in for the RECORD. I wish to say that, in my opinion, there is no one better qualified to express an opinion on a matter of that kind than is Mr. T. Jefferson Coolidge, and I wish to know if any evidence was put into the record to controvert his opinion?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, frankly, I do not remember that there was any such evidence; I should not like to say now, after some 2 or 3 months since the hearings were held, that I positively remember; but I do not recall that any evidence was offered in opposition to the claim of a considerable number of bankers that local business would tend to be shifted to New York because of the restrictions on trustees which are provided by the pending bill.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator for his answer, and also thank the Senator from Montana for yielding.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not happen to have the honor of knowing Thomas Jefferson Coolidge, of Boston, but I do know that I have come in contact with numerous people who have been interested in getting some of the business away from New York and into the smaller cities. I am sure they will say it is not such things as the S. E. C. that take business away from Boston or Cleveland or Cincinnati and give it to New York, but that there are deeper and more fundamental factors involved in the question of business moving away from or to New York City than the matter of whether or not this bill shall be passed.

The Senator from Ohio says that no one looks to the trustee. I will have to differ with him in respect to that statement. When it comes to the selling of bond issues, whether they are railroad bonds or any other kind of bonds, why is it that the name of trustee for the bonds is so prominently displayed upon the literature that is sent out to prospective purchasers? When there is put upon such literature the statement that the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York is going to act as trustee or that the House of Morgan is associated with the financing, almost immediately the prospective purchaser is led to believe that it must be a good security because of the fact that the bonds are being issued by, say, one of the institutions referred to, or because such an institution is going to be the trustee. It does have a tremendously important effect on the sale of the securities. That is why institutions such as the Guaranty Trust Co. and other similar institutions pride themselves on their reputations in dealing with securities so that they may sell them.

Mr. President, I have not read all the details of the pending bill, but I wish to call attention to some matters which were disclosed before the Interstate Commerce Committee and which this bill seeks to correct, although not in the railroad industry but in other lines of endeavor.

This bill, known as the Barkley bill, is of great moment to thousands of public investors who have placed billions of dollars of their savings in corporate bond issues. Investors have long been under the illusion that the great banks and trust companies, who ostensibly act as fiduciaries under the usual corporate trust indenture, are in fact active guardians of their interests. Even if there were not any evidence before the Banking and Currency Committee to that effect, there certainly was evidence to that effect before the Interstate Commerce Committee investigating the finances of the railroads under Senate Resolution 71 of the Seventy-fourth Congress. I understand that this bill is designed to translate these illusions into fact. The sponsors of the bill propose to accomplish this result by eliminating many palpable defects known to exist in trust indentures and by correcting certain serious abuses in corporate trust practice.

The defects and abuses which this bill has been drafted to prevent were disclosed to the Senate as a result of a study of trust indentures conducted by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Although the Commission's study in its field was conducted with painstaking and comprehensive thoroughness, it did not go into railroad financing; it did not consider trust indentures under which billions of dollars of railroad bonds have been issued to the public. Railroad indentures were entirely outside the scope of the Commission's study, but information on that subject is nevertheless available. It is my unpleasant duty to inform the Senate that the inquiries in the railroad field by the Committee on Interstate Commerce at the Senate's direction pursuant to Senate Resolution 71 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, in connection with the investigation of railroad financing and holding companies, show that precisely the same defects and abuses which were discovered by the Securities and Exchange Commission outside the railroad field are only too common in railroad indentures.

Railroad indentures, like the indentures examined by the Securities and Exchange Commission, contain the familiar "exculpatory" clauses which customarily relieve trust companies even of the obligation to exercise ordinary prudence in the management of their trusts. Of these provisions, Mr. Frederick A. O. Schwarz, of Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed, prominent New York lawyers and counsel for one of the most influential and well-known trust companies in the country, testified before our committee. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to this statement by Mr. Schwarz, of the firm of Davis, Polk, Wardwell, Gardiner & Reed. Testifying before our committee, he said:

> I for one—and I am expressing only my personal opinion now—feel that the so-called exculpatory clauses in trust indentures, relieving the trustee from any common-law responsibility—> which it would have as a trustee under a corporate trust, are undesirable.

And that is all they do—relieve them of "common-law responsibility"—

Mr. President, I further desire to call attention to the fact that this same lawyer, whose firm is counsel for the principal banking firm in America, testified in that investigation that some of the provisions in bond indentures are—to use his own language—"terrible."

Railroad indentures, like the indentures examined by the Securities and Exchange Commission, customarily permit the indenture trustee to acquire interests which materially conflict with those of the bondholders whom it is supposed to protect as trustee. Our investigation has disclosed numerous instances where this unhealthy situation has existed.

One striking example occurred in the reorganization of the Missouri Pacific system. In that situation a prominent New York trust company was the trustee under an indenture securing a quarter of a billion dollars of publicly held bonds. In addition, the trust company was on its own account a large creditor of the railroad for whose bondholders it was trustee. This trust company had the foresight to arrange the terms of its own loan so that in the pending reorganization of the railroad the trust company's loan will receive preferential treatment over the publicly held bonds. The trust company was also the holder of a substantial block of junior debentures which had been obtained through the financing of a transaction on behalf of Alleghany Corporation, the holding company which controlled the railroad. The same trust company also had numerous relationships toward this holding company. The transaction under which the trust company acquired the debentures was ultimately carried through by contracts for the transfer of the properties involved to the Missouri Pacific, which contracts became a major financial scandal. The same trust company became the depositary under these contracts and also became the trustee of certain notes which were issued by the vendor company, a wholly owned subsidiary of Alleghany which also controlled the railroad. The terms and conditions of these contracts were subsequently found by the district court in which the Missouri Pacific reorganization proceeding is pending to be so onerous and unfair that lawsuits have since been instituted to disaffirm the contracts and recover the moneys expended by the railroad under them. Needless to say, the trust company is a defendant in these lawsuits. The notes of the vendor company, Alleghany's wholly owned subsidiary, and Alleghany's stock and bond holdings in the Missouri Pacific system, were all pledged as collateral behind three trust indentures of Alleghany Corporation. And the same trust company was also the indenture trustee under each of these Alleghany trust indentures. Because of defaults in the collateral requirements under these trust indentures, as the record of our investigation shows, the trust company was for a long period in control of the Alleghany stock holdings in Missouri Pacific, and in that capacity it was its duty to act for the benefit of Alleghany bondholders. At the same time, however, it had these numerous other conflicting interests in the Missouri Pacific situation, including its own personal creditor position and its position as trustee for Missouri Pacific bonds.

The mere recital of these numerous conflicting positions in which the trust company permitted itself to become involved is sufficiently clear evidence of the impossibility of affording the bondholders of the railroad and the holding company the vigorous trusteeships to which they were entitled. The situation I have just described, moreover, is by no means uncommon in the railroad field, and clearly calls for corrective legislation. Our investigation showed a number of cases where the trustee was on both sides of the fence, and the indenture permitted the trustee to act despite the trustee self-interest which was in conflict with its duties as trustee. I am happy to see that defects and abuses such as these, which we have uncovered in our own investigation, will be eliminated by this bill in the case of trust indentures which are filed hereafter under the Securities Act, and I hope the bill will be passed. I realize that the bill does not apply to railroad indentures, but I trust its passage will provide a basis for the enactment of similar legislation in the railroad field. At any rate, I am glad to support a proposal for the correction of these situations in indentures to which the bill applies.

The Senator from Ohio says they might be sued; but the provisions of the indenture itself permitted the trustee to act in a dual capacity. I do not say the trustee in this particular instance acted from any ulterior motive. It simply got itself into a certain position unwittingly, without thinking of the consequences. If an attorney practicing law before any of the courts of this country had acted in the way in which the trustee acted, he would have been disbarred because of the fact that he occupied a position that was entirely untenable, representing conflicting interests, in some of these instances, to the extent of three or four different parties.

This bill, as I understand it, seeks in the first instance to prevent that. We are told that in such cases the trust company may be sued. This railroad went into bankruptcy; and after it went into bankruptcy and defaulted on its bonds, the judge who was presiding had the matter called to his attention, and he directed the bankruptcy trustee to bring suit. If it had not been for the fact that the company happened to go into bankruptcy, no suit ever would have been brought; and they had to go through a long period of delay, and will have to go through a long and tedious trial to find out whether or not they can actually recover.

Mr. TAFT. But, Mr. President, of course, under this bill they can go on. There is nothing in the bill which says that such persons or institutions shall not act as trustee. They simply contract that they will not represent conflicting interests, and that they will resign if the interests do conflict. Suppose they do not do so. In other words, suppose a man does not do what he ought to do. There is no way that I can see in which he can be made to do it, and the bill will not regulate that feature of the matter. The bill simply says that trust indentures shall provide that the trustee shall not do these things. Suppose he does them anyway. There is no penalty except a suit that may be brought by anybody who may be hurt, and in the case the Senator cites the whole thing was finally brought into court. There is no evidence that I can see, however, that ultimately any bondholders were injured.

My point is, I agree that there are abuses. I only say that I have yet to see the tremendous importance or the direct effect on bondholders' losses that will justify this additional extension of Government authority into another field. It is simply a cumulative building up of Government regulation until business is so hampered that it fails to function.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that in this particular instance if there had been in the law a provision saying that the trustee should not enter into conflicting relations, and that provision had been in the indenture, I am just as sure as that I am standing here that this particular trust company would have looked into the matter and never would have permitted itself to get into that position.

Mr. TAFT. Any lawyer would have advised them that they were doing wrong, anyway. Any lawyer would have told them, and, in fact, they, themselves, should have known it. They did not look into the common law. The Senator says they would look into the indenture. The fact is that they will not look into the common law. I do not see the distinction the Senator makes.

Mr. WHEELER. But in their indenture they were relieved from the common-law liability.

Mr. TAFT. No; not in the indenture. They relieved themselves from liability for negligence but not from liability for representing conflicting interests, contrary to the interests of those whom they represented.

Mr. WHEELER. I say to the Senator that in this particular indenture they did relieve themselves from common-law liability.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; for negligence, but not for deliberate breach of trust.

Mr. WHEELER. Not for deliberate breach of trust; but this trust company was one of the biggest in the country, one of the most influential, and one that the Senator and I and everybody else would look up to, and say that if that trust company put its O. K. on an issue of bonds, we would feel that we would be guaranteed protection of our interests; and it employed the best lawyers in the country. There is no question in my mind that they did not go into this thing with the idea of cheating somebody; but they found themselves in a position where unconsciously, I think, they represented conflicting interests.

The Senator says they could have looked into the matter, and they should have done so, and any lawyer should have advised them of the situation; but this was one of the most influential companies in the United States, and their lawyers did not advise them, or they perhaps did not ask their lawyers because of the fact that they thought they knew so much about the subject.

When we come to talk about passing legislation of this kind, and say that that is the thing that is retarding recovery in the United States, I say that whether we pass this bill or do not pass it will have very little effect upon recovery in the United States. I do not want to go back and get into a political discussion of what brought about the present condition in America; but, if I were to do so, all I would say would be that we had no regulation of the stock exchange, and we had no regulation of any of these things in 1929, and that is one of the reasons why we are in our present condition. We had a wild orgy of speculation in which there were unloaded upon the little banks all the Triple A bonds and the double A bonds, and so many little banks in the West and so many other banks in the West went broke because of the fact that there were unloaded upon those banks fake securities and fake bonds. Then when we want to correct these conditions, we are told, "You cannot have any reform because, if you do, you are going to retard business."

As a matter of fact, that is what is said by everybody who comes before the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate when efforts are made to pass the slightest little bill with reference to some reform or to put under regulation somebody who ought to be under regulation. Opponents of the legislation come in and say, "I am afraid of what is going to happen." We have a fear psychology in the United States today, and that is what is guiding us. Every lobbyist who comes before our committees, trying to protect some selfish interest that he is representing, or representing himself, says "If you pass this legislation, something terrible is going to happen to the country." I am becoming disgusted with it.

Whether this bill passes or does not pass is not going to affect in the slightest degree the question of whether we shall put to work the 11,000,000 unemployed persons in the United States. That is the great problem that is before us; but everybody who comes before the committee says, "If you pass this bill, we cannot put those 11,000,000 persons back to work." I wish the problem were as simple as that, but I am sure it is not.

I hope the bill will pass. I think it is time that these matters were regulated. The evidence before the Committee on Interstate Commerce entirely bears out the conclusion which was reached by the Securities and Exchange Commission, that there is need of such legislation; and I am sure the Senate is going to pass it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate very long; but there are some things to which I desire to allude which to my mind are sufficient reasons for supporting the pending bill.

In the beginning, it should be understood that by the passage of this bill, or any other legislation which the present session of Congress may enact, we shall do very little to put an end to defaults in bonds. Bond investors in this Nation should not entertain the idea that merely because we are attempting to regulate the conduct of the trustees of bond issues, their investments in bonds are thereby made safe. On the other hand, the testimony before the committee, and the experience which has been acquired by the Securities and Exchange Commission over a period of almost 3 years, are, in my opinion, sufficient to justify the enactment of this proposed legislation.

It has been stated by the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], for whom I entertain a very high regard and who always makes a legalistic and logical argument, that one complaint regarding this bill has been that the Congress is attempting to lay down a formula for writing trust indentures. We are attempting to do that, and the bill does prescribe a formula for such indentures; but what has happened in actual business? Probably every lawyer here who ever drafted an indenture went to his shelves or to his filing cabinets and took from some prior indenture nine-tenths of its phraseology and simply inserted it in the document he was drawing. Those clauses, as some witnesses said, are called "boilerplate" clauses. As a general thing there is very little difference between the various indentures that are drawn up. Country lawyers do not know so very much about this sort of thing, except what they learn at the expense of their clients; but the city law firms which draw up trust indentures charge enormous fees for doing nothing in the world except inserting "boilerplate" indenture clauses. What we ourselves are doing here is to substitute a little "boilerplate" for the "boilerplate" which has grown up over a period of years. I hope our action will have a salutary effect upon business.

Trust indentures are very mystifying to a lawyer, and, of course, much more so to a layman. They frequently contain 50 pages or even as much as 200 pages, which it is said nobody reads; and I presume that is true, for I think very few men could stay awake long enough to read intelligently an indenture. But when a practice has grown up in this Nation, as it has grown up, of hiding away in trust indentures clauses which exculpate the trustee not merely from negligence but from willful misconduct, it seems to me it is about time for the Congress or some other body to step in and regulate the matter.

It is interesting to read the report of the Securities and Exchange Commission on the 600 indentures which the Commission examined. We find that few of the indentures contain any restrictions as to conflicting interests on the part of the trustee, whether or not the trustee should become a creditor of the borrower or the issuer, whether or not he should become the holder of additional securities, and so forth; and of all the abuses that have grown up in the country, one of the worst is the conflicting interests of the trustee under the average indenture.

We hear much said about confidence and the lack of confidence in this Nation. I say that if the investing public knew the provisions of the average trust indenture, there would be no investments made. Notwithstanding the fact that the trustee is not the managing authority of the business, and notwithstanding the fact that the question whether or not the bonds will be repaid, or whether or not the interest will be met, is one of business management of the corporation or of the issuer itself, still the trustee does have an obligation to perform. I do not know of any provision in the bill which is going to cause any restriction or undue liability upon business. If there is any such provision, I fail to find it.

Complaint is made that additional cost will be incurred. The only additional cost will be for the mere simultaneous filing of the indenture, that is all. Under the present law the indenture is filed in order that a full disclosure may be made of its contents. The only change will be in examination of the indenture for the purpose of seeing that it complies with the law. That will be the only additional expense.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Are there not at least three provisions which will have to be submitted to and discussed with the Commission?

Mr. MILLER. I am coming to that point.

Mr. TAFT. And as to which the Commission's express approval will have to be obtained?

Mr. MILLER. There are three items upon which the Commission will or may exercise its discretion, to which I will refer in a few moments.

As to the fear that the enactment of this measure will result in sending trusteeships to New York and Chicago, most of the trusteeships are found in those centers anyway. Out of four and a half billion dollars of indentures which have been filed since the Securities and Exchange Commission came into existence, 87 percent in number have gone to Chicago and New York, and 85 percent in volume have gone to those two cities. They will continue to go to the cities where the financing is done.

Senators need not be alarmed about that matter. There are no trusteeships in 26 States in this Union, under the indentures filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission during the last 2½ years. My State is one of the 26. Not a trustee is named in 26 States; so Senators need not be worried about that. Their States will not lose any of this kind of business, because they have not any. They are not going to gain any until they can become financial centers such as New York and Chicago, because a trustee is going to be named where the investment banker lives. So we need not be at all alarmed about that.

The Senator from Ohio has referred to the matter of discretion. The bill does authorize the Securities and Exchange Commission to exercise certain discretion in three or four particulars, which are provided for, I believe, in section 310 of the bill. But that is only in connection with acts to be performed by the trustee immediately prior to default by a borrower. We cannot write a formula in this regard, for much will depend on the conditions which exist at that time. We have gone as far as we can in writing a formula to govern the conduct of the trustee, and require absolute good faith on his part and ordinary honesty in his dealings with the bondholders. That is all the bill does.

I think I am just as much opposed as is any other Senator on this floor to excessive Government regulation of business, but we know that there has been almost a national scandal in the bond business. I am not saying that had this measure been a law it would have prevented all abuses, though I think probably it would have been a deterrent, but there is nothing in the bill which will prevent investments.

There are provisions in it which will tend to increase investment confidence, and that is what we need.

I do not desire to consume the time of the Senate in a discussion of the bill, because I do not see anything in it which in any wise gives us any reason to view with alarm its operations. There is every reason in the world why a trustee should exercise ordinary prudence. Some trustees do. Indentures can be found in this country, such as indentures spoken of by the Senator from Vermont, to which the measure would not apply. Of course, the courts would apply the law. But many trustees do not need regulating, and the law will apply to those who do.

I hope the bill will be enacted.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, earlier in the debate the Senator from Kentucky offered us the privilege of asking him questions to bring out any explanation of the figures we desired, and I should like to ask him under what condition additional bonds can be issued with reference to outstanding indentures.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in subsection (c), on page 12, there is the following provision:

(c) The Commission shall, on application by the issuer and after opportunity for hearing thereon, by order exempt from any one or more provisions of this title any security issued or proposed to be issued under an indenture under which, at the time such application is filed, securities referred to in paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of this section are outstanding, if and to the extent that the Commission finds that compliance with such provision or provisions, through the execution of a supplemental indenture or otherwise—

(1) would require, by reason of the provisions of such indenture, or the provisions of any other indenture or agreement made prior to the enactment of this title, or the provisions of any applicable law, the consent of the holders of securities outstanding under any such indenture or agreement; or

(2) would impose an undue burden on the issuer, having due regard to the public interest and the interests of investors.

In other words, when an application is filed before the Commission, it will be subject to hearing, and the Commission can then pass upon the question whether additional securities may be isued.

Mr. DANAHER. Does not the Senator understand, however, that there still remains in the Commission the discretion to decide whether or not additional issues may be offered?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. The bill provides that when such an application is made the Commission shall hold hearings upon it and be governed by the effect it might have upon outstanding obligations already issued, or what the effect might be upon the situation described in these subparagraphs.

Mr. DANAHER. With the consequent disruption, perhaps, of the financial structure of the issuer.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the issuer be sufficiently disinterested in his own financial structure as to make application for the issue of additional bonds which would disrupt and destroy his financial structure, certainly the Commission at least ought to interfere with any such project by declining to approve the issue of additional bonds. It is hardly to be conceived that any corporation would deliberately make application of that kind for the purpose of disrupting its own financial structure.

Mr. DANAHER. Of course I do not believe that any issuer would do that for the purpose of disrupting its own financial structure.

Mr. BARKLEY. If there were an issuer which would do it, the Commission certainly ought to intervene and not permit it.

Mr. DANAHER. Keeping those things in mind, I ask the Senator what provision there is with reference to refunding outstanding issues under existing indentures.

Mr. BARKLEY. The refunding would be a new issue. It would have to be qualified just as the original issue was qualified, so that there would have to be a new indenture. The new issue under ordinary circumstances might require a different kind of indenture from that which was prepared originally. Under the proposed law, if the loan is refunded, it is treated as a new issue, so far as concerns the requirement that the indenture shall conform to the requirements of the provisions of the bill in order that it may qualify, if the bonds are to be sold and distributed among the public, which I assume they would be.

Mr. DANAHER. Does not the Senator feel that securities under indentures outstanding before the adoption of this measure ought to be able to qualify without the issuer coming to Washington and submitting to the discretion of the Commission?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not.

Mr. DANAHER. Does not the Senator necessarily then feel that the exercise of that discretion might be adverse, and hence cause absolute collapse on the part of the already outstanding issue?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think it would, because if it is merely a refunding of an outstanding issue which has been issued under an indenture which qualified under the provisions of the bill and the applicant came and filed with the Commission an indenture under which it proposed to refund outstanding bond issues, the Commission would then pass on the question whether the indenture for that particular refunding issue complied with the law.

Mr. DANAHER. Right there, Mr. President, I will ask the Senator what terms he says the Commission would approve in the indenture.

Mr. BARKLEY. The terms, so far as the loan itself is concerned, are not subject to the approval of the Commission. The Commission's duty is to find whether in the body of the indenture itself the provisions are set out in compliance with the requirement of the law. The maturity date or dates of the bond issue, the amount of it, the amount of interest, the provision for amortization or repayment are not subject to approval of the Commission; they are not even subject to approval if they are contained in the indenture. The only thing that the indenture has to do in order to qualify is to conform to the provisions of the law, and they do not pertain to what may be called the business deal of the transaction.

Mr. TAFT. Still, in the case of a company which has outstanding an open first mortgage, let us say, with "A" bonds, and it wants to extend its financing under the mortgage, it cannot sell any bonds except first-mortgage bonds, and it comes out with a series "B" bonds. It is true, as I understand, that the Commission could say, "You cannot issue any 'B' bonds under the indenture." The bill, in fact, therefore, gives the Commission power absolutely to turn down a financing if they wish to do so. I do not say that they would, but is it not true that they could put that power into effect so that the company in question could not extend its financing by the issuance of any additional obligations?

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the provisions for exemptions which I read a moment ago, the Commission could pass upon the question whether the additional type of bond should be issued, or, in other words, whether it should be exempt from the provisions of the indenture.

Mr. DANAHER. Under section 312, page 37 of the bill on our desks, we find reference to bondholders' lists. Does the Senator find the reference?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. I should like to ask, Mr. President, when we are undertaking to protect bondholders, why it should not be possible for a bondholder, after default, to go to the trustee and get a list of all other bondholders? Why should there be an option on the part of the trustee as to whether he will or will not release that list? The Senator will find the reference at the bottom of page 38.

Mr. BARKLEY. The committee and the Commission and all those who have had anything to do with the framing of this legislation, have undertaken to provide in the bill that under circumstances which are deemed sufficient and adequate, when bondholders desire, or there is a necessity to form a bondholders' committee to protect their interests, they shall have the right to apply for a list of all other bondholders so that they may communicate with them on the question of whether they desire to have a bondholders' committee appointed. It is conceivable also that there might be some mischievous desire on the part of some individual, a troublemaker here and there, who might apply for a bondholders' list simply for the purpose of instigating trouble, for the purpose of beginning litigation. In such cases the trustee probably ought to be given the power to decide whether a bondholders' list shall be furnished to an individual bondholder who makes the request.

Mr. DANAHER. So that there is an election remaining in the trustee.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is certain discretion in the trustee in that particular case.

Mr. DANAHER. And he may refuse to give the list?

Mr. BARKLEY. He might do so; yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, right there, does not that suggest to the Senator that we ought properly to protect the trustee? Give the bondholders the right to get a list of all bondholders. Remember, sir, all this is after an existing default. Give the bondholder that right, so that he may be in a position to obtain the names of all the bondholders. The trustee should be protected to the extent that no suit would lie against him unless and until the Securities and Exchange Commission authorized such a suit. Then we would have the advantage not only of protecting the bondholder so he might maintain his rights but the trustee would also be protected. Certainly that ought to be done. If no restriction is placed upon the filing of a suit against the trustee, it may often result in irreparable damage being done—perhaps a run on a bank.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think we have gone as far as possible to protect not only the trustee but also the investor, for, after all, we cannot overlook what seems to be a prime obligation to the investor to the one who has trusted not only the trustee but has trusted the underwriter, and has trusted the issuer, and who does not have the facilities that are enjoyed by all those on the inside to understand all about the issues and the conditions of the company. I think we have gone as far as we can safely go to protect the trustee from undue harassment or unnecessary litigation consistent with protecting the bondholder in his right, so that he may obtain the list of bondholders in case of necessity without having to go to the only source now from which he can obtain it. And he cannot obtain them then unless the issuing company, the obligor, is willing to give to him such a list.

Mr. DANAHER. Does the Senator know whether or not the provision appearing at the foot of page 38 which retains in the trustee the discretion as to whether he will or will not grant the list of bondholders, is the result of compromise between interests involved in the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; many of the provisions of the bill, I will say, are the result of negotiations and conferences of various kinds not only on the part of the Securities and Exchange Commission but the American Bankers Association, the American Association of Savings Banks, and, I will say, the Investment Bankers Association, which, as I said a while ago, have never come all the way along in endorsing the bill. However, many of the provisions of the bill have been worked out after negotiations, discussions, and conferences over the table with all interests involved in the issue of bonds and the formulation of indentures. I may say that the provision here is the result of those conferences and efforts to draft a provision that would be fair to those who have a right to expect protection.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. There was one statement made earlier in the day about the Investment Bankers' Association that I think was perhaps in error, and I want to correct it. Every investment banker of the United States is 100 percent opposed to the bill. I think there ought to be no misunderstanding as to their position.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is no misunderstanding about it. The Investment Bankers' Association as an organization is opposed to the bill. Whether or not every individual member of it is opposed to it I do not undertake to say. I do not intend to leave the impression, and I do not think I did by a proper construction of my remarks on the subject, that the Investment Bankers' Association as such has endorsed the bill and is not opposed to it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I have only one other question to ask the indulgent Senator from Kentucky, and that is whether he knows of any losses that have occurred to bondholders because of the form of the indenture since the adoption of the Securities Act of 1933?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that is not a fair test, I will say, of the measure we are now considering, because very few such indentures or bond issues have run sufficiently long to enable us to tell whether there will be losses. The time of their expiration has not yet arrived. We have not even nearly approached it. We can tell more about that, perhaps, 5, 10, or 15 years from now, when the bonds begin to approach maturity. Of course, in view of the fact that all these bond issues have been compelled under the law to be filed with the Commission, disclosures have been made. That of itself has operated as a protection to the public, because it then knew as much as it could know by an investigation and inspection, the nature of the bonds and of the company. It is hardly a fair test to ask or for me to attempt to answer as to the losses that have occurred since the act of 1933 or the act of 1934. I will say that the losses have not been very substantial in the last 4 years. But whether they will be substantial in the future on securities already issued which do not come under the provisions of this particular bill it is utterly impossible to foresee.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to thank the Senator for his courtesy and his cooperation with me. I will say in passing that I had already talked over this phase with the able counsel for the Securities and Exchange Commission, Mr. Burke, who has been in charge of the bill before the committee. There were phases of it which it seemed to me ought particularly to be considered here, and I have raised them in question form. Particularly, it seems to me we ought to have in mind maturing obligations under already outstanding bonds. If the bill is enacted in its present form, I believe we shall leave ourselves open, in that particular, to some serious inroads upon the structure and the status of businesses today. If the situation were entirely prospective, that would be one thing; but in the absence of its being entirely prospective, and since the bill will not have an influence on maturities of outstanding indentures, I fear that all the spokesmen for the bill have offered is a sanguine hope in that particular.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the Senator's remarks. His questions have been constructive and sincere. I will say that, of course, we cannot go back ab initio and revise the terms under which outstanding bond issues have been made. All we can do is to provide protection for the future; and in case outstanding bond issues are refunded they will have to come in under the shelter of the law, just as though they were original issues.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I should like to submit a question to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], if I may.

Mr. DANAHER. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Am I to understand that the Senator from Connecticut feels that it is entirely proper to have these debentures in the original issuance of bonds on an open-end mortgage concealed somewhere in the middle of an indenture, and to have the bonds sold to the investing public, in most cases with no knowledge on the part of the investing public that it is an open-end mortgage, and that the Senator would object to some restraint upon that sort of practice?

Mr. DANAHER. In answer to the question, Mr. President, I will say that as the law now stands there is no limitation upon the right of a person to enter into a contract. The contract has been entered into, interests have vested, title has passed, and persons have changed position in reliance upon the terms of the indenture as at present drawn.

There is no question in the world that any buyer who chose to do so could have had an opportunity to examine such indentures. Under those circumstances maturities will come along and must be met, and the company's position may, indeed, be at stake. If the possibility of compliance with the discretion reposed in the Commission by the bill is a necessary condition precedent to whether the company does or does not stay in business, I have an idea that there will be failure to comply. The Senator knows that there are thousands of outstanding issues of corporations and businesses all over the country.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I was limiting my first question to the question which I understand the Senator first raised; that is, the question of open-end mortgages. The Senator is answering by talking about the question of refunding issues.

Mr. DANAHER. I believe my question had to do with the matter of refunding issues, and I think the point to which the Senator adverts was interjected by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT].

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That may be. However, take as an example a corporation which issues $10,000,000 of bonds. The time comes when the bonds are due. We know that many corporations take the position that they never intend to pay the bonds. They intend merely to refund them. Does not the Senator think that the investing public which purchases the bonds for refunding purposes is entitled to the same amount of protection as the investing public which purchased the bonds when they were first issued?

Mr. DANAHER. The question at stake is, To what extent is the United States Government, through one of its agencies, to become a third party to every contract? After all, that is the question involved. Of course I recognize that there is much to be said in favor of the principle of the bill. I understand the degree of protection that is asked, and the hope that is held out for it. I must confess myself in doubt as to whether or not it is necessary at the present time, however, or whether there has been any demonstrable justification for it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not care to enter into an argument with the Senator, but I think there have been many abuses in this country in the matter of refunding issues, and in the attitude of corporations when they put out a bond issue which they never intend to pay off. I refer to the practices of certain public utilities throughout the years. Certainly the provisions of the bill, which are mild as compared with what some would like to do in the matter of regulation, are only those to which the investing public is entitled.

Mr. DANAHER. Let me say, Mr. President, that since the requirement for registration under the Securities Act of 1933, I know of no information called for by the registration requirements today which has disclosed any loss in any way whatever because of the form of the indenture. I know of no evidence of any such loss. I know of no claim of any. Quite the contrary; I believe the only justification offered by Mr. Douglas in his report with reference to the subject was that some 400 defaulting structures had been examined by him before 1933, with respect to which the same terms of indenture were written into the reissue indenture since 1933. He felt that there was thus reason to suspect and fear the worst from now on. He felt that this type of protection should be had from now on, and hence wrote the bill. I think that is the excuse for it. I know of no other.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word.

I am not a member of the committee which studied the bill, and therefore I am not in a position to discuss the testimony before the committee. However, in the past the reliance which has been placed by the investing public upon the name of a trustee has been most profound. I know of no greater fraud—and I use the word "fraud" in the sense of criticism—that has been perpetrated upon the investing public, taking into consideration the confidence they had in the name of a trustee, than the inclusion in trust indentures of provisions which completely deprive the investing public of any right so far as the trustee is concerned.

Anyone who has had any experience in the investment-banking business knows that a salesman goes out and says, "Here is a great institution which is the trustee. Don't you know that if this were not a proper issue the trustee would not act for it?" The salesman does not tell the public what every lawyer knows, that in that trust indenture are provisions which make it absolutely impossible for the investor to look to the trustee to protect him in any way.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky be good enough to allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I was looking at page 45 of the bill, subdivision (4), under the heading "Duties and responsibilities of the trustee; duties prior to default." It is provided that the trustee's duties are to be imposed without limitation. Subdivision (4) bothers me a little. It says:

> The performance by the obligor of such of its other obligations under the indenture as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

That language seems to indicate that there may be some obligations which are not to be enforced. It says "such of its other obligations." I am wondering just what the interpretation of that language is.

Mr. BARKLEY. That language is a part of section 315, which pertains to the duties and responsibilities of the trustee, under the subhead "Duties prior to default." The section reads as follows:

> DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITY OF THE TRUSTEE
> Duties prior to default
> SEC. 315. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions imposing upon the indenture trustee such specific duties and obligations prior to default (as such term is defined in such indenture) as are consistent with the duties and obligations which a prudent man would assume and perform prior to such a default if he were trustee under such an indenture, including, without limitation, action in respect of the following matters—
> (1) the recording, re-recording, filing, and refiling of the indenture;
> (2) the application of the indenture securities and the proceeds thereof to the purposes specified in the indenture;
> (3) the existence of or compliance with all conditions precedent to the authentication and delivery of the indenture securities, to the release or substitution of any property subject to the lien of the indenture, to the satisfaction and discharge of the indenture, and to any other action by the trustee under the indenture; and
> (4) the performance by the obligor of such of its other obligations under the indenture as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

In other words, in addition to the specific things set out in subparagraphs (1), (2), and (3) in order for the indenture to be qualified it must also contain a provision that the trustees shall perform such specific duties and obligations prior to default as are consistent, and so forth, with respect to the performance by the obligor. That is a duty enjoined on the trustee.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is his duty to see to it, before default, insofar as the trustee can do so, that the obligor is performing its duty.

Mr. ADAMS. I have not succeeded in making clear my point. I am not complaining of the rigidity of the provision, but of its liberality. It seems to indicate that there are some obligations the performance of which the Commission will not require, because it says:

> the performance by the obligor of such of its other obligations under the indenture as the Commission deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

I am wondering why there are obligations which the Commission is not going to require the obligor to perform, and what they could be.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course this all pertains to the duty of the trustee; and among the duties of the trustee before default, of course, is the duty to see, insofar as the trustee can, that the terms of the obligation, the bonds and the indenture, shall be complied with with respect to reserves, sinking funds, and anything included in the debenture which will work toward the possibility of the obligor performing its duty in respect of such matters at the time of maturity, if that is when the duty is to be performed, or before maturity.

Mr. ADAMS. Is not the implication of this section that there may be vested in the Commission a discretion to say to the obligor, "There are some of your obligations which you do not need to perform"? It seems to me that if an obligation is entered into, it ought to be performed, and the Commission ought to have no authority to waive it.

Mr. BARKLEY. That implies, I think fairly, the suggestion that in writing the indenture the Commission may exercise some jurisdiction over the trustee in determining that some other duty which the obligor is under as a result of the indenture may be waived for specific reasons which may exist at the time. It may be that in a certain case it would be better to hold off, and not to insist upon the actual rigid enforcement of the obligation of the trustee meticulously to do in detail everything that is set out in such a case under subsection (4).

Mr. ADAMS. I may be a bondholder and I may be interested in the enforcement of the clause. Does the Senator think the Commission should say to me, "Though you have bought the bond relying upon that clause, we are going to waive its performance"?

Mr. BARKLEY. Only in case the Commission decides that to do that is for the protection of the investment and in the interest of the public.

Mr. ADAMS. Would the Senator object if that paragraph should be stricken out?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not think it ought to go out. There is not much discretion left to the Commission in the bill anyway. One of the few things the Commission may do is to exercise some discretion with respect to these very matters that may transpire prior to a default. Another is with respect to notices after default, and another relates to the Commission's approval of certain types of legal and accounting services. There is not very much left in the bill in the way of discretion to the Commission. It is practically all automatic. When the obligor has complied with the provisions of the bill by writing up his indenture in compliance with the law, the duties of the Commission almost entirely cease.

Mr. ADAMS. May I bother the Senator with just one more item?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. I refer to the portion of the bill with reference to disqualification, on page 26, subsection (5).

In my State, in the city of Denver—which is quite a local commercial capital—there are a number of banks which engage in the business of acting as trustee. The financial center is not very large, and I have been finding some difficulty in working out the various details as to what would disqualify a trustee. I can understand an absolute, rigid rule that if the trustee has a single share of stock, or if anybody connected with the trustee has a single share, there is a disqualification. Here, however, we are setting out that ownership of 5 percent in one instance and 10 percent in another shall disqualify. That is, we abandon the hard and fast rule and attempt to work out the matter on a mathematical basis.

I can conceive that in the community of Denver there may be an individual owning 5 percent of the stock of a bank which is a trustee, and who happens also to be a director of, say, a mining company, or a lumber company, or a coal company. Under this bill the local trustee could not act. That is, the disqualification would be there because of a minority interest of the trustee in one case and a directorship in the other. Does not the Senator think that is a pretty stringent provision when we consider these smaller financial centers?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we have undertaken to relieve the small financial centers by exempting all bond issues of a million dollars or less.

Mr. ADAMS. Of course, Denver is not small. We have a number of bond issues of more than a million dollars.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that Denver is not in that category, and I did not think the Senator was talking about Denver when he was talking about financial centers. We have attempted to relieve the so-called or actual small financial centers by exempting all bond issues of a million dollars or less. I assume that the Senator is talking about subsection (5) at the bottom of page 26.

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The trustee would be disqualified, for instance, if—

5 percent or more of the voting securities of such trustee is beneficially owned either by an obligor or by any director, partner, or executive officer thereof—

That is, a single one—or 10 percent or more of such voting securities is beneficially owned collectively by any two or more of such persons—

And so forth. We had to establish some arbitrary percentage; and it was the best judgment of the committee that in the case of a single individual the ownership of more than 5 percent ought to disqualify a trustee from acting, and that in the case of two or more individuals 10 percent or above that percentage ought to disqualify a trustee from acting.

Mr. ADAMS. I agree with the Senator that the percentage is arbitrary. It occurred to me that it was just a little too arbitrary, though I do not mean to question the action of the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the Senator's point. If we go above that percentage, we get into a realm where there may be such conflict of interest that the trustee ought not to serve. In other words, even a smaller percentage of interest in the assets or the stock or the beneficial ownership of the obligations of a corporation might in some cases color the conduct of the trustee in such a way as to make possible the neglect of his larger duty as trustee of the widely diffused public that happens to own the obligations. Even in the smaller financial circles, and certainly in a major financial circle like the city of Denver, I think this 5- and 10-percent requirement would not work any hardship.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

THE FARM PROBLEM

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long. In view of the fact that it is necessary for me to depart for a little while into the Middle West, I feel that it is incumbent upon me to bring to the attention of the Senate a very significant matter.

Probably the indictment most frequently directed at any legislator is that he loses perspective. It is very easy for us, sitting in the quiet of this Chamber, with the warm Washington sun beating down outside, completely to forget that elsewhere 10,000,000 farmers stand in the ever-lengthening shadow of starvation earnings and loss of morale.

Today I listened with a great deal of—shall I say pleasure?—to the significant statements of Senators when they spoke about the need of staying in session to stop the possibility of war, or of America's getting into war. I agree with that conclusion. Our common concern today over foreign affairs and bond issues seems very great. It is very easy for us to forget that the $60,000,000,000 American farm investment totters on the brink of financial annihilation. In Washington it is perilously simple for us to ignore the gaunt tanned man who swaps his toil in a losing barter, in which his rightful wage is lost in the shifting sands of commodity price levels.

In Washington it is too easy and too politic for us to become so engrossed in conciliating various pressure groups that we lose sight of the great basic industry of the country.

In Washington it is sometimes too expedient to play the farm interest "against the middle"; to stall one bill while another is introduced; to consider one isolated, completely unintegrated part of a program, independent from a coordinated program; and to stir the cauldron of farm cross-interest for political purposes rather than to settle the problem.

Mr. President, I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate—and I shall not take more than 5 minutes—the fact that we do not seem to be getting anywhere in solving the farm problem. To me it is the greatest problem before the American people, because the farmers of the Nation constitute the economic backbone of the Nation. We sit here and laugh and talk and discuss other issues and let the backbone crack up.

Several months ago, because every sector of our farm group had individual bills introduced, I suggested the need of a coordinated bill wherein every farm section would be represented. Nothing came of that suggestion, so on the 28th of March I introduced an amendment to House bill 5269, calling for an appropriation of $100,000,000, $50,000,000 of which was to be used under section 32 of the A. A. A. Act to buy surplus butter.

After the bill was introduced, a conference was called, and some of the dairy and wheat farmers met in the office of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS]. In view of the fact that there has been some talk among Senators as to what went on, I am glad to state that the purpose of the meeting apparently was to see if a coordinated bill could not be worked out. As a result, the Senator from Illinois was appointed chairman of a subcommittee, and he appointed the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] as members of the subcommittee.

It will be observed that the Republicans were not represented on the subcommittee.

What I cannot understand is that the Senate amendment to House bill 5269 was introduced thereafter, on April 6, as the bill resulting from the work of this subcommittee; but up to date no coordinated bill has been whipped into shape, no bill representing the interests of cotton, corn, wheat, dairy products, and so forth.

Another meeting of the committee was held recently, with the result that the subcommittee, as I understand, was to carry on with the other sectors of the agricultural picture, and see if a bill could not be gotten into shape that would satisfy the varied interests of the farm industry.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Merely for the purpose of keeping the record straight, I desire to make a brief statement.

The Senator has just stated that the subcommittee which was appointed consisted of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK]. I am perfectly willing to assume my part of the responsibility for whatever has been done by the subcommittee. It was the Senator from Missouri, and not the Senator from Idaho, who was the third member of the subcommittee.

Mr. WILEY. I beg the pardon of the Senator from Missouri. Was he on the subcommittee?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I certainly was; and I am perfectly willing to defend in the Senate, and before any Senate committee, the actions which have been taken by the subcommittee.

Mr. WILEY. I am not attacking the subcommittee. I am not attacking anyone. I am directing the attention of the country to the fact that we may discuss various things here. As was suggested earlier in the day by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], we may hold sessions of our committees, and we may arrive nowhere. As to the subcommittee, I want to say that when meetings were held by it, apparently the subcommittee was to report back to the general committee. We have had no report so far as I know.

At the time the committee was called into the office of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] I had in preparation a bill which represented the "Wisconsin idea" for taking care of the dairy farmers' interest. When the meeting was held, and again the coordinated idea was advanced that all "farm interests" should join to see if some feasible, practicable, and constructive plan could not be evolved, I went no further in introducing the bill on behalf of the dairy interest. I am informed that such a bill will be introduced soon.

I make this statement to dispel a little smoke screen that has been thrown out in this matter. My real object, however, in rising to my feet at this time is to pray to this session of Congress that they will recognize, as most of us do not recognize, the serious situation of the farmers. I mean that they are literally bleeding to death. Letters to this effect continually pour in from my State. Now letters are pouring in from bankers who tell us about the situation. I am bringing the matter to the attention of the Senate, as I say, because I expect to be gone for the next few days, and I feel that I should be remiss in the discharge of my duty if I did not make this statement.

I have introduced in the Senate a measure known as Senate Joint Resolution 93, which provides for a common-sense moratorium in relation to the foreclosure of mortgages by the Government. Up to date that bill has gotten nowhere. I have tried to get somewhere before the committee and to find out what is going on. As you know, the facts are that the Government is foreclosing mortgages and adding to the broken morale that has already grown to vast proportions. The Government, through its agencies, goes right on foreclosing, literally kicking people off the farms, making bums of many of them, putting the rest on W. P. A., and adding more and more people to the class known as "broken morale folks."

On April 27 I submitted in the Senate a resolution the purpose of which was to call to the attention of the Congress and the people a supplementary way of aiding the farmer. In the resolution I suggested that the President investigate the feasibility of entering into some barter arrangement to obtain materials which we do not produce in this country by exchanging dairy products for them.

Everyone knows that the price the farmer gets for his milk which produces butter and cheese is away below what it should be. During the past year the Government and its agencies accumulated about 80,000,000 pounds of butter. No effort was made by the Government to dispose of that butter in foreign markets, and no effort is now being made. It hung like the sword of Damocles above the heads of the farmers, with the result that the market for butter and milk products dropped to its present ruinous level.

Several months ago I talked to the Secretary of Agriculture about that situation, and I again talked with him several weeks ago, suggesting that this butter be sold in foreign markets even if a loss had to be taken, since the loss the Government would sustain was nothing compared with the loss the farmers were sustaining because of the depreciated market. At that time I was informed by the Secretary himself that he and the President and others felt that the American people would not approve such a step. The idea was to feed this butter out to the needy and the underprivileged of the Nation.

While I feel that this decision was honestly arrived at, I think it was a foolish decision. I am informed that most of the surplus butter could have been disposed of some months ago in foreign markets at 20 cents a pound or better, which is about 7 cents below the amount the Government had invested in the butter. If the Government had sold the butter, and had taken the money it would have received and purchased with it part of the butter that was being currently produced in America, it would have stabilized the market here, the farmers would have gotten somewhere near the cost of production for their butter, and the dairy farmers would not be facing the condition they are facing today.

Under our plan for rearmament there are certain necessary and vital so-called strategic war materials which we need, and which we do not produce in sufficient amounts in this country. Other countries which owe us money should sell us this material, and apply the purchase price on their indebtedness. If this arrangement cannot be worked out, then these countries should barter with us, exchanging their surplus strategic materials for our surplus dairy products.

I am grateful to the Senator from Kentucky for yielding to me sufficient time to make this statement.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Spirit of the living God, oh, that all men might know Thy atoning Lamb that taketh away the sin of the world; Master of Truth, descend upon us that we may testify to the sublime virtue of Thy holy name. As each day sets its task, steady us with concentration and perseverance and hold us to the conviction that triumph or failure rests with us. Heavenly Father, make us altogether worthy of the world's daily life; fill us with grace that we may enjoy the passing hours. Increase the power of our faith and inspire us with the realization that happy is the man who has his open Bible, who meditates, prays, and feels that the creation itself shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the children of God. In the name of the Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 685. An act to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be given a leave of absence for 1 week in order that I may attend the obsequies of my lifelong friend, Frank P. Walsh, of Kansas City and New York, who died suddenly and unexpectedly this morning.

Mr. Walsh was one of the greatest men it has been my privilege to know. He was a great American—great in Kansas City, great in New York, great in the world. Wherever Frank Walsh was, there was a man truly great in every respect.

He was the unfailing friend of the common man, the untiring champion of mankind in the battle for human rights. Even this morning, with death so near, he was representing the people before the Power Authority of New York.

Frank P. Walsh was my friend for more than 50 years. He was everything to me. To use the immortal words of Robert E. Lee at the time of the death of Stonewall Jackson, "I feel that I have lost my right arm." And well might this be said by all suffering and oppressed humanity, for Frank Walsh was their advocate, their friend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri for a week's leave of absence?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a few excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I am presenting a resolution entitled "Withholding Relief Benefits from Those Engaged in Un-American Activities." This has to do with the Federal Government's subsidizing people who make it their business to become professional agitators, professional rioters, breakers of the law, and disturbers of the peace, and who are living on money furnished by the United States Government. I am referring this to the committee investigating the W. P. A., and I hope that every Congressman who has the welfare of this country at heart will vote to help me get this resolution through to take these people off the rolls of the United States Government. [Applause.]

Resolution withholding relief benefits from those engaging in un-American activities

Whereas throughout the world certain philosophies of government have arisen which are inconsistent with that of the people of the United States, and are subversive thereto, which philosophies advocate and teach the expansion of their influence over other governments and peoples; and

Whereas under such philosophies there have been created despotic regimes, the adherents of which long have been, and now are, making every effort to substitute such regimes for the democracy under which the people of the United States have prospered in the past and have been supremely happy in their independence; and

Whereas such subversive groups are known to be internationally organized and to be appealing for support to the less fortunate in our midst; and

Whereas it is known to be a fact that such subversive groups advocate the overthrow of our Government by ballot, by force of arms, by propaganda, by fomenting discord and discontent, and by any other means wherever possible; and

Whereas it is known that many of the local representatives of such foreign subversive groups and their followers repeatedly participate in practically every assemblage where seeds of discontent are being sown, and in nearly every unruly demonstration, agitation, and riot; and

Whereas these same representatives are known to be professional agitators, propagandists, rioters, lawbreakers, disturbers of the peace, and advocates of subversive doctrines; and

Whereas many such local representatives of foreign subversive groups and their converts are receiving relief directly and indirectly and are enjoying the bounty of that Government which they would destroy; and

Whereas such representatives and their followers constantly attempt to harass and coerce the representatives of the Government in the several governmental seats, and threaten disturbances of the peace of the community, threaten families of legislators, and further again threaten use of the un-American so-called sit-down strike and other means of mass violence, intimidation against property and the persons of public officials and their families, and law-abiding citizens: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by this House of Representatives, That it does hereby deplore the fact that professional agitators, rioters, disturbers of the peace, lawbreakers, and others seeking to overthrow government are permitted to enjoy the bounty of such Government and while receiving therefrom relief which they sorely need, are verily biting the hand that feeds them; and be it further

Resolved, That this House of Representatives calls upon every loyal citizen to help stamp out such destructive and un-American activities; and be it further

Resolved, That this House of Representatives urge the special committee which is now investigating the Works Progress Administration to recommend such amendments to the law as to prohibit the furnishing of public aid to any person engaged or participating in any of the subversive activities hereinbefore referred to, especially and particularly those members of the Workers' Alliance and other communistic organizations, and wherever it is found that members of the Workers' Alliance or members of any other communistic organization are found to engage in any of the subversive activities outlined above, that any such member of any such group be immediately and permanently removed from any Federal Government pay roll.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I was surprised this morning upon reading the RECORD to find on page 4969, where there appears the roll call on yesterday of the so-called veterans' pension bill, that a host of Republicans were paired as in opposition to the bill. I was surprised because, of course, no instructions were given to the pair clerks to pair anyone against the bill. After making an investigation I find that the pair clerks sent the record down to the Government Printing Office in proper form with general pairs on the part of those who were away. It was impossible to get a favorable pair because of lack of opposition. I have now been informed by a majority of the Members so recorded they were strongly in favor of the measure, and if here would have voted that way. Everybody understands, of course, there was only one vote in the House against the bill.

In order to correct the RECORD and make it conform with the facts, I ask unanimous consent these gentlemen be not recorded as being opposed to the bill but be given a general pair, as I understand there is no one opposed to the bill to pair with them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts is that the permanent RECORD be corrected so as to show only general pairs for the gentlemen referred to, with no specific instructions for or against the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. As a matter of fact, judging from the result, if every Republican and every Democrat who was missing yesterday had been present he would have voted for the bill without a shadow of a doubt?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is my understanding.

Mr. COCHRAN. It is reasonable to assume that practically everyone absent was in favor of the legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, I understand it must be a mistake in the Printing Office, because anyone who read the RECORD and saw only one vote against the bill would know it was an impossible pair record. Furthermore, as the bill was passed under suspension, two favorable votes would be required to one vote in opposition.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be granted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper, in view of the confusion that has arisen with reference to this matter, to call the attention of all Members to the correct practice on the part of any Member desiring to secure a pair. It is his duty to make a request to the pair clerks on the right of the Chair, giving them his personal and individual instructions with reference to securing pairs and stating with whom the pair is to be made and for what purpose. If all Members would follow this rule and practice there would be no confusion about matters of this sort.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make a statement about this same practice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I called attention a year ago or 2 or 3 years ago to this matter, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], as well as the attention of the majority leader.

I called attention several years ago to the fact that the pair clerks are indiscriminately pairing Members against Members of their own party. If your constituents ever read this RECORD and turn to the general pairs, they are going to find a most ridiculous situation. In other words, if Members are not here and they run out of Members of the opposite party, they pair them against each other. For this reason, I served notice on them not to pair me at all without my instructions.

I call attention to this again because somebody in authority ought to instruct the pair clerks not to place a Member's name in the RECORD as paired generally against a Member of his own party, because that not only cancels his pair but makes him look ridiculous.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a concurrent resolution passed by the Michigan Legislature and also a short excerpt from the Pontiac Daily Press on the subject of sugar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Would it be in order, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent that all of roll call No. 60, in corrected form, be reinserted in today's RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the request would be in order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that roll call No. 60 be reinserted in the RECORD of today in corrected form in line with the observations made by the minority leader.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman only refers to the pairs and not to the Members who answered the roll call?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will amend it to include the pairs, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD of today, in corrected form, so far as the pairs are concerned, a proper record as indicated by the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]. Is there objection?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair puts the question, may I say that unless the entire roll call is put in——

Mr. RANKIN. I mean put in the entire roll call, but not to change anything in the roll call.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Insert the entire roll call, but the changes to be made are only with respect to the pairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD of today's proceedings a corrected roll call, No. 60, of the vote taken on yesterday, including a correct statement with reference to the pairs.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am not fully aware of just what the correction would do. I am paired in favor of the bill, and if there is any correction with respect to that pairing I would like the opportunity to state that I was absent from the chamber unavoidably, but I had conferred with members of the committee having the bill in charge and was informed that they did not anticipate opposition to it and, in all probability, no record vote would be asked, and depending on their statements, I was attending to some important matters pertaining to my district in the Departments and for that reason I was unavoidably absent, but had I been here I would have voted for the bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am referring to roll call No. 60 and only to the roll call.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. I would say that I am paired for the bill, and if you correct that and destroy that pair, then certainly I should be given the right to explain my absence; that I was enthusiastically for the bill, and would have voted "aye."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman would not want a pair to stand that would do an injustice to the other man.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Certainly not, and I am sorry the gentleman should imply that I have that in mind.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I say to the gentleman that I am not trying to imply any such thing, because I knew he would not do that. I simply wanted to clarify his statement.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Certainly not.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve the right to object for the moment, and say that I was unavoidably absent, 600 miles away, and had I been here I would have voted for the bill. Knowing that there was not much opposition to it, I did not hurry back, but had I been present I would have voted for the bill.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say that I was absent unavoidably and requested to be called, but through inadvertence I was not called. If I had been here I would have voted for the bill.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I was absent yesterday. I had a general pair. I am recorded as voting against this bill. If any bill presented in this House would have received my "aye" vote, it is the bill that was voted upon yesterday. I would like to have the RECORD corrected to so state.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I also am paired on roll call No. 60 against the bill. I was unavoidably absent, due to the fact that my partner suffered a shock while in court last week and I was called home. I could not be present. Had I been present, I would have voted for the bill, and I would like the RECORD to so show.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state that I was also absent at the time of this roll call, unavoidably so, being in the committee investigating the Works Progress Administration. Had I been present, I should also have supported the legislation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I was attending the investigation of the W. P. A. downstairs. We had out-of-town witnesses and the committee was unable to leave. We sent the clerk up with instructions to the pair clerk to provide a general pair, realizing that nothing else was available. If I had been present, I would have voted for the bill.

Mr. CORBETT. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on roll call No. 60 yesterday, and would have voted for the bill had I been present.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, on roll call 60 yesterday I was detained in the Department of Commerce. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on roll call No. 60.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. RISK, was called home last Friday on account of the illness of his daughter and therefore was paired against this bill. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. RISK] is former Rhode Island commander of the American Legion. He has always been interested in veterans' affairs, and he certainly should not have been paired against this measure. He absolutely would have voted for it. I make this defense of a fine friend of the veteran.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent from the House yesterday, and I find myself recorded as paired against the bill. Had I been present, I certainly would have voted "aye" on the bill, and I wish to be so recorded.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, relating to this same measure, had I been present on yesterday I would have voted in favor of the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, had I been present yesterday on this roll call, I would have voted in favor of this measure.

Mr. JARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent yesterday on roll call No. 60. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the vote corrected on yesterday, to show that I would have voted "aye" had I been present. I was having emergency dental work done, and it was impossible for me to be here.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I was out of the city on yesterday. Had I been present, I would have voted for the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in justice to the pair clerks, it should be emphasized again what the minority leader stated, namely, that the RECORD went down to the Printing Office in proper form, but through some error that happened down there the general pairs were printed as specific pairs and not stated to be general pairs. It was not the fault of the pair clerks. Since the generous statement made by the minority leader, I have conferred with him and with the pair clerks and have examined both the original and carbon copies of the matters sent to the Printing Office. The error did not occur in our organization up here. There were no specific pairs at all in the copies that went to the Printing Office.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a short article by Paul G. Hoffman on the subject of roads.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include an editorial from the Milwaukee Journal.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, had I known I could write such a popular measure, I would also have drawn a tariff bill, and probably a power bill, a money bill, and a farm bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Has my request been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Illinois will be granted.

There was no objection.

Corrected roll call No. 60 follows:

The yeas and nays were ordered.

GOVERNMENT REORGANIZATION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, later in the day I shall submit a report from the Select Committee on Government Reorganization, reporting out the Taber resolution. It is the purpose of the committee to call the measure up tomorrow noon.

Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that debate on this bill be limited to 5 hours, to be equally divided and to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

I have conferred with all the members of the committee, and this request is perfectly satisfactory to them.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman asks for 5 hours of general debate?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes; the entire membership of the committee was present this morning, and it was agreed that 5 hours would be reasonable time for debate, 2½ hours on a side.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. When would that bring the vote?

Mr. COCHRAN. Tomorrow evening.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is the gentleman's purpose to continue until the measure is disposed of?

Mr. COCHRAN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this another reorganization bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is the Taber resolution.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to the request personally, but I call the Speaker's attention to the fact that the law provides for 10 hours' general debate on the motion to consider the proposed reorganization.

Mr. COCHRAN. Not to exceed 10 hours; but the House, by unanimous consent, can agree upon time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard about this proposal. For the present I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short statement by Matthew Woll, vice president of the American Federation of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I was amazed to find in this morning's RECORD the names of many stanch supporters of the veterans recorded as paired against the bill H. R. 5452, which was passed by the House yesterday.

It was beyond my comprehension to find such outstanding war veteran Members of the House of Representatives as HAMILTON FISH, of New York, one of the charter members of the American Legion, paired against a measure which was designed to do a simple act of justice to thousands of World War and Spanish-American War veterans, their widows, and dependents. I could not believe my eyes when I saw the name of CHARLES RISK, of Rhode Island, past department commander of the American Legion in that State, recorded as paired against a bill to increase the benefits now received by sightless, armless, and legless veterans. I was astonished to find the names of such war-veteran legislators as VINCE HARRINGTON, of Iowa; ED MCKEOUGH, of Illinois, and CHARLES FADDIS, of Pennsylvania, listed among those absent when a roll call was taken on an important piece of veteran legislation.

Among the loyal friends of the veterans, men who have supported every piece of legislation in behalf of the veterans since their election to Congress, who were listed as absent, although paired for the bill were JOE SHANNON, of Missouri; ABE MURDOCK, of Utah, and COMPTON WHITE, of Idaho.

When I reached the floor of the House, I found many other members as mystified as myself over this unusual and inexplicable situation. Several of us made an informal investigation and I wish to give the House the result. I wish to make this statement in fairness to all of the 69 Members who are recorded as absent and not voting and especially in behalf of the Members who were recorded as paired against this important piece of legislation. I make it in behalf of Democrats and Republicans alike, because there is no partisanship where the veteran is concerned.

We found that the Clerk charged with that duty had sent down to the Government Printing Office the list of the Members not voting on the roll call, together with a list of Members who had general pairs. This list of general pairs was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, following the vote of 360 to 1, for suspension of the rules, as paired for and against the bill. Below the list of those paired for and against the bill was printed a list of general pairs. Why or how this division was made nobody seems to know.

Now, it is not my purpose to place the blame for this error upon anyone, the Clerk here in the House or the officials of the Government Printing Office. I simply wish to correct an obvious error, an error that is unfair to some of the best friends the veterans have in Congress.

I have not attempted to canvass the list of Members recorded as absent and not voting or those paired for and against the bill, but I have talked with a large number of them. I found that many of those recorded as merely absent were detained on Government business but only after they had been assured there was no opposition to this bill. If they had believed there would be even a remote chance of defeating this bill they would have been present and voting—voting for the bill.

A number of the Members listed as paired against the bill told me they were most enthusiastically in favor of the measure. I cannot speak for all the Members involved in this error, but I do wish to make this statement to show that a mistake has been made in a number of instances and veterans should be slow to criticize Members on the face of this record until the Member has had an opportunity to state his position, if he wishes to do so.

As a past commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, I know the veterans throughout the country appreciate the all-but-unanimous vote cast for the bill. I am pleased to believe that if a full membership of the House had been present the vote would have been 434 to 1.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, on roll call No. 60 yesterday I voted in the affirmative. I was present in the Chamber and voted on the first call. I am carried in the RECORD as not voting. I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD and the Journal may be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Journal and the RECORD will be corrected accordingly.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MILK INVESTIGATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH], I ask unanimous consent that a subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the subcommittee investigating the milk situation in the District of Columbia, be permitted to sit during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the W. P. A. program.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by publishing a speech made by my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a report of the new industries board of the chamber of commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a statement by E. Clements Horst, an economist.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a statement prepared by Capt. Tom Kirby, of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, giving an explanation of the bill that was passed yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Private Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

MELVIN GERARD ALVEY

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4131, for the relief of Melvin Gerard Alvey.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Melvin Gerard Alvey, boatswain's mate, first-class, lifesaving, United States Coast Guard, the sum of $120.54, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for damage to and loss of his personal effects on September 17, 1934, when the Coast Guard station at Nome, Alaska, was destroyed by fire: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 361 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. COOPER, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the Chair, may I point out that I will during the course of my remarks introduce or read copies of telegrams and an envelope, and I ask unanimous consent of the House that the telegrams may be printed in capital type.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rather have the gentleman present his question of personal privilege in order to determine whether or not he has a question of personal privilege.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, there is one other request I will address to the Chair before proceeding to answer that. Since the matters and things which I am about to discuss will involve another Member of this body, with the indulgence of the Chair, I will now present to the Chair copy of telegram which I have this morning sent to the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District of California, Hon. A. J. ELLIOTT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up the telegram.

The Chair may say to the gentleman from California that, in order for the Chair to pass upon the question whether or not the gentleman presents a question of personal privilege, it is incumbent upon the gentleman from California to present for the consideration of the Chair statements or articles that reflect upon his character and reputation as a Member of the House of Representatives. The Chair is of the opinion that the telegram which the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] sent to a colleague is not a sufficient basis to present a question of personal privilege. In other words, in order to be entirely fair to the gentleman, the Chair will give him full opportunity to present his alleged question of personal privilege, and calls the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he must present for the review of the Chair some charges or attacks that have been made upon him.

The Chair is of the opinion that the telegram which the gentleman sent to another colleague, a Member of Congress, is not a sufficient basis or ground for the matter of personal privilege.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, the telegram is offered as notice that I am going to discuss the conduct of a Member of this body. I did not want to do this without giving him ample notice, and in the telegram I set forth in detail what I intend to discuss and establish by proof. For these reasons I think the telegram should be received to show that notice has been given.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman establishes the matter of personal privilege, of course he may use his own judgment about presenting the text of the telegram in his statement; however, the gentleman has not as yet presented for the consideration of the Chair any matter involving a question of personal privilege that affects the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I am confident I will be able to do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires the gentleman to do that now.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to speak in a derogatory way in reference to a colleague of this House without first demonstrating to the membership of the House that I gave him due and formal notice of exactly what I intended to say. That is the only purpose for which I sent the telegram to the desk and the only reason I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman kindly present now the matter upon which he bases his question of personal privilege?

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask the recognition of the Chair on these grounds and because of these reasons:

(a) That my rights in my representative capacity to propose and urge upon the appropriate legislative bodies the favorable consideration of legislation has been unjustifiably interfered with, restricted, and circumscribed by reason of unparliamentary, unfair, character-destroying, personal attacks, based upon falsehoods and misrepresentations by the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District of California.

(b) That my reputation in my representative capacity for truth, honesty, and integrity has been impugned and brought into question by reason of the malicious initiation and circulation of false rumors by the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District to the effect that I am a cheap, money-taking, grafting, self-serving politician in the worst sense of that term, and by the exhibition at public gatherings, open meetings, and private conferences, and in the presence of numerous persons, collectively and individually, of photostats of certain documents, among others a check purporting to be that of Mrs. Gertrude Achilles, with the representation, express and implied, that such photostats constituted and were conclusive evidence of the base character and dishonest propensities of the Representative from the Ninth District of California in respect to his representative capacity.

(c) That my conduct in my representative capacity has been maliciously misrepresented by the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District and by others deceived and misled by him, to the people of the country, and especially to the people of the Ninth and Tenth Congressional Districts of California as base, dishonest, corrupt, and as utterly inconsistent with the high obligation which is that of those who compose the membership of this honorable body, to my damage and detriment.

In support of the grounds and reasons just mentioned I present the following proofs and explanations:

Mr. Speaker, on the 7th day of February 1939 I introduced in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman pardon the Chair for just a moment? Does the gentleman state upon his responsibility as a Member that the charges to which he has referred affecting the character and reputation and standing of the gentleman who is presenting this question were made by the other gentleman from California, a Member of this House?

Mr. GEARHART. I state that on my own responsibility as a Member of this body and from affidavits which I will present in the course of this statement.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the affidavits?

Mr. GEARHART. The affidavits come to me from persons whom I know to be of the utmost respectability and upon whose word I place complete reliance.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman kindly present one or more of those affidavits for the consideration of the Chair?

Mr. GEARHART. I will state to the Chair with all due respect that I have arranged everything in chronological order, and if I am required to present my evidence in a disorderly way I am afraid the import thereof will be lost.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no disposition to interfere with the order of the gentleman's argument, but the Chair has a very solemn preliminary decision to make; that is, whether or not the gentleman has sufficient evidence of these charges being made, by affidavit or in the public prints or otherwise, before the Chair can entitle the gentleman to the floor to discuss his matter of privilege.

The Chair trusts that the Member will feel that the Chair has no inclination whatever to interfere with his method of presenting his case, but the Chair must have before him some substantive or rather conclusive evidence that the gentleman's character and reputation as a Member have been assailed. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman on a matter of personal privilege until the gentleman has furnished evidence of that fact; in other words—and the Chair does not know whether or not the gentleman is a lawyer—under the procedure here the gentleman must make out and establish a prima facie case involving the question of personal privilege. This has been the uniform practice in all cases heretofore arising in the House.

Mr. GEARHART. I may state to the Chair that I am legally trained.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has an affidavit and desires to present fully his question of privilege, the Chair suggests that the gentleman furnish it to the Chair at this point.

Mr. GEARHART. Do I understand that the Chair desires to glance at it?

The SPEAKER. Only.

Mr. GEARHART. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to mislead the gentleman. If the affidavit is offered, it probably on request will go in the RECORD; but that, the Chair thinks, will not interfere with the gentleman's presentation.

The Clerk will read the affidavit for the benefit of the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

AFFIDAVIT

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Santa Clara, ss:

Gertrude S. Achilles, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I reside near Morgan Hill, Calif.; I am interested in the proposed John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park and received literature from some of the organizations interested in the creation of that project. These communications requested me to write Congressman B. W. GEARHART and Congressman ALFRED J. ELLIOTT.

On March 4, 1939, I wrote two notes on cards; one of these I addressed to Congressman B. W. GEARHART and the other to Congressman ALFRED J. ELLIOTT, both in my own handwriting. These I enclosed in envelopes of the same type of stationery as the cards and these envelopes were large enough to hold the cards without the cards being folded. I enclosed in the envelope addressed to Congressman ALFRED J. ELLIOTT by mistake a check for $100, payable to Congressman B. W. GEARHART, which I expected to be used in furthering the project.

I later received a letter from Congressman B. W. GEARHART dated March 9, 1939, in which he thanked me for my interest in the project. I later received a letter dated March 15, 1939, from Congressman B. W. GEARHART in which he thanked me for my proffered assistance and with which he returned to me the above-mentioned check, which check I had formerly sent in the envelope addressed to Congressman ALFRED J. ELLIOTT.

I have been shown an envelope addressed by a typewriter to Congressman B. W. GEARHART, postmarked San Jose, Calif., March 13, 1939, with an air-mail sticker attached. I had never seen this envelope until it was recently shown me on March 27, 1939. I did not send this envelope to Congressman GEARHART. I do not possess any such stationery; I do not own a typewriter, and I did not authorize anyone to address such envelope for me on a typewriter. My letters are written by me in my own handwriting, as were the two notes dated March 4, 1939, above-mentioned, and I did not authorize anyone to address an envelope by a typewriter to Congressman GEARHART. I addressed but one envelope to Congressman GEARHART and that contained the note dated March 4, 1939, and was in my own handwriting.

GERTRUDE S. ACHILLES.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 1st day of April A. D. 1939.

A. M. FREE,
Notary Public in and for the County of Santa Clara, State of California.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, may I ask that the second affidavit be read, as it will indicate the misuse of the check in question by the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District of California?

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Fresno, ss.

H. B. Williams, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is a citizen of the United States of America and a resident of the County of Kings, State of California; that his postoffice address is route 2, box 417, Kingsburg, Calif.; that he is by occupation a farmer, and has resided at his present address continuously for the past 22 years;

That for sometime last past he has been in favor of the creation of the John Muir-Kings River Canyon National Park and the Pine Flat bill; that on the evening of April 13, 1939, he was invited by one W. B. Wilbur, of Tulare, Calif., to attend a conference to be held at the city of Tulare, County of Tulare, State of California, with Congressman A. J. ELLIOTT; that affiant was informed that there would be exhibited at such conference photostatic copies of certain documents that would compromise Congressman B. W. GEARHART in his efforts to establish the national park and enact the so-called Pine Flat bill; that these documents were in the possession of Congressman ELLIOTT, but that Mr. GEARHART did not know of Mr. ELLIOTT's possession of said documents.

That the following persons, all residents of Kings County, Calif., were invited by the said W. B. Wilbur to attend said conference, to wit: C. L. Montgomery, J. J. Dawson, S. W. Tome, Nick Weiss, Ralph Gilkie, Clarence Salyers, and Louis Robinson; that affiant attended said conference on Friday morning, April 14, 1939, at the offices of the Tulare Chamber of Commerce in Tulare, Calif.; that all of the persons heretofore mentioned attended said conference and in addition there were present W. B. Wilbur, R. W.

Wilbur, Congressman A. J. ELLIOTT, and three other persons unknown to this affiant; that at said conference Mr. ELLIOTT stated that he had not arranged the meeting but had received an invitation to attend;

That shortly after Mr. ELLIOTT's return to California in April of 1939 a report spread through Tulare and Kings Counties that Mr. ELLIOTT had in his possession certain documents which would discredit Mr. GEARHART and his support of the park and Pine Flat bills;

That after Mr. ELLIOTT had concluded his statement of his reasons for opposing the park bill, questions were asked him regarding the subject of insincerity on the part of those who were supporting the bills; that Mr. ELLIOTT then produced three photostats consisting (1) of an ordinary envelope addressed to A. J. ELLIOTT, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., (2) a short note or letter from Mrs. Achilles, and (3) a check in the sum of $100, made payable to W. B. GEARHART, signed by Mrs. Achilles;

That before producing the photostatic copies herein mentioned, Mr. ELLIOTT stated that he always believed Mr. GEARHART to be honest, and after exhibiting the photostatic copies herein mentioned Mr. ELLIOTT stated, in substance and effect, that those present could use their own judgment; that after affiant had inspected the check, he stated to Mr. ELLIOTT that the documents did not appear to him to be evidence of corruption, because $100 would be only small change. Mr. ELLIOTT stated to affiant that it wouldn't be small change if one received enough of them;

That during the course of the conversation one of the persons present asked Mr. ELLIOTT what had become of the check and Mr. ELLIOTT stated that he gave the check to Mr. GEARHART, but he didn't know what GEARHART had done with it.

H. B. WILLIAMS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of April 1939.

[SEAL] EMMA DELK,

Notary Public in and for the County of Fresno, State of California.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the affidavit just offered might have a tendency, although not very clearly or definitely, charging corruption, but it affords the gentleman from California a basis for a question of personal privilege, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, on the 7th day of February of 1939 I introduced in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States a bill to establish in California a new national park, to be known as the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, and to transfer thereto the lands now included in the now existing General Grant National Park.

In accordance with the rules of the House of Representatives, this bill (H. R. 3794) was duly referred to the Committee on Public Lands, where the bill at this moment now rests.

The support of this bill is widespread throughout the entire United States. Among the organizations which are supporting this measure is the Sierra Club, an organization of mountain climbers and wilderness enthusiasts. In order to further this bill this highly reputable organization caused to be issued and disseminated widely a pamphlet or brochure which bore the title "The Kings River Region Should Be a National Park."

In this pamphlet there was inserted a loose-leaf page, upon which in printed words stating that all those who favored the legislation were urged to write Congressman B. W. GEARHART, who introduced the bill, and Congressman A. J. ELLIOTT, of the House Committee on Public Lands, in expression of their approval of the measure.

For reasons quite beyond my ability to explain, my bill for the creation of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park and for the transfer thereto of certain lands in the now existing General Grant National Park incurred the bitter opposition of the Representative in Congress from the Tenth Congressional District in California, an opposition which has not abated nor been carried on with less vigor to this day.

Among the members of the Sierra Club there is listed a Gertrude Achilles, of Morgan Hill, Santa Clara County, Calif., an elderly woman of the utmost respectability, as are most of the members of the Sierra Club, if not all of them.

Mrs. Achilles became very earnestly alined in support of the legislation to which I have just referred. Upon receiving a copy of the pamphlet of the Sierra Club and reading the admonition to write to Congressman ELLIOTT and myself, Mrs. Achilles, actuated by the best of intentions, endeavored to comply with the suggested course. On March 4, 1939, she wrote a letter to me and enclosed a letter, properly addressed, with postage prepaid, in an envelope directed to me. This letter arrived in Washington in due course via 3-cent rail mail on the 9th day of March 1939 and was delivered at my office, suite 1118, New House Office Building, where it was later brought to my attention.

I will now send a copy of this letter to the Clerk, with the request that it be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

MORGAN HILL, CALIF., March 4, 1939.

Hon. Mr. GEARHART:

DEAR SIR: Please support to your utmost your bill for the creation of the John Muir National Park. He had, I am sure, no more ardent supporter, or one who appreciates what he would love to have done. Call upon me should there be need for financial help. See Mr. ELLIOTT.

Yours sincerely,

Mrs. GERTRUDE S. ACHILLES.

Am a member of the Sierra Club of San Francisco.

Mr. GEARHART. On the date that the letter from Mrs. Gertrude Achilles of March 4, 1939, was received, that is, on the 9th day of March 1939, I immediately replied. I now send to the desk of the Clerk the copy of the letter which I wrote to this most estimable lady and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 9, 1939.

Mrs. GERTRUDE S. ACHILLES,
Morgan Hill, Calif.

MY DEAR MRS. ACHILLES: I appreciate more than I can express in mere words the receiving of your letter of recent date, in which you voice your approval of H. R. 3794, which I recently introduced in the House of Representatives.

I know that you are a busy woman, but if you will spare a few minutes to write similar letters to every Member of Congress in the California delegation, I know that such action will lend tremendous impetus to our drive to have this bill enacted into finished legislation. The small and selfish minority has already flooded Washington with letters opposing the bill. It is time for the friends of this legislation to come to the rescue.

With kindest personal regards, I beg to remain,

Most cordially yours,

B. W. GEARHART,
Member of Congress.

Mr. GEARHART. On the 15th of March 1939 I received a second letter from Mrs. Gertrude S. Achilles, of Morgan Hill, Calif. Though it bore the same date as the former letter—that is, March 4, 1939—it did not reach my hands until the 15th day of March of this year.

With this second letter from Mrs. Achilles, which arrived at my office on March 15, 1939, there was enclosed a check for $100, which was drawn upon a New York bank, the name and identity of which I cannot now state or reveal, for the reason, as will very shortly appear, that I returned that check to Mrs. Achilles on the same day that it was by me received. This check was made out in favor of W. B. GEARHART, my initials being reversed.

I will now send a copy of this letter to the desk of the Clerk, and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the letter without objection.

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

MORGAN HILL, CALIF., March 4, 1939.

DEAR SIR: Kindly accept my contribution for the creation of The John Muir National Park. I have been over parts of the ground and can interest many people in the project. My son, T. C. Achilles in the State Department, joins me in furthering this project.

Wishing the bill success.

Very sincerely,

Mrs. GERTRUDE S. ACHILLES.

Mr. GEARHART. I will now send to the desk of the Clerk a copy of the envelope in which the letter of Mrs. Achilles, which has just been read, was received. And I ask that the written matter on that envelope be read including the post-office stamp cancelation markings which indicate that the letter last referred to was mailed, not in Morgan Hill, but in the city of San Jose, a city which is situate some 15 miles, more or less, from Morgan Hill.

I further point out that the envelope in which this second letter of Mrs. Achilles, which has just been read, was received was addressed in typewriting and not in longhand, as Mrs. Achilles is accustomed to address the envelopes of letters which she mails. May the envelope be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the written matter on the envelope.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

[Copy of envelope]

Via air mail.

[Post-office stamp cancelation.] "San Jose, Mar. 13, 3 p. m., 1939, Calif." [Two 3-cent stamps.]

Congressman W. B. GEARHART, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEARHART. I will not yield at this time until I finish my statement. The second letter of Mrs. Achilles, the one to which I am now referring, arrived at my office on the morning of March 15, 1939, 2 days after it was mailed in San Jose, Calif., as indicated by the stamp-cancelation marks of the Post Office Department.

During the course of that day I replied to her letter under date of March 15, 1939, and returned to her in the envelope containing my letter the check to which I have just referred.

Mr. Speaker, I now send to the desk a copy of my letter to Mrs. Achilles of March 15, 1939, and I ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the letter will be read into the RECORD.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 15, 1939.

Mrs. GERTRUDE S. ACHILLES,
Morgan Hill, Calif.

MY DEAR MRS. ACHILLES: In this morning's mail I received your brief note of the 4th instant. By way of reply, permit me to thank you most kindly for your proffered assistance in the matter of the creation of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park, a bill for which I have heretofore introduced in the House of Representatives.

In view of the fact that I have no bookkeeping system or organizational set-up for the handling of trust funds, it would be quite inconvenient for me to accept the contribution to the cause which your generous check of $100 represents. To date everything that I have expended in support of my bills has been expended out of my private funds and I really prefer to continue that way as the amounts involved are too insignificant to give me much concern. In returning the check, which I am enclosing herewith, I trust that you will understand.

My bill is being supported vigorously by several national organizations, among them the American Planning and Civic Association, 901 Union Trust Building, Washington, D. C.; the Emergency Conservation Committee of New York, of which Mrs. C. M. Edge is chairman, 734 Lexington Avenue, New York; the John Muir Association, of which Mrs. Linnie Marsh Wolfe is secretary, 2831 Garber Street, Berkeley, Calif.; and the Sierra Club, Mills Tower, San Francisco. I do not know whether or not any of these organizations accept contributions, but I do know that they have expended considerable sums in the printing of pamphlets which they have disseminated. I might suggest that you communicate with one or the other of them, as they would be very glad to know that their efforts in support of the legislation is appreciated.

Thanking you very kindly for your great interest in the success of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park legislation, and with kindest personal regards, I beg to remain,

Most cordially yours,

B. W. GEARHART,
Member of Congress.

Mr. GEARHART. About a week passes. On the 21st or 22d day of March, I received a telephone call from one, the identity of whom is to me quite unknown. The person whose voice I heard over the telephone wire conveyed to me most startling information, all of which I have since verified as a result of painstaking efforts of investigation. It is because I have verified the information so conveyed to me, the facts which I will later in my remarks of today present proof of, that I make mention at this time of this anonymous telephone call at all.

I was informed by the one who spoke that the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District of California, the Honorable A. J. ELLIOTT, had for the sole and only purpose of accomplishing the defeat of the pending legislation to which reference has already been made, fabricated an elaborate scheme for the personal entrapment of the author of the legislation, and for the purpose of accomplishing the utter destruction of the reputation of the one who now addresses this honorable body for truth, honesty, and integrity, both as a Member of this honorable body and as a citizen worthy of respect and confidence; and I was cautioned to avoid the trap and to by no means cash a certain check for $100 which the one who spoke to me had learned was to be sent to me through the cooperated activities of the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District of California and an unnamed confederate residing in the city of San Jose, county of Santa Clara, State of California.

Going into detail, my informant advised me that he had learned that the gentleman from California, [Mr. ELLIOTT] had received by mistake a note from a lady in California with which a check for $100 was enclosed which was intended for the Representative from the Ninth Congressional District of California, the one who now occupies the floor; and that he, the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT], had taken the letter and the check to the Federal Bureau of Investigation in Washington and caused the same to be photostated; that he had instructed the Federal Bureau of Investigation to dispatch a man to the New York bank upon which the check was drawn and to rephotostat the check if and when it arrived at that banking institution with the endorsement of the Representative from the Ninth Congressional District of California, and to transmit such additional photostat to the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District of California.

I was further informed by the unidentified voice that the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District of California had further instructed the Federal Bureau of Investigation to dispatch one of their operatives to Morgan Hill, Santa Clara County, Calif., to interview the said Gertrude Achilles, and to ascertain, if possible, whether or not the said Gertrude Achilles stood to profit as a consequence of the enactment of legislation for the creation of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park.

The voice concluded by words in substance and effect as follows:

He is out to frame you, Buddy, and I would not be a party to it. I had to tell you. Be on your guard.

This was the first information I had received from any source that any part or portion of my epistolary relationship with Mrs. Gertrude Achilles, Morgan Hill, Santa Clara County, Calif., was not in every respect aboveboard. It was the first information that I had received from any source that the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District had had anything to do whatever with the free exchange of letters which Mrs. Gertrude Achilles and myself had written, one to the other.

Placed on inquiry by the receipt of this information, believing that I should ascertain and reduce to evidentiary form the true facts under such circumstances that they could not thereafter be questioned, I wrote a long letter to the Honorable Arthur M. Free, an outstanding member of the bar now practicing his profession in the city of San Jose, county of Santa Clara, State of California—a gentleman of the highest integrity and also of great ability. Mr. Free is a former district attorney in and for the county of Santa Clara, State of California, and a former Member of this legislative body, representing as he did with honor and distinction the congressional district which is now known as the Eighth Congressional District of California.

I now send to the Clerk's desk a copy of this letter, and ask that it may be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 23, 1939.

Hon. ARTHUR FREE,
Attorney and Counselor at Law, San Jose, Calif.

MY DEAR ARTHUR: As you have no doubt read in the public prints, some time ago I introduced a bill for the creation of a John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park in the high Sierras of Fresno County. For no reason worth while considering, my colleague from the Tenth District of California, ALFRED J. ELLIOTT, has interested himself in promoting a vigorous opposition to the program. In his zeal for his cause he has resorted to tactics which, I do not believe, can be considered within the amities. In other words, he has so disported himself in these precincts as to have incurred my ire. In still other words, I am mad.

And when I, in the succeeding paragraphs of this communication, recite to you that which he has been reported to me as having done, I am sure that you, as a former Member of the popular branch of the National Legislature, will feel that I am not without justification. Though my displeasure may be personal in its larger aspects, it affects every other Member of this group. And I feel that I should not let the matter pass without at least endeavoring to reveal the facts.

It is because of that desire that I am assuming to impose upon you, Arthur, old friend, in this instance.

There is a lady living in Morgan Hill by the name of Mrs. Gertrude S. Achilles. Under date of March 4 she wrote me a brief communication heartily endorsing my bill for the creation of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park. In this communication she inquired as to whether or not she could be of financial help. Under date of March 9 I replied to her communication, thanked her profusely for her proffered assistance, but ignored her inquiry concerning a possible contribution to the cause.

Following this the Sierra Club, of which she asserts she is a member, and other organizations, including the John Muir Association, the American Planning and Civic Association, the Emergency Conservation Committee of New York, caused to be printed and disseminated a number of highly artistic pamphlets in each of which it was urged that the reader write to B. W. GEARHART, the author of the bill, and to A. J. ELLIOTT, a member of the Public Lands Committee, the committee to which the bill had been referred, in support of the measure. Parenthetically I might point out that ELLIOTT was specifically mentioned, because at the time of the printing of these pamphlets it was anticipated he might be in the opposition.

Again, under date of March 4, 1939, Mrs. Achilles wrote a second time and on this second occasion included a check for $100 drawn in my favor upon a New York bank. The envelope in which this second letter was sent to me was postmarked San Jose and postmarked dated March 13. The envelope, which does not fit the card, is addressed on the typewriter, not in the handwriting of the lady herself.

When I received this communication, I again wrote to Mrs. Achilles, again thanked her for her proffered assistance, and returned to her her check, with thanks, of course.

In order that you may comprehend the file to which I have herein referred, I am enclosing the all thereof herewith. Because of the importance of this correspondence to me, I trust that you when it has served your purposes will return it all to me. Because of the importance of the envelope in which the second letter came I trust that you will guard that especially.

There is nothing unusual in the facts that I have just recited. It is that which I am now about to report to you which has made me indignant.

Three Members of Congress, each one a gentleman whose confidence I must keep, have come to me and told me of a conversation which they severally had with Mr. ELLIOTT in which he said that he was going to ruin me personally by demonstrating to the House of Representatives beyond the preadventure of a doubt that I was promoting the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park bill for profit and that I was taking donations from all sources and devoting the money to my own uses. He further said that the second letter of Mrs. Achilles had been sent to him by mistake; that he had put it back, together with the check, into an envelope which he had addressed to me and sent the letter to San Jose for mailing to me in Washington. He further said that he had notified the Bureau of Investigation and that at his request they were "covering" the bank in New York and that as soon as the check with my endorsement was presented to that institution for cancelation and payment, he would be supplied with a photostatic copy..

Though I haven't expended any money out of my own pocket for the advancement of my park bill, it is my intention to separately print several of my speeches in favor of the park, and in the days to come I will probably be out a tidy sum because of my espousal of this legislation. It would have been entirely proper for me to have accepted the donation and applied the funds to that purpose. But I did not do so because I have long ago learned, as a public official, that if you take money from any person, no matter how disinterested your objective may be, your explanation is never accepted by those who are prone to suspect all persons in public office of chronic dishonesty. I had sent the check back to Mrs. Achilles simply because I did not want to incur the necessity of explanation.

But because one of my colleagues is opposed to one of my bills, he has deliberately set out to lay a trap for me. If I had stumbled into his snare he would have undoubtedly used the happening to convince those that might believe him that I was utterly without integrity, a cheap grafter, one entirely devoid of legislative decency.

Now, unless I am imposing upon you way beyond the limits which our ancient friendship would justify, I would appreciate it very, very much indeed if you would do these things for me.

Would you be good enough to interview Mrs. Achilles and obtain from her the facts? Ask her how she happened to write two cards on March 4, 1939. Ask her why she did not await my reply to her card in which she inquired of me as to whether or not she could be of financial assistance before writing the second time and enclosing the check. Exhibit to her the envelope in which the second letter came and ask her if that was from her stationery box. Inquire of her as to whether or not she addressed it or had it addressed by another. Ask her why it was mailed in San Jose rather than Morgan Hill. In other words, I would like to know all about that which has transpired there.

It may be that ELLIOTT sent the letter back to her and that she herself remailed it to me. This would relieve him of much of the guilt. This would leave him a little bit better off than he would be if he used a confederate in the City of the Roses. But even if he did return it to Mrs. Achilles, I would be interested in knowing if he included the stamped and addressed envelope for her use.

If Mrs. Achilles is a friend of my park proposal, she will, of course, very gladly cooperate. But if she is a "plant," that fact might be revealed. Anyway, I would like very, very much to know all about that which has transpired at the other end. As you know from experience, if ELLIOTT had been acting in a friendly manner as one colleague ought to be acting toward another, he would have sent Mrs. Achilles' letter to me immediately upon its receipt in his office with a brief line of transmittal. The fact that he went to all of the trouble to lay a trap for me certainly ought to condemn him as one unworthy of the association with those who endeavor to adhere to the standards which we associate with the word "gentlemen." If I could get the facts so I could clinch every nail, I wouldn't hesitate to move for his expulsion from this body. Because I feel so deeply about it, I would more than appreciate your sympathetic consideration of that which I have forced upon your attention herein. I trust that I really am not imposing too great a burden upon you.

Trusting this finds you in the best of health, and with kindest personal regards, I beg to remain,

Most cordially yours,

B. W. GEARHART,
Member of Congress.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, on the 30th day of March 1939 I received an air-mail letter from the Honorable Arthur M. Free, which bore the date of March 28, 1939, a letter which was dispatched to me by way of air mail. I now send a copy of this letter to the Clerk's desk and ask that it may be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the letter will be read into the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

REA, FREE & JACKA,
LAW OFFICES, COMMERCIAL BUILDING,
San Jose, Calif., March 28, 1939.

Hon. BERTRAND W. GEARHART,
Member of Congress, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR "BUD": I saw Mrs. Gertrude S. Achilles last night. She is an elderly and wealthy woman who is a great admirer of John Muir. She received the literature of some of the organizations interested in the new park and apologetically said that she should have sent the money to them, but having been informed that you were interested in the movement, sent the check to you, which check was finally returned and destroyed by her.

She informs me that she has never seen the envelope with the air-mail sticker attached; that she has no such envelopes, she does not own a typewriter, has no secretary who does, writes her letters in her own hands, and has them mailed at Morgan Hill; that she did not mail the envelope enclosed, nor did she have anyone mail it for her, did not address it, and that the envelope did not come out of her possession.

I therefore conclude that all of your surmises are correct and that your friend ELLIOTT tried to job you by having the check mailed in that envelope here in San Jose.

If I can be of further service in the matter, please advise me. Mrs. Achilles says that she will do anything to help you out in the matter, as she feels that the trouble arose from the fact that she sent the check to you and not one of the organizations interested in the movement.

I return herewith note of Mrs. Achilles dated March 4, 1939, attached to carbon copy of your letter dated March 15, 1939, also card of hers dated March 4, 1939, attached to carbon copy of your letter dated March 9, 1939, and envelope addressed with a typewriter with air-mail sticker attached, showing it to have been mailed in San Jose, Calif.

Hoping this finds you well, and with kindest regards, I am,

Yours very truly,

A. M. FREE.

Mr. GEARHART. Immediately following the receipt on March 30 of the letter of the Honorable Arthur M. Free, which has just been read, I dispatched a telegram to my correspondent, a telegram which I am now sending to the desk of the Clerk, and which I ask may be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the telegram.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 30, 1939.

Hon. ARTHUR FREE,
Attorney and Counselor at Law, San Jose, Calif.:

Letter received; greatly appreciate cooperation. Please make every effort to obtain affidavit reciting all facts in detail. If subject has no idea how second letter to me was misdirected, opinion would be interesting. Realize preparation of affidavit is legal matter, and I will insist upon compensating you for your services.

GEARHART, M. C.

Mr. GEARHART. At the same time that I caused the telegram to be sent to the Honorable Arthur M. Free, of San Jose, the telegram which has just been read, I also caused a telegram to be sent to Mrs. Gertrude S. Achilles at Morgan Hill, Calif.

I now send a copy of this telegram to Gertrude S. Achilles to the desk of the Clerk and ask that it may be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the telegram.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 30, 1939.

MRS. GERTRUDE S. ACHILLES,
Morgan Hill, Calif.:

Would deeply appreciate your further cooperation in respect to matter concerning that which former Congressman Free discussed with you. Opponents resorting to foul methods. Your assistance now would be very helpful. Mr. Free will communicate with you again I am sure.

Congressman B. W. GEARHART.

Mr. GEARHART. On the day following, that is, on the 31st day of March 1939, I sent a second telegram to the Honorable Arthur M. Free at San Jose, Calif.

I now send to the Clerk's desk a copy of this telegram of March 31, 1939, and ask that it may be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the telegram.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARCH 31, 1939.

ARTHUR FREE,
Attorney at Law, Commercial Building,
San Jose, Calif.:

Is it correct to infer, since both letters bear same date of March 4, that subject wrote both letters that day. Did she write other Congressmen, including ELLIOTT, at same time. If so insertion of letter to me in wrong envelope by mistake would account for mystery. Am most anxious to have Mrs. Achilles' affidavit at earliest possible moment. Other evidence amassed here complete. Have telegraphed subject urging cooperative assistance.

GEARHART, M. C.

Mr. GEARHART. On or about the 3d day of April 1939, I received a letter from the Honorable Arthur M. Free at San Jose, Calif., which was sent to me via air mail, a letter which was written to me in response to my previous communications with him.

I now send a copy of the letter of the Honorable Arthur M. Free of April 1, 1939, to the desk of the Clerk and ask that it may be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

REA, FREE & JACKA,
LAW OFFICES, COMMERCIAL BUILDING,
San Jose, Calif., April 1, 1939.

Hon. B. W. GEARHART,
Member of Congress, House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR BUD: I herewith enclose affidavit of Mrs. Gertrude S. Achilles, which I think covers all of the matters in which you are interested in regard to the $100 check. I purposely did not put into the affidavit the fact that the check had been destroyed.

If you need anything more let me know.

You spoke of compensating me for this work. I would not think of this, as I may want to impose upon your congressional generosity some time. In fact, if you feel real kindly, you could get me copies of the United States Statutes since 1932 and a copy of the latest Congressional Directory; I would forgive you for all your past sins.

Sincerely yours, A. M. FREE.

P. S.—I dictated the above before I saw Mrs. Achilles today. When I got to her home, she said the Department of Justice was sending a man down to see her and would I stay until he arrived. I did. She told him the story as it was and I gave him a copy of the affidavit herein enclosed duly signed and sworn to by her. His name was Thurston. He was very pleasant and agreed with me that this was an attempt by ELLIOTT to make trouble for you.—A. M. F.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, at this point I had intended to have the affidavit of Mrs. Achilles included in my remarks. May I ask unanimous consent to have it considered read and included in the RECORD at this point?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The affidavit referred to follows:

AFFIDAVIT

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Santa Clara, ss:

Gertrude S. Achilles, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I reside near Morgan Hill, Calif.; I am interested in the proposed John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park and received literature from some of the organizations interested in the creation of that project. These communications requested me to write Congressman B. W. GEARHART and Congressman ALFRED J. ELLIOTT.

On March 4, 1939, I wrote two notes on cards; one of these I addressed to Congressman B. W. GEARHART and the other to Congressman ALFRED J. ELLIOTT, both in my own handwriting. These I enclosed in envelopes of the same type of stationery as the cards, and these envelopes were large enough to hold the cards without the cards being folded. I enclosed in the envelope addressed to Congressman ALFRED J. ELLIOTT by mistake a check for $100, payable to Congressman B. W. GEARHART, which I expected to be used in furthering the project.

I later received a letter from Congressman B. W. GEARHART, dated March 9, 1939, in which he thanked me for my interest in the project. I later received a letter dated March 15, 1939, from Congressman B. W. GEARHART, in which he thanked me for my proferred assistance and with which he returned to me the above-mentioned check, which check I had formerly sent in the envelope addressed to Congressman ALFRED J. ELLIOTT.

I have been shown an envelope addressed by a typewriter to Congressman B. W. GEARHART, postmarked San Jose, Calif., March 13, 1939, with an air-mail sticker attached. I had never seen this envelope until it was recently shown me on March 27, 1939. I did not send this envelope to Congressman GEARHART. I do not possess any such stationery, I do not own a typewriter, and I did not authorize anyone to address such envelope for me on a typewriter. My letters are written by me in my own handwriting, as were the two notes dated March 4, 1939, above mentioned, and I did not authorize anyone to address an envelope by a typewriter to Congressman GEARHART. I addressed but one envelope to Congressman GEARHART, and that contained the note dated March 4, 1939, and was in my own handwriting.

GERTRUDE S. ACHILLES.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 1st day of April, A. D. 1939.

A. M. FREE,
Notary Public in and for the County of Santa Clara,
State of California.

Mr. GEARHART. Pending the receipt of definite information from the Honorable Arthur M. Free, of San Jose, Calif., and the affidavit of Mrs. Gertrude Achilles, of Morgan Hill, Calif., I caused due inquiry to be made concerning the activities of the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District of California in respect to my exchange of correspondence with Mrs. Gertrude Achilles, of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice at Washington, D. C., and became fully informed in respect to that which had occurred.

Being desirous of a full and complete report from that very efficient agency of our Federal Government, I, on the 25th day of April 1939, addressed a letter to the Honorable Frank Murphy, Attorney General of the United States, in which I requested that I be advised in detail concerning the investigation which had theretofore been conducted at the request and under the direction of the Representative in Congress from the Tenth District of California, and that I be furnished with a report in respect to the results thereof.

In order that my right to this very great consideration might be made more definite and clear, I sought and obtained and was graciously accorded a personal interview by the Attorney General of the United States who, after fully considering the subject, directed that I be furnished in writing with the information desired.

In full compliance with my request for a report from the Department of Justice, I received on April 28, 1939, a letter from the Honorable John Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of the United States Department of Justice, to which was attached a copy of a letter of even date from the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to the Representative in Congress from the Tenth Congressional District of California, the Honorable ALFRED J. ELLIOTT.

I now send the Honorable John Edgar Hoover's letter to me of April 28, 1939, to the desk of the Clerk and ask that it and the attached letter to the Representative in Congress from the Tenth Congressional District in California be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1939.

Hon. BERTRAND W. GEARHART,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: With reference to your letter of April 25, 1939, I am enclosing herewith a copy of a letter which I have today directed to the Honorable ALFRED J. ELLIOTT, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

With expressions of my highest esteem and best regards,

Sincerely yours,

J. EDGAR HOOVER.

APRIL 28, 1939.

Hon. ALFRED J. ELLIOTT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: With reference to the interview conducted at your request with you on March 11, 1939, concerning information reaching you indicating that Congressman BERTRAND W. GEARHART had received a check in the amount of $100 from Gertrude S. Achilles, I desire to advise you that a complete investigation has been made into the facts in this situation. The investigation conducted by the Bureau discloses that the check sent to Congressman GEARHART by Gertrude S. Achilles was not only not cashed by Congressman GEARHART but was returned to Gertrude S. Achilles, who subsequently destroyed this check. It appears, therefore, that the conduct of Congressman GEARHART in this situation was entirely proper.

In accordance with your request I am returning herewith the photostatic copies of the documents which you submitted.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Honorable BERTRAND W. GEARHART, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Sincerely yours.

Mr. GEARHART. For a week or 10 days, perhaps 2 weeks, prior to the 6th day of April 1939, the House of Representatives Committee on the Public Lands had been conducting hearings in respect to the bill which is now pending before that committee for the creation of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park and for the inclusion in said park of the lands now embraced in the now existing General Grant National Park. The last witness to appear before that committee was the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District of California, Mr. ELLIOTT. During the course of his testimony the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District of California frequently protested his warm and fervent friendship for the Representative of the Ninth Congressional District, the author of the bill. Regretting, as he indicated, the necessity of his opposition to the creation of the park, he constantly referred to the one who now occupies the floor as "my friend, Mr. GEARHART," and took pains to relate to the members of the Public Lands Committee that the Representatives of the Ninth and Tenth Congressional Districts in California have always "been good friends." So frequently did the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District of California repeat such phrases as "my good friend, Mr. GEARHART," that the Representative of the Ninth Congressional District of California became convinced that the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District of California, upon being informed that the Representative of the Ninth Congressional District of California had not cashed the Gertrude Achilles check but had returned it to the sender, was trying to make amends for his unparliamentary conduct in endeavoring to entrap a colleague.

Being completely deceived by the attitude of the Representative from the Tenth District in California toward the Representative from the Ninth Congressional District of California, indignant as he had been theretofore because of what he regarded as an outrageous attempt to misrepresent him in respect to that which was in every respect an honorable transaction, was inclined toward dropping the whole subject and saying nothing more of or concerning the carefully concocted and fabricated plot and plan to accomplish his destruction.

On or about the 7th or 8th, perhaps the 9th, of April 1939, the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District of California decided to return to his district for the purpose of rendering an account to his constituents in respect to his activities as a Member of the Congress of the United States.

As soon as the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District of California arrived within his congressional district, rumors began to circulate "like wildfire" among the people of the counties of Kern and Tulare in the Tenth Congressional District and in the counties of Kings and Fresno in the Ninth Congressional District, to the effect that the Representative of the Ninth Congressional District was a crook, a cheap, grafting politician, who had introduced and was now supporting the bill for the creation of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park for the sole purpose of profit; that the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District in California had cleverly set a trap for the Representative from the Ninth Congressional District, and caught him, had possessed himself of photostats of letters and checks and other evidence which, when revealed to the public and to the Members of the House of Representatives, would completely destroy the reputation of the Representative of the Ninth Congressional District for truth, honesty, and integrity and drive him from public life; that the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District of California would produce said letters, documents, and check photostats at the proper time, so the rumor had it.

That the Representative of the Ninth Congressional District of California has heretofore been informed by numerous persons, persons who are entitled to the highest credibility and in whom the Representative of the Ninth Congressional District of California reposes the greatest confidence, and he doth verily believe from such information so conveyed to him, that the Representative of the Tenth Congressional District of California has, on at least four occasions in public meetings, and to hundreds of individuals in private conversation, exhibited the photostat of (1) Mrs. Gertrude Achilles' letter to the Representative of the Ninth Congressional District, (2) a photostat of Mrs. Achilles' check for $100 drawn upon a New York bank in favor of W. B. GEARHART, and (3) a photostat of an envelope addressed to Congressman A. J. ELLIOTT, Representative in Congress, Washington, D. C., with the representation expressed and implied, that such photostats constituted proof positive of the base character and cheap grafting propensities of the Representative of the Ninth Congressional District of California.

Upon receiving the information of the character just mentioned and described, the Representative in and for the Ninth District of California telegraphed to one H. B. Williams, a long-time and a most highly respected resident of the county of Kings, State of California, a person who, so the Representative for the Ninth Congressional District of California had been informed, and did verily believe, had attended at least one of said meetings and with his own eyes and ears had witnessed the performance and listened to the words of the Representative of the Tenth District in California, and urged the said H. B. Williams to appear before an attorney of undoubted respectability and make an affidavit of that which he observed and heard.

I now send to the desk of the Clerk a copy of my telegram to the said H. B. Williams and ask that it be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the telegram.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

APRIL 19, 1939.

Mr. H. B. WILLIAMS,
District Deputy, Kings County Pomona Grange,
Route 2, Box 331, Kingsburg, Fresno County, Calif.:

Your letter received. Astonished by information you convey. Please have affidavit by someone, preferably yourself, executed before an attorney-notary which will emphasize following facts: First, that immediately after return of ELLIOTT to California rumors began to circulate that I was corrupt and that I had accepted money for supporting park bill and that ELLIOTT had in his possession photostats of checks including a $100 check. Second, fully describe incident when others were present that ELLIOTT exhibited photostats describing same in accordance with best memory of them. Other matters you mention in your letter equally false and equally outrageous but I will deal with them later. Must have sworn proof of circulation of rumors shortly after his arrival and of his exhibition of photostats with implied or express representation of personal corruption on my part. Since this involves my very character, not only as an official but as a citizen, I sincerely hope that I can have your full cooperation in revealing this dastardly attempt to ruin me through false representations when he fully and well knows that I have not ever accepted one red cent because of my espousal of this or any other bill. Any legal expense you are put to will be promptly reimbursed out of my personal funds. Suggest employment of highly ethical lawyer such as Gilbert Jertberg or Philip Conley in Fresno, or Sidney Sharp in Hanford. As soon as lawyer selection is made telegraph me and I will phone him long distance with supplemental information in respect to requirements for Washington use. For reasons that are obvious, please treat this matter confidential in California until I can handle it here. Fondest fraternal regards.

Congressman B. W. GEARHART.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, in due course I received the affidavit of H. B. Williams from California, the affidavit which was read earlier in the day. I ask unanimous consent that that affidavit of H. B. Williams may be considered as having been read at this point and be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The affidavit referred to is as follows:

AFFIDAVIT OF H. B. WILLIAMS

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
County of Fresno, ss:

H. B. Williams, being first duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is a citizen of the United States of America and a resident of the county of Kings, State of California; that his postoffice address is Route 2, Box 417, Kingsburg, Calif.; that he is by occupation a farmer and has resided at his present address continuously for the past 22 years.

That for some time last past he has been in favor of the creation of the John Muir-Kings River Canyon National Park and the Pine Flat bill; that on the evening of April 13, 1939, he was invited by one W. B. Wilbur, of Tulare, Calif., to attend a conference to be held at the city of Tulare, county of Tulare, State of California, with Congressman A. J. ELLIOTT; that affiant was informed that there would be exhibited at such conference photostatic copies of certain documents that would compromise Congressman B. W. GEARHART in his efforts to establish the national park and enact the so-called Pine Flat bill; that these documents were in the possession of Congressman ELLIOTT, but that Mr. GEARHART did not know of Mr. ELLIOTT's possession of said documents.

That the following persons, all residents of Kings County, Calif., were invited by the said W. B. Wilbur to attend said conference, to wit: C. L. Montgomery, J. J. Dawson, S. W. Tome, Nick Weiss, Ralph Gilkie, Clarence Salyers, and Louis Robinson; that affiant attended said conference on Friday morning, April 14, 1939, at the offices of the Tulare Chamber of Commerce in Tulare, Calif.; that all of the persons heretofore mentioned attended said conference and in addition there were present W. B. Wilbur, R. W. Wilbur, Congressman A. J. ELLIOTT, and three other persons unknown to this affiant; that at said conference Mr. ELLIOTT stated that he had not arranged the meeting but had received an invitation to attend;

That shortly after Mr. ELLIOTT's return to California in April of 1939 a report spread through Tulare and Kings Counties that Mr. ELLIOTT had in his possession certain documents which would discredit Mr. GEARHART and his support of the Park and Pine Flat bills;

That after Mr. ELLIOTT had concluded his statement of his reasons for opposing the Park bill, questions were asked him regarding the subject of insincerity on the part of those who were supporting the bills; that Mr. ELLIOTT then produced three photostats consisting (1) of an ordinary envelope addressed to A. J. ELLIOTT, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.; (2) a short note or letter from Mrs. Achilles; and (3) a check in the sum of $100 made payable to B. W. GEARHART, signed by Mrs. Achilles;

That before producing the photostatic copies herein mentioned, Mr. ELLIOTT stated that he always believed Mr. GEARHART to be honest, and after exhibiting the photostatic copies herein mentioned Mr. ELLIOTT stated, in substance and effect, that those present could use their own judgment; that after affiant had inspected the check, he stated to Mr. ELLIOTT that the documents did not appear to him to be evidence of corruption, because $100 would be only small change. Mr. ELLIOTT stated to affiant that it wouldn't be small change if one received enough of them;

That during the course of the conversation one of the persons present asked Mr. ELLIOTT what had become of the check, and Mr. ELLIOTT stated that he gave the check to Mr. GEARHART, but he didn't know what GEARHART had done with it.

H. B. WILLIAMS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of April 1939.

[SEAL] EMMA DELK,
Notary Public in and for the County of Fresno, State of California.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, the allegations in this affidavit speak for themselves. In the light of that which I have heretofore said and sent to the desk to be read by the Clerk, there is nothing, it strikes me, that requires from me at this time any further explanation, admissions, or denials, save one allegation.

Addressing myself to that allegation, I do now, and upon my integrity as a Member of this body, deny, and deny as effectively as I can, that the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District of California ever exhibited to me, least of all, gave to me, the Gertrude Achilles check for $100, or any other check of any kind or character, either relating to the matters and things in my remarks of today more specifically mentioned or in respect to any other matter.

And in this connection I desire to further state and emphasize that to this day the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District in California has maintained, insofar as the Representative from the Ninth Congressional District is concerned, a complete silence in respect to his activities and knowledge of the matters and things which I have today referred to in such detail.

In other words, the Representative from the Tenth Congressional District of California, though he has had every opportunity in the world so to do, has never made mention at any time of anything in which Gertrude Achilles or the Representative from the Ninth Congressional District of California might be involved.

Rumors of the kind hereinbefore described, initiated and deliberately circulated by the Representative in Congress from the Tenth Congressional District of California in public meetings, private conferences, and in conversations with innumerable individuals, as aforesaid, soon found their way into the public prints of California. In the Los Angeles Daily News of April 20, 1939, a newspaper of general circulation distributing in the neighborhood of 100,000 copies each day, under a two-column headline entitled "Trap Set for Congressman Fails to Land Victim," prints the sordid story of Mrs. Gertrude Achilles' check, giving currency to the rumor to which I have hereinbefore frequently referred.

On April 27, 1939, the San Francisco News, a newspaper of general circulation distributing in the neighborhood of 100,000 copies each day, carries the story under the title or caption of "Two Congressmen Plus One G-Man Enjoy Red Faces," in which further currency to the rumor of the corruption of the author of the bill for the creation of the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park is given.

Mr. Speaker, this has been the performance of the most unpleasant duty of my life. If there is anything I have—or anything that you have—that is worth fighting to retain, it is the reputation I have spent a lifetime building. I say it is wrong, terribly wrong, for one of our body to even attempt to set the kind of a trap that he did in respect to a transaction in itself, per se, honest and honorable in every one of its phases, to set a trap for the sole and only purpose of destroying me to defeat a bill that I have in accordance with my right as a Member of this body introduced and offered for your consideration. But I say it is damnable for one of our body, after he knows that the trap he has set has failed to catch its quarry, after he knows the check had not been cashed, to take to California photostats of that check and refer to them, to take them to California and exhibit them in public meetings and, by implication, as set forth in the affidavits before you, to tell the people that assembled about him asking a report upon his activities in Congress that the check represented evidence of my corruption, to spread rumors everywhere, from one end of the San Joaquin Valley to the other. I say that is wrong.

I have searched the precedents of this body, searched them down through the 150 years of the history of this body, and I fail to find one case referred to in those proceedings that even approaches that which I have been compelled to lay before you.

I ask no action. There was a time when I thought of expulsion. There was a time when I thought of disciplinary action. But that is all of the past now. The record is made. I am content. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak at this time on the false statements made by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] of District 9 of California.

The SPEAKER. For how long a period of time does the gentleman desire to speak?

Mr. ELLIOTT. From 30 to 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to address the House for 40 minutes. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] has painted a picture to make the Members feel that I had no right to ask for an investigation of this check. Never at any time did I display this check to more than eight Members of the House of Representatives, a member of the F. B. I., and the clerk of the Public Lands Committee. While I was in California I was asked to display this check, and when I did I said, "This check has not been cashed, to my knowledge, and I am not doing anything to hurt Mr. GEARHART's feelings" [laughter]; and when displaying it I reaffirmed my belief a second time, and the Members of the House, to whom I showed this check, will verify that those were the words I spoke to them.

Now, I am compelled to go back to bring out why I asked for an investigation on this check. There is always a reason to bring out the facts.

In 1938 the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DEROUEN], of the Public Lands Committee, introduced a bill in the House, sponsored by the Department of the Interior, known as Kings Canyon National Park bill. That bill was tabled. At that time I made the statement to three different people in Mr. GEARHART's district that he was interested in this bill. I learned from the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] that he was not interested in the bill, and I wrote letters in his district restracting my statement.

Along after primary elections were over in August the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] made numerous talks in his district discussing this park bill and Pine Flat Dam in connection therewith, two separate bills.

In January, on returning to Congress, I spoke to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] and asked if he was going to introduce this bill and he told me he was. He did not tell me what area he was going to take in. However, this bill takes in an area in my Tenth Congressional District and in my home county.

In February Mr. Ickes, Secretary of the Department of the Interior, made a trip to California, and while there talked to various groups in behalf of this bill.

The State legislature, in January of 1939, by approximately an 85-percent vote, voted against the creation of this area into a national park in the State of California.

While Mr. Ickes was in California, he brought pressure to bear on various individuals to furnish resolutions supporting both his and Mr. GEARHART's bills, even to the point wherein he publicly made the statement:

> I have been Santa Claus to California and this is the first time I have ever asked for anything.

On February 7, 1939, the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] introduced those bills, and I received the check the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] spoke about after that date. As I told you, I conversed with eight other House Members, who advised me what to do. Contrary to Mr. GEARHART's statement, I did not send the check to California personally. Contrary to the statement he made that the first letter sent to me—and the only letter I received from this party—was sent from Morgan Hill, I have a photostatic copy which shows San Jose, Calif., canceled postmark.

Now, what happened? The bill was picking up momentum from the ones opposing and the ones in favor.

On Mr. Ickes' trip to California he told the people of that State:

> If you will give me the park bill, I will support the $25,000,000 Pine Flat Dam; in other words, you have got to trade with me, if you expect to get what you want in flood control and power, but in return I want the park bill.

So men went out and worked upon that theory, namely, if we do not give Mr. Ickes his park, he will work against our Pine Flat Dam bill.

So that was the kind of program that was built up, and in the meantime I was offered different things for my district if I would withdraw my objections and comply with Mr. Ickes' program.

On the 13th day of March I was called down to the Department of the Interior by Mr. Ickes. He said, "I guess you know what I asked you to come for." I said, "No, sir; I presume the Central Valley's water project." "No," he answered, "It is about the park bill." I replied, "Mr. Ickes, my people do not want the park bill." He said, "That is what you think; but your people do want the park bill." Then he informed me that he held the strings to the money bags and if I did not withdraw my objections, I would not receive certain favors in my congressional district.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I will not yield at this time.

My secretary was present in the Department of the Interior. He said, "If you have any fear that you will be defeated in 1940—and I have never told this to any other Congressman—I will go out in your district and will make a public speech in your behalf." [Laughter.] Continuing, he said, "If this bill is killed, young man, I am laying this at your doorstep and a block of Republicans." [Laughter.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As the gentleman knows, I am a member of the Committee on Public Lands and participated in the cross-examination of Secretary Ickes when he was on the stand.

Mr. ELLIOTT. You are telling me a story now. I did not yield for that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to ask this question: Was Secretary Ickes cross-examined by you or anyone else upon the subject you are now telling this House about?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I am coming to that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, answer the question. Was he?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR. You know that there never was a single suggestion made to Secretary Ickes with reference to what you are now speaking about before that committee.

Mr. ELLIOTT. We are not through with the bill yet.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, answer that question. It was never even suggested to him?

Mr. ELLIOTT. What do you mean, "suggested"?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That he had made you any promises in support of that bill?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I said we are not finished with the bill yet. I can still make a statement on that.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No further.

Now, the point I want to bring out is this: After Mr. Ickes' invitation to his mansion, where he promised me various things and made suggestions, and told me I would not get this or I would not get that, on the afternoon of the same day Congressman GEARHART came to my office, sat down, and he said just this, "A. J., you should withdraw your objections and go up to the Department of the Interior with me and Mr. Ickes and have your picture taken." [Laughter.] He said, "I can get you additional things for your district if you will just do that."

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The point of order I make is this: I do not know whether it is well taken or not, but the gentleman is stating remarks that somebody else is supposed to have made, that would not be in evidence in any court on God's green earth. Can a man come here and villify another man and say, "This man told me so and so," and introduce it as evidence? I am just asking.

The SPEAKER. The House gave the gentleman unanimous consent to address the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Are there not any rules regulating what he shall say? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in answer to the point of order that the gentleman is replying to a question of privilege. The Chair knows of no limitation that can be placed upon his statements. There is no evidence, under the rules of the House, to be submitted by the gentleman from California.

The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. ELLIOTT. If I may be permitted now to finish: There is a trade on this proposed park measure. The gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] is aware of the fact. There is private ownership involved in this area that very few people know about. The transfer of this area—over 400,000 acres—has led to talk throughout the Nation, "Save the big trees." The gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] said before the Public Lands Committee:

> You don't saw; you dynamite. When you fell these trees they come thundering to the ground in little splinters to rot. Only a small percentage is used for commercial purposes. Those are for redwood posts and grape stakes.

Now, Members of the House, where these big trees lie is not in this area [indicating on map]. The big trees are over here on Redwood Mountain, 30 miles distant. You are going to be called upon to purchase from private ownership those trees. In the same breath the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] testified that there were no natural resources in this area [indicating]. Then when we in committee had a representative of the Federal Power Commission on the stand, he testified that the area contained a second Boulder Dam, making available 800,000 horsepower; 3,600,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy to be created in this high area supported by dams.

When I received this check, knowing that private ownership depended on selling Redwood Mountain, not knowing who this interested party might be, I did not deliberately nor otherwise go out to wreck Mr. GEARHART's life. I wanted to find out if there were some people interested who were relatives of this lady who wanted to sell Redwood Mountain to the Government. There is a bill in the Senate calling for $460 an acre for this area. When I talked to the F. B. I. I specified: "I don't want to do anything to hurt the character of Congressman BUD GEARHART. All I am asking you to do is to follow this thing through, and your findings will be divulged to me and nobody else. But if you find that this check has been destroyed, I want you, when you write a letter to me, to submit a duplicate copy to BUD GEARHART." If that F. B. I. official were here, he would affirm those words; that and nothing more.

Now, after knowing that there was a transaction regarding privately owned property; knowing that Mr. Ickes had been in California trying to buy this area at a lesser price than the Senate bill called for; knowing that Mr. Ickes went to California at the expense of the Government; knowing that Mr. Ickes on three or four different occasions in one day called California at the expense of the Government relative to the proposed park bill; knowing he also called the Southern Pacific of California to do what it could to stop me, and that he had endeavored to influence my friends—even Mr. McAdoo has been drawn into the picture with one of my close friends to try to stop my opposition to this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with such situation existing and then having something of this nature coming up, I felt justified in following it up as I did. I think it has been a funny deal clear down the line. I wanted to know more about this piece of legislation. I wanted to know whether people were attempting to influence legislation with money.

Here is something that has been mailed out; maybe some of you received a copy of it. It reads:

> Emergency Conservation Committee. Mrs. C. N. Edge, chairman, 734 Lexington Avenue, New York. Will you kindly help us in our campaign to establish the John Muir-Kings Canyon National Park? Enclosed find—

And a blank space is left in which the amount of money may be indicated.

Knowing that these things were being mailed to people I felt I had a perfect right as a member of the Committee on the Public Lands to follow this check through to see if they were relatives, or if the party owned property in this area where the Federal Government was going to be called upon to purchase land. It had nothing to do with destroying the character of the gentleman from California "BUDDY" GEARHART, at any time. I was acting within my perfect right.

When I went into my district I did not hold a public meeting. Men came to my office in the Tulare Chamber of Commerce, as I am executive secretary of that organization and also manager of the county fair held on the grounds there. Individuals came to my office and said they heard I had a check and wanted to see it. I never advertised it, and when I showed it to them, I said: "Ladies and gentlemen, this is no reflection on Mr. GEARHART." I followed the method I had been advised to pursue. I did not—and I will take an oath on it—address the envelope back to California, nor did anyone in my office. Neither were the photostatic copies made in the F. B. I. I did not want anyone to know of this incident, but I did want to find out its significance, if any, since it was rumored to me on numerous occasions that various persons were interested in the outcome of the legislation.

Let me repeat that Mr. Ickes was doing his utmost to put this thing over and laying the blame of the opposition to me.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I cannot yield at this time. Mr. Ickes laid the blame on me. It was said that I was working in the interest of the power people, which is a false statement.

When I showed this check to the Members here, to the clerk of the committee, to the F. B. I., I properly protected the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]. Whoever says I did not is guilty of a gross misrepresentation.

Mr. Ickes through his method of operation made it more probable for me to believe that there was perhaps money involved in this issue.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No.

Mr. Speaker, let me say further that out in California the Argonaut, a famous California weekly founded in 1877, published at San Francisco, in its issue of April 21, printed the following statement:

> Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, and a leading proponent of the park plan, said: "We would have had this bill reported favorably by the House committee long before this if it had not been for the stubborn opposition of Congressman ELLIOTT and Congressman ENGLEBRIGHT, of California, who seem determined to defeat this bill at all costs, regardless of its merits."

They are now bringing the gentleman from California, Congressman ENGLEBRIGHT, into the picture. [Laughter.]

> "In face of the bitter, unfair, and foul tactics," he says, "of those who oppose the development of our mountains and valleys in the interest of the people, to stop now would constitute surrender, which I for one will not be a party to. Not alone have they resorted to 'phony' telegrams and unauthorized objections, but they have stooped so low as to sequester from stenographic reports letters and documents which I, during course of my testimony, introduced in the record. Not only that but effort has been made to entrap me, and by misrepresentation to destroy my reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity, and all this just to defeat a legislative proposal."

There he points out that the gentleman from California, Congressman ENGLEBRIGHT, and I deliberately mislaid, misplaced, and took away evidence from the committee. I challenge any member of the Committee on the Public Lands to stand up and say that either the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT] or I took a single document away from the committee.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, who made that charge?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Ickes. Ickes charges that the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT] and I were working together.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. What has Ickes' statement got to do with an answer to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]? What paper is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The Argonaut, a California paper.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. What issue?

Mr. ELLIOTT. April 21, 1939.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman answering Mr. Ickes? As one Member who granted unanimous consent to the gentleman from California to address the House I withheld objection because the gentleman said he was going to answer the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART], not try Mr. Ickes here. [Laughter.]

Mr. ELLIOTT. We are not trying Mr. Ickes here. Yet in the face of this publication it is reasonable to presume that a correspondence between Mr. Ickes and the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART], have brought them to the rash conclusion that as opponents to the Gearhart bill we are guilty of "bitter, unfair, and foul tactics." That is the representation made to a publication which on its own assertion is "read and quoted throughout the world." Both Mr. Ickes and the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] share this opinion just because there is opposition to his legislation. If conscientious bona fide opposition to an issue signifies foul tactics then there is a warped viewpoint as to what really is fair and what is foul. In further answer: The statement that the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] made, that I at any time made any allegation in California detrimental to him, regardless of who made it, is a false statement, and I challenge anyone who makes such a statement to prove its truth.

There are three or four members of the Public Lands Committee of the House who saw this check. At no time to those members or the other four members did I ever say anything against the gentleman from California, Congressman GEARHART. I only wanted this check followed through, knowing the volume of money and time that had been taken up by Secretary Ickes to try to shove this piece of legislation down the people's throats. I could not help but reasonably believe there was something funny down the line.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why did the gentleman take that photostatic copy to California after he knew that the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] had not cashed the check?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I did not have it. It was air-mailed to me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did somebody out there ask you to see it?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why did the gentleman show it if he knew it was not cashed?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I did not know at that time whether or not the check had been cashed.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman did not know it had been cashed?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No. Not until I returned to Washington, April 21. Here is the photostatic copy of the check and letter and also the letter from the F. B. I., dated April 28. You will note the letter from Mrs. Gertrude S. Achilles is addressed to me postmarked "San Jose, Calif., March 5"; the letter is headed, "Morgan Hill, Calif., March 4," and the check to W. B. GEARHART is dated March 2.

Pay to the order of W. B. GEARHART one hundred dollars.

GERTRUDE S. ACHILLES.

MORGAN HILL, CALIF., March 4, 1939.

DEAR SIR: Kindly accept my contribution for the creation of the John Muir National Park. I have been over parts of the ground and can interest many people in the project. My son, T. C. Achilles, in the State Department, joins me in furthering this project.

Wishing the bill success,

Very sincerely,

FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1939.

Hon. ALFRED J. ELLIOTT,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: With reference to the interview conducted at your request with you on March 11, 1939, concerning information reaching you indicating that Congressman BERTRAND W. GEARHART had received a check in the amount of $100 from Gertrude S. Achilles, I desire to advise you that a complete investigation has been made into the facts in this situation. The investigation conducted by the Bureau discloses that the check sent to Congressman GEARHART by Gertrude S. Achilles was not only not cashed by Congressman GEARHART but was returned to Gertrude S. Achilles, who subsequently destroyed this check. It appears, therefore, that the conduct of Congressman GEARHART in this situation was entirely proper.

In accordance with your request, I am returning herewith the photostatic copies of the documents which you submitted.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Honorable BERTRAND W. GEARHART, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Sincerely yours,

J. EDGAR HOOVER.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Who asked you to see it?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Ickes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How did they learn out in California about this check?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I do not know. I never wrote a letter about it. I never sent a telegram, and I never mentioned it over the telephone.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What did the gentleman do with the check after he received it in Washington? To whom did he give it?

Mr. ELLIOTT. To whom did I give it?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. A party in Washington.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Who was it? Name him. We want to know how that check got back to California and remailed to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. ELLIOTT. I did not mail the check.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I know the gentleman did not, but the gentleman said he gave it to someone.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. To whom did you give it? I am sure the House is interested in what the gentleman did with the check after he received it. I feel friendly toward the gentleman. I would like to know what he did with that check after he got it. [Laughter.]

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Nobody questions that the check was written by this lady in California?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. There is no question about that?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. The check was written and mailed by her?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Then the question of what you did with it seems to me to be very immaterial.

Mr. LEAVY. Will the gentleman yield for just one short question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Just one short one.

Mr. LEAVY. The gentleman has made a charge against a high public official, the Secretary of the Interior, in reference to the fact that he was told he would get a $25,000,000 dam by going along on the park. In fairness to that official, I think the gentleman ought to state the time, the place, and who was present when that conversation occurred so that it can be answered.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I will answer that. The statement was made in Fresno, Calif., in the month of February during his trip there.

Mr. LEAVY. The place and who was present?

Mr. ELLIOTT. It was at a public meeting.

Mr. LEAVY. At a public gathering?

Mr. ELLIOTT. At a public meeting.

Mr. LEAVY. Held where?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I think at the California Hotel. I was not present.

Mr. LEAVY. It was part of a public address?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. LEAVY. Can the gentleman give us the date?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No; I cannot give that. Here is a telegram about the meeting:

FRESNO, CALIF., March 16, 1939.

Hon. ALFRED J. ELLIOTT,

United States Congressman, Washington, D. C.:

In protesting unfair tactics used by Secretary Ickes in conducting California hearings February 13 and 14, we cite following instances. San Francisco meeting Almon Roth, vice president, State chamber of commerce, presented S. P. Frisselle, director of State chamber, to present views of San Joaquin Valley Council, which had been approved by State chamber board of directors. Secretary heard Roth and Frisselle and when Burke, also State chamber director, representing lower San Joaquin area arose to make his presentation he was denied the floor by Ickes saying that State chamber had been heard. Two representatives State chamber heard, one refused. At least four representatives John Muir Association afforded unlimited time to talk with no objection. In Fresno meeting Frank Long, representing Farm Bureau, only allowed to talk after verbal clash with Secretary. Same treatment given Buckman and Dudley. All park proponents afforded unlimited time without heckling. We feel park opponents definitely not accorded same fair treatment proponents received. The undersigned were present at meeting in question. We further call attention to fact Secretary chose to challenge and belittle nearly every park opponent who attempted to offer evidence. Ickes closed both San Francisco and Fresno meetings with sarcastic and unfair statements relative opponents; permitting no rebuttal.

S. P. FRISSELLE.
C. T. BUCKMAN.
W. M. CLINGAN.
E. F. WALLACE.
LUCIAN SCHMITTOU.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that Secretary Ickes told him in substance that unless he went along on the park he would penalize the gentleman by not giving him things in his district?

Mr. ELLIOTT. He made this statement:

That I hold the strings to the money bag, young man.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Where was that statement made?

Mr. ELLIOTT. In Mr. Ickes' office on the 13th day of March.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. In Washington?

Mr. ELLIOTT. In Washington, D. C.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. In the presence of whom?

Mr. ELLIOTT. In the presence of my secretary and no one else.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. And yourself?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield for a question, just a short question.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman was asked by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] for an explanation as to how that check got back to California and who sent it. The gentleman stated that he would advise the House who sent it. I think it is very important as bearing upon this question for the House to know, and I know I would like to know, in view of the charge of entrapment which has been made by the gentleman's colleague, how that check got back to California to be mailed back to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] here in Washington, and who did it. The gentleman has stated that he conferred with eight Members of this House. Was the action the result of a conspiracy of the gentleman with eight other Members to entrap the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART], and to whom did the gentleman give the check?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The gentleman asked one question, did he not?

Mr. KEEFE. I did, and I would like to have it answered, and I know the House would like to have it answered.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I will answer. To prove that I did not send it——

Mr. KEEFE. I accept the gentleman's word.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Sit down; just hold still and I will tell you.

The check was given in an envelope addressed to Mr. Dunwoodie, and Mr. Dunwoodie mailed it to a friend of his in San Jose, Calif., and it was returned to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]. I did not send that check, as has been accused.

Mr. KEEFE. Who is Mr. Dunwoodie?

Mr. ELLIOTT. He is a member of the State Chamber of Commerce of California, the secretary.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman mailed it to Mr. Dunwoodie in California?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Oh, no; he was here.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman gave it to Mr. Dunwoodie?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I gave it to him.

Mr. KEEFE. With instructions that he should mail it to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART] from Fresno; is that right?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No.

Mr. KEEFE. What were the gentleman's instructions to him?

Mr. ELLIOTT. From San Jose. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEEFE. Then, so the record may be clear, if I understand the gentleman's statement correctly, the gentleman gave this check to Mr. Dunwoodie?

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ELLIOTT. You asked me to yield for one short question, and I answered your question.

Mr. KEEFE. I think perhaps you did.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Then sit down.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Michigan for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. I want to know whether this is a controversy between individuals or whether it is a controversy between parties. From the acts of the Republicans one would think it was a party controversy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may state that he does not consider that a real parliamentary inquiry. The Chair will repeat that the House gave the gentleman from California the right to talk 40 minutes on any subject he saw fit.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Now, if I may be permitted to proceed, some of you might think you are making a monkey out of me, but that cannot be done. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I made the statement a while ago that I felt friendly toward the gentleman and some of the Members laughed at that statement. The gentleman knows, does he not, that I have been friendly throughout his service in this House?

Mr. ELLIOTT. You have. Thank you very much, Mr. HOFFMAN.

Mr. Speaker, I was hoping I might be able to finish my statement before anyone started asking me questions, but I have been kind enough to yield a part of my time to those wishing to ask questions. Now I am going back, if I may be permitted without further delay, to say that this bill is a dangerous piece of legislation the way it has been carried on up to the present time. I had a perfect right, after I discovered the many irregularities that were happening and the pressure that was being put on by the Department of the Interior—and he has had lobbyists on this floor. Mr. Beiter, a former Member of this House, now working for the Department of the Interior, sat in the second row of seats facing the speaker and tried to induce me to withdraw my objections to this bill. They have had other paid men on this hill. They have had men working in California for the past 15 months making speeches before Rotary Clubs, Lions Clubs, and others, to try to pass this piece of legislation, knowing all the time, after telling the people "We want to save our big trees," that they moved over and included this area 30 miles distant from the Kings Park area for a sucker grab to make the people feel that there were big trees in this area, knowing they were going to have to purchase this area from private owners and the taxpayers were going to be called upon to pay for it.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Public Lands Committee, when I received this check, knowing that statements of solicitation had been sent us for this park area, I had a perfect right to find out and demand where this check was going and what was behind the movement, and that is all I asked of the Department when I turned it over to them.

I turned it over to the Department in good faith that they would follow this thing through, and these are the words in which I asked the gentleman, "Will you find out whether or not this lady has any relatives that own land in Redwood Mountains, and if this check is cashed I want you to notify me and nobody else"—that is the statement I made to the gentleman—"I don't want any harm done to BUDDY GEARHART."

In concluding, I do not wish to take up any further time of this honorable assembly. Conceivably, my colleague from California, whose extensive experience in law should have taught him otherwise, has, in part, presented a case on an "anonymous telephone call." Naturally, those of you who have had the advantage of pursuing law and formal principles of law, know full well the weight of hearsay evidence. It was only through Mr. GEARHART'S admissions that we learned of such an anonymous conversation, and the nature of the same.

I have outlined my every movement and have openly challenged a face-to-face rebuttal of any ulterior motive; such a challenge went unanswered!

As Congressman from the Tenth District of California, I, like other Members here present, have several purposes in accepting the responsibility of a congressional office. Primarily, to serve both this body and the people whom I represent to the best of my ability, within honorable bounds, and, by all means, with aboveboard practices. Therefore, the why and wherefore of everything I did, and mind you, gentlemen, it was with absolute good faith that I pursued the course I did in the tracing of a check, my privilege as a member of the Public Lands Committee considering legislation for which funds are known to be solicited by outside interests to further its approval. My constituents do not want it; and I am representing my constituents. I am but a medium through whom they speak. They have pronounced an emphatic "No!" to the passage of this bill, and in compliance with my oath of office, I shall protect their welfare.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PRIVATE CALENDAR

R. DOVE AND LAURA J. DOVE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2044, for the relief of R. Dove and Laura J. Dove.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to R. DETENTION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 175

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 5643, a bill to invest the circuit courts of appeals of the United States with original and exclusive jurisdiction to review the order of detention of any alien ordered deported from the United States whose deportation or departure from the United States is not effectuated within 90 days after the date the warrant of deportation shall have become final; to authorize such detention orders in certain cases; to provide places for such detention; and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order to the substance of the resolution and the adoption of the resolution for consideration of this bill upon the ground that this bill did not have a hearing before the committee authorized by the rules of the House, and that the Rules Committee had no right to hear it, because there was no proper report from a committee authorized to conduct the hearings on this legislation or to sanction the approval of this bill.

This bill is 100 percent immigration, but was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and I submit, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have some time to go into the precedents and the rules of the House which will establish definitely that this bill is improperly before the House for consideration under a rule or under any other provision of the laws of this Congress or any other Congress, and that this is an immigration bill and the Immigration Committee has had no consideration of this measure by hearings or otherwise.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Did the gentleman avail himself of the opportunity of taking this matter up after the bill had been referred to the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Well, to be frank with the gentleman, I did not know until 2 or 3 days after the bill was introduced and referred to the Judiciary Committee that there was such a bill pending before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MICHENER. Does not the gentleman realize that after a bill has been referred to a committee and has been acted upon by the committee and reported to the House, under the precedents of the House it is then too late to raise the question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am going to the substance of the power of the House to consider this legislation under precedents that I have, which I have checked, that do not give the House any power to consider it unless you do so by some method that I do not know anything about. The gentleman may be right that I might have turned around the day after the bill was referred to the committee and asked consent to refer it to the Committee on Immigration, but this goes further than the point which the gentleman now makes.

Mr. MICHENER. I think the Speaker is familiar with the precedents.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. Did the gentleman avail himself of the opportunity to appear before the Rules Committee and oppose the resolution on the ground that he now opposes it?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I did not. That does not affect the substance of my argument. I am not opposing this bill in principle. I am not here defending the criminal aliens. I am referring to the jurisdiction and the basic principles of this Congress when bills are referred to committees to which they do not belong. For example, my attention was called to the fact that a bill belonging to the Committee on Indian Affairs was referred to the Judiciary Committee. Mr. Speaker, from an examination of the authorities that I believe I have showing the jurisdiction of the committees of this House, the Hobbs bill, being completely an Immigration Committee bill, had no right and can never obtain the right to go to another committee when the powers of the right committee have not had a chance even to consider the legislation.

The SPEAKER. May the Chair ask the gentleman from New York a question in order that this matter may be fully presented? Did the gentleman from New York raise the question of jurisdiction with respect to this bill, so far as the proper committee is concerned, before the Committee on the Judiciary had reported the bill back to the House?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not. I did not appear before the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman in any way attempt to raise that question prior to the time the bill was actually reported back to the House by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. To be frank, I did not. As a matter of fact, as I stated to my colleague from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], I only learned that this bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary several days after the bill was referred to that committee. But I go further than that, Mr. Speaker. I raise the point of jurisdiction. The next point I raise is that this bill is not properly before the House and therefore could not properly be before the Rules Committee, because the standing committee created under the law for the purpose of considering legislation pertaining to various phases of deportation did not consider the bill. Since the Congress, by its precedents, which I am ready to present to the Speaker, has created this committee, I say there is no jurisdiction at this time to consider this legislation. We might as well send a farm bill to the Committee on Immigration or an immigration bill to the Committee on Agriculture. I say that this bill has no semblance of bearing on any question which should be dealt with by the Judiciary Committee, and that we are trespassing upon the prerogatives of the House and also the standing committees which this House has created. We are destroying every principle of legislation by this method, and I submit that the mere fact that I did not move, on the next morning or at any other time after the introduction of the bill, when it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to have it referred back to the Committee on Immigration does not deprive me of raising the question of jurisdiction now.

If the Speaker sees fit to permit me to go into the question, I have taken the time to study the history of the creation of the committee and the powers granted and the designation of bills pertaining to certain legislation. Technically I may be wrong, but, in my opinion, it seems to me it is the wrong procedure to follow, just because someone made a mistake. I have gone into this matter very carefully and I have examined the precedents. If the Speaker will permit me to proceed——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman if he has precedents bearing upon this question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, prior to the creation of the Committee on Immigration, jurisdiction in the House of Representatives over matters in this field rested principally with the Committees on the Judiciary and on Foreign Affairs. That is how the matter was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

In 1882——

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will not for a moment.

In 1882 that portion of the President's message dealing with "the construction of the law restricting immigration of laborers from China" was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 47th Cong., 2d sess., p. 56.) The general question of Chinese immigration, however, had rested with the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the first legislation on the subject having resulted from a bill, H. R. 4747, reported from the committee in 1875 (18 Stat. L. 474).

Up to 1893 the Committee on the Judiciary exercised jurisdiction over naturalization, reporting general bills in the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, Fifty-second, and Fifty-third Congresses. (Hinds, Asher C,, Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives of the United States, vol. IV, p. 829.) The Judiciary Committee also reported in 1894 on the exclusion and deportation of alien anarchists, on the inspection of immigrants by consuls (H. Repts. 1460 and 416, 53d Cong., 2d sess.), and on bills relating to the ownership of lands within the United States by aliens (H. Rept. 1951, 49th Cong., 1st sess.; H. Rept. 255, 50th Cong., 1st sess.; H. Rept. 2388, 51st Cong., 1st sess.)

December 9, 1889, Representative Mark S. Brewer (Michigan) submitted a resolution:

> That there be created and added to the other standing committees of the House a committee to be known and designated as "the Committee on Immigration." (House Journal, 51st Cong., 1st sess., p. 17.)

The committee was to be composed of 11 members, and the proposed resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

Representative William McKinley, Jr. (Ohio), on December 20 submitted a report from this committee which provided among other things for the appointment by the Speaker of:

> A select Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to consist of seven members, to which shall be referred all proper legislation relating to immigration and naturalization. (House Journal, op. cit., p. 74.)

The resolution was agreed to and the next day the following Representatives were appointed to the committee: William D. Owen, Indiana; Mark S. Brewer, Michigan; Herman Lehlbach, New Jersey; John J. DeHaven, California; James W. Covert, New York; James E. Cobb, Alabama; Herman Stump, Maryland.

(The first mention of this committee in the Congressional Directory is as the "Select Committee on Emigration and Naturalization." (Congressional Directory, 51st Cong., 1st sess., 2d edition, p. 143.) A later edition of the directory carried the corrected title.)

The committee was made a standing committee August 18, 1893, and increased in size to 11 members. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 53d Cong., 1st sess., p. 477.) Although this change was effected in an amendment to the rules of the House, no explanation for it is found in the debate. The number of members comprising the committee has been increased four times, from 11 to 14 in 1905 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 59th Cong., 1st sess., pp. 296–297), 14 to 15 in 1907 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 60th Cong., 1st sess., p. 356), 15 to 17 in 1924 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 68th Cong., 1st sess., p. 1143), and 17 to 21 in 1927 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 70th Cong., 1st sess., p. 111).

Examples of the general jurisdiction of this committee may be found among representative measures reported—

On the immigration laws: House Reports 3472 and 3807, Fifty-first Congress, second session; House Report 1573, Fifty-second Congress, first session; House Reports 2197, 2206, 2542, Fifty-second Congress, second session; House Report 1597, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session; House Reports 3021, 3635, 4558, 4912, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.

On a head tax on immigrants and other pertinent regulations concerning aliens: House Report 481, Sixtieth Congress, first session; House Report 851, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

On the deportation of aliens: House Report 143, Sixty-sixth Congress, first session; House Report 867, Sixty-seventh Congress, second session.

On the admission into the Territory of Hawaii of aliens otherwise inadmissible to meet an agricultural labor shortage (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 67th Cong., 1st sess., p. 2838); and on exempting certain Spanish residents of Puerto Rico from the provisions of the Immigration Act: House Report 927, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session.

Without going into further detail, I ask at this point to extend and revise my remarks, which will give you other precedents which will lead up to the point of jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I submit that where there is no jurisdiction of a subject matter the mere reference of a bill to another committee does neither legalize that jurisdiction nor create it.

This bill, made in order by the pending rule, proposes to create a concentration camp for alien criminals. It proposes to do the same thing that Hitler has been doing in Germany. We have a number of criminals who I agree ought to be deported and for this very reason I am pleading with the Rules Committee to give the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization a rule to permit us to dispose of these alien criminals.

This bill proposes in substance—and I am appealing to the Chair, because it will have an effect on my argument—to change present immigration and deportation practices. Under the present law an alien who commits a crime is to be deported. To do so the Government must obtain a passport and send him back to his native country. In certain instances the passport cannot be obtained because either the country of origin has been destroyed under the Versailles Treaty or there has been a change of the map since. Some of these aliens have been here a long time. They should be deported. Under the pending bill, if this man cannot get out within 90 days or obtain a passport to the country of his birth he is to be placed in a concentration camp. If we should have a Secretary of Labor who is not interested in these aliens they can stay there for a lifetime under the provisions of the bill.

The whole subject matter of the bill deals almost entirely with jurisdictional matters pertaining to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, a committee of this House created by Congress many years ago; but because the bill provides for review by the circuit court of appeals, the Committee on the Judiciary assumes jurisdiction of matters pertaining to immigration, naturalization, and deportation. I might here say that the alien has always had the opportunity of judicial review of an administrative order of the Department of Labor by means of the writ of habeas corpus; and, as a side light, it is interesting to note that, notwithstanding the fact that the bill comes from the Judiciary Committee with a favorable report, the right to a writ of habeas corpus guaranteed by the Constitution is apparently withdrawn in the cases covered by the bill.

There is another bill—H. R. 5138—along the same line, before the Judiciary Committee, which rightfully belongs before the Immigration Committee—the Hobbs bill—and I am not disagreeing with my colleague in the principle of getting rid of criminals, even though I would prefer another method, if the bill were properly before the Immigration Committee, to solve this problem which I have been hoping to solve the moment I get a rule from the Rules Committee—the Hobbs bill is not the proper way to solve this problem. It cannot be solved by the creation of camps or prisons for aliens.

I call attention further to the fact that this bill is retroactive in nature. Under its provisions you can go back 50 years. If an alien committed only a misdemeanor many years back, under this bill, he can be thrown into a concentration camp if there is no way of deporting him. This, I submit, is a matter that comes under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. While I may have been technically wrong in not asking for reference immediately after the bill was introduced, my argument, Mr. Speaker, is that the basic jurisdiction has not been complied with.

Either we are a committee which has the right to develop, to discuss, and to recommend to this House legislation pertaining to particular problems dealing with immigration, naturalization, and deportation. If this be not so, why not abolish the committee?

If this is just a hunting proposition, let us know something about it. I think 22 members of my committee, of high intelligence, men who understand the problem thoroughly, who have been working on this problem for years, ought to have the opportunity to consider legislation that pertains to matters clearly within the jurisdiction of their committee.

Mr. Speaker, I submit this bill is not properly before the House.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly sure that the distinguished gentleman who has just spoken understands full well that the constituted authorities of this House never have had the remotest idea of doing violence to the jurisdiction of any committee, much less the important Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

What I wish to say is, no doubt, already in the Speaker's mind, but I wish to call to the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization that this bill has nothing whatever to do with immigration, has nothing whatever to do with naturalization, has nothing whatever to do with deportation until after warrant has been aborted. It is merely a sincere attempt to plug a hole in the dike. After the constituted authorities of this Nation, acting under congressional mandate, have ordered the deportation of these aliens that fall within the four classes covered by this bill, their deportation has failed because foreign nations thumb their nose at Uncle Sam and say, "Keep our trash." We take it up, therefore, at a point where the jurisdiction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House has utterly ceased, in a field that its jurisdiction never was designed to cover; and, what is more—and I submit that probably that profound, honest, and erudite gentleman who made the reference to the Judiciary Committee may have had this in mind, the outstanding characteristic of this bill is that it enlarges the jurisdiction and function of the circuit courts of appeals of the judicial system of this country, and also somewhat changes the practice of the district courts. Dealing, therefore, with a matter involving judicial jurisdiction and functions, and covering a subject matter which is in a field beyond the jurisdiction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, it was properly, naturally, and inevitably referred to that committee which has jurisdiction of the judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. MICHENER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard?

Mr. MICHENER. Briefly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Alabama has clearly stated the purposes of the bill, and if his analysis is correct—and it is correct—then the jurisdiction of the Judiciary Committee is plainly apparent. Permit me, however, to suggest another and a controlling reason why the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] cannot prevail, and that is because it comes too late.

Under the precedents of the House, even though a bill has been improperly referred to a committee by the Speaker, if that bill receives consideration by the committee to which it was referred and is reported back to the House and placed on the House Calendar, it is then too late to raise the point of order which has been raised by the gentleman from New York as to the jurisdiction of the committee reporting the bill. The argument of the gentleman from New York was aimed largely at the merits of the bill and the reasons for creating the Immigration Committee and is academic so far as the practical point of order is concerned. Neither reasons why the Immigration Committee was set up, nor the advisability of the law, are involved in the point of order.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] has called my attention to a precedent found on page 401 of Jefferson's Manual which substantiates my position, to which I call the Speaker's attention. The Speaker has the precedent before him and I am sure is familiar with it. It settles this controversy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is familiar with that precedent. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Mississippi, on behalf of the Committee on Rules of the House, has offered a resolution, which has been reported, providing for the consideration of H. R. 5643.

The gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, has raised a point of order, which may be stated in two different forms, possibly, that the resolution now offered is out of order. Primarily, as the Chair understands, the point of order is raised against consideration of the bill because of the fact that the Committee on the Judiciary, to which it was referred, had no jurisdiction or authority under the rules of the House to consider the bill; therefore it had no legal right to report the bill to the House for its consideration under the rules of the House.

The Chair has given considerable consideration to the problem, because it is a matter of some importance. It is a matter of grave importance, of course, to all committees, their chairmen and members, affecting as it does the matter of jurisdiction of the committees over important legislation. For this reason it is not to be acted upon capriciously or without due consideration.

This is not a new matter that is now raised by the gentleman from New York. It may be proper here to state that the present occupant of the chair nor any other Speaker who has been his predecessor has had any personal interest in reference to any bill. The Speaker does not participate in the deliberations by the committees. His function is entirely to undertake to preserve the rules and precedents of the House as its presiding officer.

This bill now being attacked in the ordinary course was referred to the Parliamentarian, and, with the consent of the Speaker, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, for the reasons rather admirably stated by the gentleman from Alabama. It was felt at that time that the Committee on the Judiciary was the proper committee to which the bill should be referred. But for the purpose of this decision the Chair does not think it necessary to review the arguments on that question of jurisdiction.

The defect in the position taken by the gentleman from New York, although earnestly and conscientiously contended for, is that under the uniform practices and precedents of the House, as far as the Speaker has been able to find them, the gentleman has slept upon his rights in raising this question, if the Chair may use that term, although he may not have been actually advised of this bill until recently called to his attention; however, constructively at least, he has been guilty of parliamentary laches.

In making this ruling, the Chair desires to refer to a decision heretofore made by the present Speaker of the House on an identical question involving the jurisdiction of a committee. This is found on page 1526 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 26, 1938.

On January 26, 1938, Mr. MAY, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, called up the bill (H. R. 8176) providing for continuing retirement pay, under certain conditions, of officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability while in the service of the United States during the World War, and for other purposes.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] made the point of order that the bill was improperly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, the proper committee being the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. He made the point of order that the bill was not in order for consideration at that time. As the Chair understands that is the principle invoked by the gentleman from New York.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] made the point of order that the question of order raised by Mr. PATMAN came too late, inasmuch as the bill had been reported to the House.

The Speaker, in sustaining a point of order made by Mr. MAY, said:

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] raises the point of order against consideration of the bill, that it was not referred under the rules of the House to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, to which, according to his contention, it should have originally been referred.

Pending that question the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, raises the point of order that the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas comes too late.

In view of that issue being raised the Chair feels it is his duty primarily to dispose of that question, because a disposition of that question possibly might settle the original point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas.

This is not a matter of first impression, the Chair will state, as there have been a number of decisions and precedents upon this particular question. The Chair refers especially to a decision made by Mr. Speaker Longworth, as reported in volume 7 of Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives, section 2113.

Then quoting Speaker Longworth's decision:

After a public bill has been reported—

As is the case here, the bill having been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, whether properly or erroneously referred, the quotation goes on to say:

it is not in order to raise a question of committee jurisdiction—

And so forth. The gentleman from Michigan has cited for consideration of the Chair a syllabus found on page 401, section 854, of the House Rules Manual, which the Chair will quote:

According to the later practice, the erroneous reference of a public bill, if it remains uncorrected in effect, gives jurisdiction to the committee receiving it, and it is too late to move a change of reference after such committee has reported the bill.

The Chair desires particularly to direct the attention of the House to a decision made by Mr. Speaker Crisp which may be found in Hinds' Precedents, volume IV, section 4365. In that instance Speaker Crisp delivered an elaborate opinion on a question which the Chair thinks is on all fours with the one now before him.

The Chair could cite, of course, a number of other precedents along the same line by former occupants of this chair; but for the purposes of this decision the Chair is clearly of the opinion that despite the fact there might be considerable merit in the contention made by the gentleman from New York so far as the spirit and purposes in the establishment of committees are concerned, nevertheless, under these precedents, which seem to be absolutely uniform, the Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, in order to protect the rights of the Committee on Rules, will the Chair permit this observation? The gentleman from New York slept on his rights further until the Committee on Rules reported a rule making the consideration of this measure in order. Even though the reference had been erroneous and the point of order had been otherwise made in time, the Committee on Rules has the right to change the rules and report a rule making the legislation in order. This point also might be taken into consideration by the Speaker, if necessary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan, although not necessary to a decision of the instant question, is sustained by a particular and special decision rendered by Mr. Speaker GARNER on a similar question. The decision may be found in the RECORD of February 28, 1933. In that decision it is held, in effect, that despite certain defects in the consideration or the reporting of a bill by a standing committee, such defects may be remedied by a special rule from the Committee on Rules making in order a motion to consider such bill. The Chair thinks that that decision by Mr. Speaker GARNER clearly sustains the contention made by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. I call attention to the point, Mr. Speaker, only for the purpose of future reference. I agree fully with the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

I yield myself 5 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

This bill is not, as has been said, an immigration bill. This is merely a bill which undertakes to plug the loopholes by which undesirable aliens who have been ordered deported have been escaping deportation heretofore; in other words, the Congress has heretofore in its wisdom seen fit to provide that certain undesirable aliens shall be deported. It has been discovered that in the practical operation of deportation proceedings some of these aliens have escaped deportation after all the legal machinery has been set in motion for their deportation simply because the country to which they were to be deported would not give them passports or the other necessary papers. Under those circumstances, it seems, there was nothing the Department of Labor could do but to release the aliens, and they were back upon the country.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, has very wisely given study to this question and has introduced this bill which you are considering today. This bill represents a great deal of time and thought on the part of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, and I am sure that the House is grateful to him, as well as the Judiciary Committee, for the very fine job that he and the committee have done in this respect.

This bill would stop that practice, or at least would stop it to a large extent, and would provide that in the event the aliens who were ordered deported did not leave the country or their countries did not provide for their transportation they should still be held in the custody of the Labor Department. Provision is made for considerable latitude in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor in that event and provision is made for bond.

There is nothing in this bill that I can see at which any American citizen should get alarmed. This country has pursued a course of rather broad latitude in its attitude toward immigrants who came to this country seeking the benefits they would find here. However, when these immigrants abuse the privileges that are offered them here and violate the laws of this country we should not be in the position of being held powerless to do anything about it.

This bill does not affect all aliens, but simply a small group of aliens of four classifications: Certain classes of criminals who have violated the laws of this country and have been convicted of felonies or crimes involving moral turpitude; certain violators of the narcotic laws; certain anarchists and those of kindred classes; and certain classes of immoral persons, those who deal in the abominable trade of white slavery. These are the four classes and the only four classes this bill undertakes to reach; not to deport them, if you please, but to see that they do not escape deportation after they have been ordered deported, which has happened heretofore because the aliens could not get the necessary passports or other documents.

Mr. Speaker, as I intimated a moment ago, there is nothing in this bill for loyal, patriotic Americans to get concerned over. This bill is a much-needed piece of legislation. For the life of me I cannot understand how any American citizen who is interested in keeping our philosophy of government intact, and who is desirous of seeing undesirable aliens who have abused the privileges this country extended to them, could object. Who is it that desires to see this class of criminals described in the bill remain in this country even after the courts have determined that they should be returned to their native countries? I am very much in hope, Mr. Speaker, that this bill will pass and that this type of alien who has been ordered deported can no longer remain in this country by collusion with officials of their own countries, as we have reason to suspect has been done heretofore. Under the present laws there is nothing that we can do about it. This bill, if enacted into law would, to say the least, make it uncomfortable for those who desire to evade the law by conniving with consular officials and others in having passports refused them. This is an American bill. It should be supported and hailed by all good Americans everywhere. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield himself a little more time so I may ask a question in order to clarify some of the statements the gentleman has made?

Mr. COLMER. With all due deference to my distinguished colleague, I assure the gentleman he will have plenty of opportunity to ask questions of other Members.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; I just want to clear up something.

Mr. COLMER. I have used my time. Others desire to speak.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to attempt to influence any Member in regard to this bill. I merely wish to make a few observations. As I see it, the purpose of this bill is this: We find many aliens in this country who have been found guilty by our courts and turned loose to continue the practices which caused their imprisonment. We find that aliens who have been found guilty of selling narcotics or of making money through prostitution, or who have been found guilty of crimes involving moral turpitude, have been turned loose on the country. The present laws require that they be deported; but because foreign countries will not accept them, they remain in this country and continue to prey on American citizens.

In my opinion, there are two limitations to this bill. First, I believe that practically everyone realizes that the Department of Labor has been totally unfit and inefficient in regard to the deportation of criminal aliens.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'TOOLE. If these aliens repeat their crimes, are they not subject to the laws of the country, and do not the laws of the country provide how they shall be punished?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes; if the aliens are caught; but I believe if we leave such aliens in this country, it is important for us to detain them until the time comes when they are accepted by foreign countries. It is true that this works a hardship on criminal aliens so adjudged by our courts, but I feel it is better they undergo certain inconveniences and hardships instead of turning them loose to again prey on American citizens.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wonder if the gentleman will clear up this point: Page 4 of the bill provides that—

> Those aliens who have been sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 1 year or more because of conviction in this country of a crime involving moral turpitude—

And I am sure the gentleman recalls the ill-fated eighteenth amendment, when many States of the Union provided that possession of liquor was a felony, and some of our courts, in a somewhat intolerant mood in those days, held that possession of liquor was a crime involving moral turpitude. I am wondering if under this bill some alien who had made some wine, some Italian alien, perhaps, could be put in a detention camp because he had been convicted of such a felony in prohibition days.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The able gentleman from Washington, I am sure, has made a contribution that will be helpful to the debate.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. It is a phase we should wisely consider.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield to me, so that I may answer the question?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I will say to the gentleman that it would involve the detention of that alien, innocent as he may have been, because he is an alien and because this bill is retroactive and goes back any number of years. Therefore if an alien has committed two felonies involving imprisonment for 1 year or more he would be involved, because the language is in the alternative. It may be a mere misdemeanor involving imprisonment for 1 year or it may be a felony if it involves something more, and therefore that particular alien, if he has committed a crime twice and has been imprisoned twice, although he has been here for 40 years, can be taken and held in a concentration camp under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am of the opinion that we owe little to criminal aliens. We should be thinking more of our misguided and innocent American citizens that have undergone detriments by reason of the actions of these criminal aliens.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman, briefly.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Inasmuch as this bill has been described, both by its author during the argument on the point of order and by the gentleman from Mississippi, as not necessarily an alien bill and as a bill which does not deal with deportation, how can the gentleman justify detention without due process of law from a constitutional standpoint? How does the gentleman meet the constitutional question involved there?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is a question, of course, that we do not know about for sure. The gentleman might contend that, while others might contend differently, but I do know this, as far as I am personally concerned, I owe nothing to those aliens who are in this country who go out and sell narcotics, or who go out and derive profits from prostitution and to go ahead and say to them, "We will let you go free and continue to sell opium and other drugs and wreck the bodies and minds of American citizens," to me is unthinkable.

I say the regrettable part of this bill is that it puts too much power in the hands of the Secretary of Labor, a department that has continuously demonstrated its inefficiency and its neglect in dealing with these aliens. It is provided in this bill that the Secretary of the Department of Labor shall determine a great many things, and in my opinion, a great many too many things.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. In just a moment.

Some will argue, I know, that it is wrong to put people in detention camps. They feel that that is a thing that belongs in foreign countries, but I repeat that I know it is going to inconvenience some of these criminal aliens to go into some of these detention camps. It may even wreck the body and minds of some of these alien criminals, but I would ask you if it would not be better to do that than have them go throughout the United States continuing to sell their drugs to the young people of this Nation.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield for an observation?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. On pages 3 and 4, the gentleman will admit there are four provisions in this bill, one dealing with alien radicals, is not that right?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is right.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Department now has jurisdiction to deport them. The next refers to criminals and the next one to immoral cases and the next one to violators of the narcotic law. These are four classes of aliens that the Judiciary Committee has considered with respect to this bill. I am agreeing with the gentleman that the men who sell narcotics or the criminals referred to ought to be deported or disposed of in some way or other; but you are approaching the thing from a bad angle in our form of a democracy. You are taking men who have been out of prison for 20 years, who have paid the penalty to the State, who are no longer criminals and have not been for the past 20 years, who are married to American women and have fine American children, and under this bill you are making the law retroactive for 20 years or more when this man's country or the country in which he was born is no longer in existence, and through no fault of his own he cannot get a passport, and yet you are going to throw him into this camp and keep him there for a lifetime. Is that going to justify the ends of this bill?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. The presumption is that the attempt to concentrate these aliens is for the protection of democracy, our form of government. In order to do that we must import from Russia, Germany, and Italy a form that is absolutely abhorrent to all democratic principles and employ that to save America. You are simply taking the first step to break down American institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I hold in my hand a 72-page Communist pamphlet indicating that the Communist Party in America is linked directly to the bloody "red" Communist butchers in Moscow and Spain, through the internationale. This pamphlet contains the plan of destroying our democracy by violence and replacing it with a Communist system of autocracy. I have personal knowledge of aliens who have been ordered deported because they were Communists, and when I asked the Immigration Office why they had not been sent back to Moscow, I was informed that they could not be sent back because those in charge of the Moscow "red" Communist government would not issue passports. That is a good way for Moscow to keep their Communist hencemen over here to undermine and destroy our American constitutional system of government.

I hope the Congress will pass this bill and lock those alien Communists up in a concentration camp—those alien Communists who no doubt have been sent here by the Moscow Government. A concentration camp is very lenient. They should be put in the penitentiary for the rest of their natural lives.

Let us approach our vote on this bill with the welfare of our American constitutional democracy in mind and not the welfare of its alien enemies.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. This is an open rule, is it not, with 2 hours of general debate on the bill?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is correct.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, as I have heretofore stated, we can expect little from the Department of Labor. Their sympathies seem to be with these aliens. It seems to me the only solution of this problem is to have the Department of State, which is an able and efficient department, revive our treaties with foreign countries, whereby they will agree to accept these aliens who have come here and violated our laws. In return we naturally would accept American criminals in other lands. I would like to see some effort made by our State Department to revive the treaties to take care of these aliens who have violated our law.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is that not the orderly, decent, and democratic way to proceed?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes; that is an orderly way, and I hope eventually that will come about.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I have been in touch with the State Department. They have indicated they would much prefer to deal with the question in the way indicated by the gentleman from California, namely, by treaty arrangement, and for some time past they have been endeavoring to work out a situation satisfactory to all parties. They feel that this method of attacking the problem is an erroneous method. The Labor Department is on all fours with the statement in that regard. It is for that reason that the Labor Department has sent to the Judiciary Committee a very strong letter protesting against the passage of this bill. That letter will be placed in the RECORD later on. The State Department has likewise issued a strong letter in opposition to certain phases, similar to those found in the so-called Smith bill, reiterating that they would much prefer to settle this matter by treaty with those offending nations.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I believe the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has brought forth a bill that merits favorable consideration until the time comes when the State Department can enter into treaties with foreign countries to take care of the situation, and I hope the membership of this House will pass this rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], to use as he sees fit.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, it is with great reluctance that I find myself in a position opposing this bill. I would much prefer not to say anything in opposition to a bill that seeks to deport—to get rid of the despicable classes of aliens mentioned in this bill, like procurers, dope fiends, narcotic peddlers, and such like. But the bill goes much further and involves also aliens who may have committed mere misdemeanors, provided they were sentenced to at least 1 year's imprisonment. Remember many prohibition violations were deemed crimes involving moral turpitude. The bill is retroactive and therefore can reach back for years and cause great trouble for aliens who may have been State liquor or prohibition law violators although such aliens may be here for 30 or 40 years.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. There is nothing in this bill that seeks to deport anyone.

Mr. CELLER. I differ with the gentleman, because the purpose of the bill is to compel voluntary departure or forceful deportation, and if nations from which these men originally came refuse to give a passport to insure departure or deportation, then these criminals can be held or detained or imprisoned or placed in a camp. So that I differ with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania by saying it is a deportation bill.

The proponents of the bill want to deport them, but because they cannot deport them this bill goes to these unlawful and unconstitutional extremes. Its real vice is its failure to grant due process and its double jeopardy.

I hold no brief for those wretched persons who violate our statutes, but I am here to defend something that is priceless, far more important than denying rights to those whom I have mentioned. That is the principle underlying our Constitution. Even the vilest criminal is entitled to his day in court. The Constitution says so. This bill denies that right, as I shall prove in my main argument when we come to general debate under the bill.

There is a false notion that prevails in some parts of this House that the Constitution does not apply to aliens. I say that the Constitution in its entirety does apply to aliens.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Of what right, constitutional or otherwise, is this class of undesirables deprived?

Mr. CELLER. Because I say this bill would inflict upon them dual punishment, because I say they are denied due process, because they are denied trial by jury, and are subject to cruel and inhuman treatment; their constitutional rights are denied and invaded. If they committed a crime, for example, and served their sentence, they have expiated the crime. You then come along with this bill and say: "Despite the fact that you have expiated your crime, despite the fact that you have been already punished, you shall be subjected to a second punishment or imprisonment. You are again to be held or detained in custody or deprived of liberty or imprisoned because the country of origin refused to grant a passport to permit your deportation."

You may cavil with me and say there is no second imprisonment, but there is, for you deprive the individual of his liberty; you detain him. I do not care where you detain him, whether on a farm, at Ellis Island, in the county jail, or at Lewisburg or San Quentin, it makes no difference—that is imprisonment; and, mind you, it may be for life.

There is no limitation whatsoever on the time during which the Secretary of Labor may hold such an alien despite the fact he has once served his sentence, has theretofore been imprisoned. The Secretary of Labor may act on good grounds or "coffee grounds." There is no limitation upon her authority. She can imprison for the term of office and her successor can continue the incarceration during his term and so on indefinitely.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. PACE. What is the gentleman's authority for the statement that an alien is vested with all the constitutional rights of an American citizen?

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman asks for authorities; I will give him the decisions.

ALIENS WITHIN THIS COUNTRY ARE NOT WITHOUT THE PROTECTION OF THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

I cite the case of Yick Wo v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356), and I quote the following from the opinion of Judge Matthews:

> The fourteenth amendment to the Constitution is not confined to the protection of citizens. It says: "Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."
> These provisions are universal in their application to all persons within the territorial jurisdiction, without regard to any differences of race, of color, or of nationality; and the equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws. It is accordingly enacted by section 1977 of the Revised Statutes that "all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other."

ALIENS MAY NOT BE RESTRICTED IN EMPLOYMENT SO AS TO DENY THEM THE ORDINARY MEANS OF A LIVELIHOOD

I also cite the case of Truax and the Attorney General of the State of Arizona v. Raich (239 U. S. 33), wherein it was decided that an alien admitted to this country not only has the privilege of entering and abiding in the United States but also entering and abiding in any State; and that being an inhabitant of any State, he is entitled, under the fourteenth amendment, to the equal protection of the laws. Consequently it was further asserted by Justice Hughes, who delivered the opinion of the Court, the alien's right to work for a living in the common occupation of the community is part and parcel of the essence of that personal freedom and opportunity which it was the purpose of the fourteenth amendment to secure. Hence the conclusion of the Court that the State of Arizona had no right to enact a statute requiring that employers employ only a specified percentage of alien employees, since such statute denies to aliens the equal protection of the law.

Another case in point is Frazer v. McConway (82 Fed. 257).

THE PROPERTY OF ALIENS, LAWFULLY ACQUIRED, MAY NOT BE TAKEN FROM THEM

In Terrace et al. v. Thompson, Attorney General of the State of Washington (263 U. S. 197), it was held that a statute of the State of Washington disqualifying aliens from taking or holding interest in land in the State for farming or other purposes was unconstitutional, in that it in essence resulted in the taking of property without due process of law, and, further, that it tended to prohibit an alien from following a common occupation of the community.

See also Fairfax v. Hunters Lessee (7 Cr. 603) and Philips v. Moore (100 U. S. 208).

ALIENS MAY NOT BE DENIED THE USE OF THEIR FOREIGN LANGUAGES

In Meyer v. State of Nebraska (262 U. S. 390), the Court held that a law of the State of Nebraska forbidding under penalty the teaching in any private, denominational, parochial, or public school of any modern language other than English to any child invades the liberty guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment and exceeds the power of the State. Such State law, the Court held, is, therefore, unconstitutional.

See also Farrington v. Tokushige (273 U. S. 284) and Yu Cong Eng v. Trinidad (271 U. S. 500).

ALIENS MAY NOT BE DEPRIVED OF LIBERTY WITHOUT DUE PROCESS OF LAW—A REASONABLE OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD AND A REASONABLE DETERMINATION OF THEIR RIGHTS

In Chin Yow v. United States (208 U. S. 8) it was held by the Supreme Court that a Chinese person who sought to enter the United States is entitled to a fair hearing, and that if without a fair hearing or being allowed to call witnesses he is denied admission and delivered to the steamship company for deportation he is deemed to be imprisoned without due process of law to which he is entitled. The decision in this case, it is interesting to note, was delivered by the late great Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes.

See also the Japanese Immigrant Case (189 U. S. 86), Gegun v. Uhl (239 U. S. 3), Ny Fung Ho v. White (259 U. S. 276), U. S. v. Williams (185 Fed. 598), Roux v. Commr. of Immigration (203 Fed. 413). [Applause.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O gracious Father of mankind, do Thou cleanse our prayer from all human dross and attune our hearts to Thee. Draw near us, through Christ, that Thy promises may assume fresh meaning and power. O Thou who art the Father-God, who made the mother's heart like unto Thine own, care for our youth and keep them from the sin and shame which bruise the souls which love them most. When vicissitude comes, when adversity overtakes, and when the storm breaks, hold Thou the hand and cheer the trembling heart. Oh, may the shifting sand beneath weary feet be as stable as the Rock of Ages. We praise Thee that light is sown for the righteous and gladness for the upright in heart.

Speak Lord and may Thy servants hear: Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths.

In the adorable name of our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

S. 2065. An act to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON THE TAXATION OF GOVERNMENT SECURITIES AND SALARIES

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report back favorably (H. Rept. No. 533) a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 6

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Special Committee on Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to have printed for its use 1,000 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the current session on the resolution (S. Res. 303, 75th Cong.) establishing a Special Committee on the Taxation of Governmental Securities and Salaries.

The Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VETERANS' PENSION BILL

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute in order to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, when the vote was taken Monday on roll call No. 60 on the veterans' bill I was in one of the committee rooms of the Capitol on committee business. The bells did not ring. I knew nothing of the roll call until I picked up the RECORD on the following day. I have always consistently supported legislation for the veterans and their dependents, and had I been here I would have voted "yea" on the passage of this bill. I would like to have this statement appear in the RECORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the New York Times this morning on the death of Frank P. Walsh.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an address by the Honorable John T. Cahill, United States attorney for the southern district of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5138) to make unlawful attempts to overthrow the Government of the United States, to require licensing of civilian military organizations, to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army and Navy, to require registration and fingerprinting of aliens, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States circuit court of appeals in certain cases, and for other purposes; and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the bill, the title of which has just been reported, be rereferred from the Committee on the Judiciary to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. Is there objection?

Mr. WALTER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I have to serve notice on the House, then, that we will move tomorrow that this reference be made.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I asked unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered yesterday before the National Chamber of Commerce by S. Clay Williams. I am informed this speech is too long to conform to the rule, and this morning I have an estimate from the Public Printer. I now renew my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio discussion participated in by a Senator, a Congressman, and a former Congressman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and refer to bills that have been introduced in behalf of people of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I would not take the time of the Members of the House this morning except to bring this resolution to your attention, as we will have under consideration very soon the problem of dairy products being made a basic commodity. I call your attention to this joint resolution of the Wisconsin Legislature, in which they ask that this be done not only for the dairymen of the State of Wisconsin but throughout the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the joint resolution to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, the joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to provide by law that dairy products be made a basic commodity

Whereas dairying comprises a wide and varied agricultural enterprise which provides a major income for a large number of farmers in the several dairy States; and

Whereas because large sums of money are invested in the dairy sections of today for the purpose of producing dairy products of good quality and due to climatic conditions dairy farmers cannot profitably engage in other types of farming; and

Whereas the dairy farmer is at a disadvantage compared with the cotton, corn, and wheat farmer in that the Agricultural Adjustment Act does not control the production of dairy products; and

Whereas the dairy industry would be immeasurably benefited if it were made subject to the Agricultural Adjustment Act and dairy farmers favor control of production in dairying in the manner provided in said act for controlling production of agricultural products affected thereby: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing that dairy products be made a basic commodity and that a parity payment be made to equal the difference between the average price of butter on the New York market and the parity price; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

VETERANS' PENSION BILL

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, on roll call No. 60, the veterans' pension bill, for the benefit of widows and orphans, I was recorded, erroneously, as being against the bill on a pair. I should have been recorded in favor of it.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I want at this time to invite all of you and your friends and your guests at the lunch-time hour to partake of some of the famous Lebanon County bologna, of which I have a supply here, and which will be available in the cloakrooms for those of you who are too busy to get to the House restaurant. Those of you who have lunch at the House restaurant will find it available there. This is a very unique product. It is both very good and very sustaining. It is manufactured in Palmyra, Pa., one of the finest towns in our entire State, by the Palmyra Bologna Co., and I am sure you will all enjoy it. Try it yourselves and get your friends to come with you to lunch. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein discussions between Senator TAFT and Representative SMITH of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we have heard something today about Pennsylvania bologna and I hope you will all enjoy it at the lunch hour, but the greatest "boloney" I have ever heard offered to the American taxpayer is the proposal, which, according to one of the newspapers, has been offered with respect to giving Members of Congress who have served 10 years a pension of from $3,000 to $3,600 a year. That would be the greatest "boloney" that the American taxpayers ever heard of, and it is way beyond the question whether we ought to give everybody in this country $200 a month old-age pension. It may be termed more bologna for Congressmen. Oh, when will it ever cease? We are crushing by every act and by every law the American people. We are not helping them, we are not making them secure when we break down the Government of our people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom the gentleman refers, but if he is referring to me, I have not suggested any pension for Members of Congress. I have suggested that we might put them under the civil-service retirement system, which covers 600,000 Federal employees, and under which the employees pay a large part of the cost themselves. I think if Members of Congress provide a system for 600,000 Federal employees and for 40,000,000 private employees, there is no reason why we should not supply a similar system for Members of Congress based upon a contributory plan, and there is no "boloney" in that, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short financial statement of the Electric Light & Power System of Tacoma, Wash.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT REORGANIZATION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 19, and, pending that motion, I would ask if there is any disposition on the part of the minority to come to any agreement with reference to time for debate.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman that we, of course, have no desire to prolong the debate beyond what may be reasonable, and I may suggest that we go into Committee and see what time is actually needed, and later we can arrive at some conclusion about limiting debate.

Mr. COCHRAN. Very well. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion.

Mr. HINSHAW. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point of order there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-seven Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 63]

Arnold	Duncan	Mansfield	Satterfield
Bland	Evans	McReynolds	Shannon
Buckley, N. Y.	Ferguson	Mitchell	Short
Bulwinkle	Flannagan	Mouton	Sirovich
Clark	Folger	Mundt	Smith, Maine
Crowther	Fulmer	Myers	Smith, W. Va.
Curley	Hartley	Norton	Stearns, N. H.
D'Alesandro	Healey	Osmers	Sweeney
Darden	Horton	Peterson, Fla.	Terry
Delaney	Jenks, N. H.	Reece, Tenn.	Vinson, Ga.
Dies	Kelly	Sabath	Wadsworth

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 386 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT REORGANIZATION

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 19, and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the debate may be equally controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 19, and, pending that motion, asks unanimous consent that the debate be controlled equally by himself and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know how much time there will be for debate.

The SPEAKER. The time has not been agreed upon and is not involved in this request. Under the rule, the time cannot exceed 10 hours.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 19, with Mr. MCGRANERY in the chair.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 19

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan No. I, transmitted to Congress by the President on April 25, 1939.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCGRANERY). Under the order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 5 hours.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the concurrent resolution under consideration, submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], has for its purpose to set aside the first plan of Government reorganization submitted by the President. Your committee has recommended that it be not agreed to, which, if approved by the House, means the order will go into effect 60 days from date of submission.

We have heard a great deal with reference to reduction of Government expenditures. Those who are in favor of a reduction of Government expenditures have an opportunity to show by their votes today that they really are.

We have heard that we want better efficiency in the executive branch of the Government. The Executive order of the President will bring that about. Everyone desires simplification of procedure. Washington today is crowded with members of the United States Chamber of Commerce from all over the country. Ask any one of them how difficult it is for them to find the Government agency they want to do business with. In grouping these Government agencies the President simplifies procedure. It will enable them to reach the official they would like to talk to without employing a guard.

The Executive order submitted by the President is practically unanimously endorsed by the press of the Nation, by the businessmen of the Nation, and by the taxpayers of the Nation.

Under the law debate on this resolution cannot exceed 10 hours. Up to the moment I have requests for only a few minutes' time. I cannot conceive of the necessity of offering a defense for this Executive order. It is so meritorious it needs no defense.

As there is no one on this side who has anything to say at the moment, I ask the gentleman from New York to use some of his time.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, as has been properly said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], the burden is certainly on the minority, represented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER]. It is going to be our policy to figuratively let the gentleman from New York and those who may be associated with him "shell the woods" on this proposition, and it is our present policy to only reserve for ourselves 10 minutes. Is that not correct?

Mr. COCHRAN. That is correct. I therefore ask the gentleman from New York to use some of his time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important measures that will be brought before the House of Representatives. I am satisfied that it will not promote efficiency in the Government and that it will not reduce expenses. I solicit your respectful attention to the situation that is presented by it.

To my mind the only possible way for the House of Representatives to approve of this proposition would be because it had not had thorough study on the part of the House. To my mind the only way that anyone can justify a position in favor of it is on the broad theory of reorganization without a detailed study of the program.

I desire to go very carefully into the proposition. Contrary to my usual custom, I have written out exactly what I propose to say, and I am going to read it, in spite of the fact that it makes it more difficult to follow. It is going to be a detailed analysis of the proposal and detailed reasons for my objections to it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the features of the reorganization proposal submitted by the President on the 25th of April, 1939, are:

PART 1. EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

The transfer to the Executive Office of the President of four items:

(1) The Bureau of the Budget.

(2) The Central Statistical Board.

(3) The National Resources Committee.

(4) The handling of personnel.

Of these transfers unquestionably that of the Bureau of the Budget is proper. It never did have a proper place in the Treasury Department.

The Central Statistical Board is about to expire by operation of law; it has been a total failure insofar as coordinating the statistical activities of the Government and insofar as reducing the expenses or creating any efficiency in the collection of statistics. It should be abolished because it serves no useful purpose whatever. No temporary agency which has not authority under law to continue should be placed in a permanent set-up.

The National Resources Committee has never done anything except propose the wild spending of public funds, which we did not have and which did not in any way help the economic situation of the United States. This outfit has no legal existence; it is operated as a part of the relief set-up under the W. P. A. and expires on the 30th of June without further legislative action by Congress. This is one of the things that stands in the way of recovery and is operating to promote the reactionary policies of the President to keep the country in debt and constructing projects which it cannot afford and which are not economic. Instead of being made a part of reorganization it should be abolished.

The President states in his message:

Because of an exemption in the act it is impossible to transfer to the Executive Office the administration of the third managerial function of the Government—that of personnel. However, I desire to inform the Congress that it is my purpose to name one of the administrative assistants to the President, authorized in the Reorganization Act of 1939, to serve as a liaison agent of the White House on personnel management.

In this way the President attempts to get around the exemption of the Civil Service Commission and the civil service laws, which was contained in the Reorganization Act. It is clearly improper and indicates a contempt of the act of Congress in exempting the Civil Service Commission.

Does the President intend by this operation to put into force and effect, through his own office, the management of the Civil Service Commission's activities and the civil service law in spite of any feeling in Congress or law that it has passed? It seems to me that this is one of the major reasons why we should not at this time in any way favor any of the proposal that has been submitted to us by the President.

PART 2. FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY

The President attempts to set up a new agency handling or controlling upward of $2,000,000,000 a year, and perhaps more. This plan creates the Federal Security Agency as a new agency without any authority whatever in the Reorganization Act for that purpose. To this agency are transferred:

(1) The Social Security Board;
(2) The United States Employment Service;
(3) The Office of Education;
(4) The Public Health Service;
(5) The National Youth Administration; and
(6) The Civilian Conservation Corps.

The first four named are old agencies of the Government. The fifth, the N. Y. A., expires June 30, 1939, and should not be renewed. It is an attempt on the part of the Federal Government to interfere with the problem of education, which should be in the hands of the States. If, as a matter of relief, the States need to handle some such activity it should be done in that way and not be a national organization headed by such a man as Aubrey Williams. This organization should not be continued.

The C. C. C., the sixth item, expires by operation of law on the 1st of July 1940.

The mixing of temporary agencies, such as these last two, with regular activities of the Government tends to destroy the efficiency of the operations of the Government. For my own part, I believe that a very large portion of the operations of the Social Security Board must be changed very decidedly if we are to have business recovery in this country. I think that the act is the greatest menace to the underprivileged in this country that exists. The taxes that are levied on business prevent the operation of business and the employment of our people and destroy a possibility of its successful operation. Under those circumstances to set up a new bureau having charge of six agencies, one of which, although permanent, is exceedingly dangerous and which should be reorganized and much of its activity eliminated in the interest of the people, and two of which are only temporary relief agencies which should not be continued when the processes of government can be so changed as to permit the private employment of our people. It seems utterly ridiculous to call anything a reorganization to promote efficiency and to combine permanent activities with temporary relief activities which are at best merely an expedient.

PART 3. FEDERAL WORKS AGENCY

Here another agency is created without any authority of law. Salaries and positions are provided, and a new authority is placed over old agencies as follows:

(a) Bureau of Public Roads, now functioning satisfactorily in the Department of Agriculture.

(b) The Public Buildings Branch of the Procurement Division, now in the Treasury Department which is operating as efficiently as could be expected in these days of queer governmental operations.

(c) The Branch of Building Management of the National Park Service in the Department of the Interior, which has charge of the public buildings in the District of Columbia.

And the following relief, emergency, and temporary agencies:

(a) The United States Housing Authority, which has authority to dump money into alleged slum-clearance projects, where nothing is ever to be repaid to the Government.

(b) The P. W. A., which expired insofar as the granting of new projects is concerned on the 1st of January last.

(c) The W. P. A., which will expire on June 30 next.

No further extension should be given to the United States Housing Authority. It has had available to dump out of the Treasury $800,000,000 for the construction of alleged slum-clearance projects which will cost tremendous sums of money and where an attempt is made to give, in the ultimate analysis, one-tenth of 1 percent of the poor people practically rent free—a charge being made only equal to the amount of the heat provided and the maintenance—the last being paid for by a grant from the Federal Government, at the expense of 99.9 percent of the underprivileged class. This activity should be stopped.

The W. P. A. and the P. W. A. are notoriously inefficient. Of course, the evidence before the investigating committee of the W. P. A. was that the cost of projects under its care was nearly double that of public projects built by a contractor in the regular way.

The P. W. A. unquestionably throughout the country has induced communities to go into buildings which they could not afford to maintain and pay for. The cost of these buildings has been always at least 10 percent more as a result of this operation and generally is a great deal more than that. These two activities should be done away with. A consolidation of these activities under a set-up which I believe to be illegal is absolutely ridiculous. It will absolutely destroy the efficiency and integrity of the entire construction forces of the Government and bring them down to the level of temporary relief agencies.

This new set-up under the President's reorganization plan contains two agencies which expire on June 30, before the proposal can take effect, and another which has exhausted its power to make grants and borrow money. That anyone who studied the proposition could think for a moment of supporting this kind of a proposition is not sensible. It certainly is not businesslike. It certainly is not patriotism. It certainly is not meeting our responsibilities as Members of Congress.

PART 4. FEDERAL LOAN AGENCY

Here again a new agency is created without, in my opinion, any authority of law, superimposed above the others.

The outstanding ridiculous feature of this is the transfer to it of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. This is the Board set up by law for the general control of the savings and loan institutions. It has absolutely no place in a governmental loaning agency. It is an absolute breach of faith with the savings and loan institutions of the Government for us to transfer this Board to a Federal loaning agency. It should not be permitted.

There will be no economy or efficiency resulting from this transfer; the only thing that will result will be the imposition of a useless overhead on almost all of these agencies. This will cost money. It will not promote efficiency but will destroy it.

The Congress should be so sensible of its obligations to the American people that it will express immediately its disapproval of a program to destroy efficiency of government and to mess up temporary relief activities with permanent activities. It should express its disapproval of a plan which obviously will cost money and not save it. No reorganization plan superimposing an overhead on any authority has ever saved money. The only way we can save money is by destroying useless activities. You cannot combine inefficiency of temporary activities without destroying the efficiency of the regular activities.

I am asking that the Congress put patriotism above partisanship and at this time vote in favor of this resolution to protect what little is left after 6 long years of abuse of the efficiency of governmental institutions. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one-half minute.

Mr. Chairman, many Members have requested information as to when a vote may be reached on this resolution. Let me say it is our purpose to endeavor to keep the House in session today until the resolution is disposed of.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, what could be of greater interest to the public at the moment than the question raised by the pending resolution?

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to disturb the Committee, but I do want to hear the debate on this important matter, and certainly the House is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will be in order.

Mr. GIFFORD. I thank the gentleman from Illinois and I sympathize with him because I have no doubt he wants to know something about this measure.

Mr. KELLER. I do.

Mr. GIFFORD. It has been stated that 10 minutes is sufficient time for the Democratic side of the House to rubber stamp, according to custom, this very important message. No hearings have been held. It must pass immediately before the public becomes aroused over it.

I quote from the President's message:

> These measures have all had only one supreme purpose—to make democracy work, to strengthen the arms of democracy in peace or war—

Exactly. This President of ours wants to strengthen the arms of government even in peacetime. He wants tremendous power. This has not heretofore been supposed to be the plan of government during peacetimes.

> We are not free if our administration is weak. But we are free if we know, and others know, that we are strong; that we can be tough as well as tender-hearted.

I know I am tender-hearted to the last degree; my only hope today is that I can be tough. When messages like this come from the President I am reminded of what has gone on heretofore, and, if I may be pardoned a pleasantry, I will use this one:

> WIFE. Every time you see a pretty girl you forget that you are married.
>
> HUSBAND. Not at all. Nothing brings home to me the fact with so much force.

When a pretty message like this comes in under the guise of saving money, there comes to me with much force a reminder of with whom we are dealing in our official relations.

It will be expected that we of the minority who are members of the Committee on Reorganization should make comments on this first installment of the President's recommendations leading to further centralization of power in the hands of the Executive.

This particular measure should possibly not be regarded as a measure for united Republican opposition. However, the minority may well keep in mind that this President of ours has constantly demonstrated his insatiable thirst for power over all governmental functions, even to the point of control of the Supreme Court itself which has been that strong bulwark of safety against those who would do violence to that great charter of our liberties, namely, the Constitution of the United States.

Let us refresh our minds by quoting again the President's exact words:

> We have taken vast powers back to Washington which, in other hands, might be extremely dangerous.

After 6 years of constant attempts at control of Government and the browbeating of legislators themselves, and the constant injection of strange doctrines, especially during the Tugwellian era, it is highly important that any recommendations from the White House should be carefully considered. However, Congressmen are deprived of any real information as to the effect of the proposed changes brought about in this plan No. I, beause no official of the Government dares whisper a word of protest or even approach his Congressman on the matter. The threat of Secretary Ickes, openly proclaimed, that any such approach by anyone under his Department would be disciplined applies generally.

The Democratic Boston Post this morning carries an editorial which I shall let you enjoy with me:

It is as follows:

> The boldface effrontery of the warning issued yesterday to P. W. A. workers by Secretary Ickes should be awarded the grand prize. Mr. Ickes informs employees of that alphabetical bureau they will be disciplined if they are found working against the President's reorganization plan. No fault could be found if the memorandum sent to all employees had been a general statement in opposition to any political undertakings, but to single out one specific measure, and the intimation is that they are to work for it, not against it, savors too much of absolute dictatorship.

I remind you again that we have had no hearings, we have called nobody in to advise with us.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Always to my distinguished friend from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is it the President's plan or Congress' plan?

Mr. GIFFORD. The President said something about working on it for 2 long years, and it appeared suddenly after we gave him the authority in a recent bill.

The gentleman well knows the extraordinary powers originally asked for and how carefully we attempted to limit such powers.

Congressmen recognize the unfairness to those now holding responsible positions if we should insist on their expression of opinion. Many conscientious, successful heads of departments are now to be relegated to the background under full control of someone at the top politically appointed, and who, judging from so many appointments heretofore made, would be taken from a list of men whose only real qualification would be that they are "yes" men for the Executive.

Shall I name some of those appointees? Are they not fresh in your memory?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Always to the gentleman.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. How about the "yes" men who were appointed in previous administrations—Mr. Fall and others?

Mr. GIFFORD. I should think the gentleman would get tired of mentioning Mr. Fall. We have been very kind to this administration. You have had a committee to watch over expenditures that has never been allowed to meet. I, for one, have repeatedly protested on this floor against such inactivity. I am not in pursuit of personalities. You have used the name "Fall." There are probably scoundrels in both administrations. Is one man sufficient to blacken the whole Republican Party, of which I am a member? Does that blacken me because of Fall's action?

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman states that the Committee on Expenditures has not been permitted to act.

Mr. GIFFORD. Exactly.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does the gentleman not know that that committee at this session of Congress has already reported to the House, and the House has passed, six bills?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; peanut bills. No examinations or investigations are made, such as the Appropriations Committee is now conducting in reference to the W. P. A. If present disclosures do not satisfy the gentleman from Missouri that the Committee on Expenditures should long ago have investigated the W. P. A., then I know of no argument that could be brought forward. It has proven the necessity for the demands I have repeatedly made.

It is true that the success of large corporations depends most largely upon the ability of their executive heads. The President of these United States, in contrast with arguments made by him so many times heretofore, says, in his message, that this plan conforms to methods of executive administration used by the large private enterprises which are engaged in carrying on production. When it suits his purposes the "economic royalists" and the great corporations, as operated, are perfect examples for his purpose. I cannot reconcile the two viewpoints as expressed by our Chief Executive.

Such men are appointed by boards of directors with a view to special qualifications for that particular business. Political debts owed by the party and elected officials must be paid by distributing the plums of office. That is how we got Fall, if you will recall.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is that a new philosophy of American government?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; but that is why this method cannot work. You cannot make of a republic a Hitler Government such as the President seems to desire.

Able and efficient heads of departments will now be hampered and made subject to the will and whims of some one placed over many activities, who possibly might not properly understand the problems of any particular one of them.

We read this morning of the probable resignation of the head of the C. C. C. Men like Mr. Fechner are now to be dumped in the personnel grade of Government employees; and even though it says that all personnel are to be transferred, the heads of these departments certainly have the appointive power and, as I have said repeatedly, "many heads may roll." Many of them were appointed with the advice and consent of the Senate. Now they are relegated simply to personnel. Will these independent officials stand for that? They will soon realize the difficulty of explaining their problems and having intelligent and sympathetic assistance from the man at the top, whose attention will be diverted among many activities. Each one will have to await his turn for consideration. The President and legislative committees will get less intelligent information from the one man than they formerly received from the real head of the activity itself. However, discipline and a repression of independent view and action will be a real accomplishment of this centralization of authority.

After 17 years of service in this House, I can only marvel at the change of attitude in the Democratic Party. In my earlier service, centralization of power and even the word "subsidy" would start the Democratic oratorical leaders into a frenzy of debate against such proposals.

Now, however, having fed at the public trough by the workings of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution and by Federal aid extended in every direction that mind of man can invent, all States less fortunate in economic wealth are now seemingly willing to sacrifice their liberties—formerly termed States' rights—a willingness to accept vast centralization of power and dictatorship from Washington.

Does anyone want to deny that? If so, I yield.

Let us not forget the Brownlow report incorporating the President's desire for power, which was referred to our Reorganization Committee and considered in secret for so many months, lest the public hear of those extraordinary demands. We must not forget how the people of the Nation became aroused over those demands, the spectacular fight on the floor of the Congress and the defeat of that first reorganization bill.

Many a man who votes the President this power today—and I hope it will not be a party measure—will have some difficulty in explaining to his people back home why he voted for it, because we ourselves know little about the workings of this plan as yet. It came upon us suddenly. We have had no time to study it. It is not fully explained, and yet you must vote for it. Considering how the public conscience was aroused to the degree that it was, a year ago, if you are now looking for your own safety I would not know what to suggest as a road to safety. It is plainly evident that the plan to rubber stamp it in so short a time is an attempt to prevent the opportunity of hearing from home about the measure.

To be sure, the bill which was recently passed was of very mild proportions as compared to the original demands. Independent agencies of the Government and a few other activities were specifically exempted. He could not abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission and several other agencies. However, you will note that in this plan we are considering today several activities are taken away from those exempted departments and placed under new supervisors, to be hereafter appointed. This illustrates how gradually any of these exempted departments could be robbed of their activities until only a skeleton might remain.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; I thought that would get a response.

Mr. WARREN. I am wondering if the gentleman from Massachusetts will cite just one single activity that has been taken away from any of the exempt agencies and placed anywhere else. The gentleman just stated that now, and I think he ought to tell the House about it.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am very glad to. If I can read, it states here that the Bureau of Public Roads shall be taken away from the Department of Agriculture and placed somewhere else. There are perhaps a dozen of such cases.

Mr. WARREN. But the Bureau of Public Roads was never exempt.

Mr. GIFFORD. The Department of Agriculture was exempted, was it not?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, indeed no.

Mr. GIFFORD. What was exempted?

Mr. WARREN. Why, the 15 or 18 different agencies mentioned in the act.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not have it at hand, but it does not matter. If I have made an error there, I am greatly surprised.

Mr. WARREN. I am sure the gentleman has made an error.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hardly think that I am in error. Many activities of these departments will be placed under new departments, I am sure. Was the Department of the Interior exempted?

Mr. WARREN. Of course, the Department of the Interior was not exempted.

Mr. GIFFORD. So that you can whiffle that about.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the President wants to, can he abolish the Department of the Interior?

Mr. WARREN. No, indeed; he cannot abolish any department of Government.

Mr. GIFFORD. They cannot abolish that?

Mr. WARREN. But the gentleman made the statement——

Mr. GIFFORD. I still make it and I still insist on it.

Mr. WARREN. In justice to the House the gentleman ought to name just one specific activity.

Mr. GIFFORD. In justice to the House I will say that the gentleman from North Carolina says they cannot trouble the Department of the Interior, but they are taking away many of the activities that are grouped under it—many bureaus, even P. W. A. It may be that the gentleman can explain that to you; but if you read the plan you will understand the Department of the Interior is losing some of the bureaus that are under it. I claim they can remove many activities from these departments that are exempt.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman would look at page 2 of the President's message, he would find the statement in the next to the last paragraph that the President has set up an administrative agency in his own office to handle personnel, in spite of what he regards as a prohibition in the exemption of the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. GIFFORD. It may be the language of my statement was not as exact as it might have been; but if you read the report, you will see that these activities are being removed from the departments. That is perfectly plain.

It is not comforting to keep in mind that these vast powers in other hands might be dangerous. Some of us may feel that these powers are being transferred into hands that are now conceivably somewhat dangerous. It will be noted in portions of this present plan that heads of these newly formed agencies will have the power of reappointment and of making new appointments, and many heads will probably fall. Many heads will not wait to roll. If they have had independence of action and now do not want to be subjected to a higher power, they will probably remove themselves from dictated action. Many will remove their own heads before the operation can be performed.

It is highly regrettable that sufficient hearings could not be conducted and the advice of heads of departments taken as to the desirability of many of the suggested changes in this plan. Unless such information is forthcoming, how can the Members of this House vote intelligently? To many of us the claim that there will be a saving of money is not proven. It is ridiculous to many of us. Salaries of the new appointees and the clouds of assistants, clerks, and messengers; added floor space; travel expenses; together with the demand for new rock piles of great buildings, to bring them together under one roof, if possible, will undoubtedly more than offset any possible savings that might be claimed by coordination. Under a Democratic administration always seeking to make more jobs, how much overlapping would be prevented? No; the word "coordination" should be "submission."

I have had some experience in the reorganization of the activities of a State, in my own State, where 90 departments were said to have been brought under 19 heads. Did we notice any savings? We did not. For some 4 years I was chairman of that appropriation committee, so-called, having charge of the budget, and did we notice any savings?

Under a democratic form of government, efficiency is the most difficult end to attain; and unless a nation is fortunate in having really competent executives who fully understand the real problems we are placed in a more unfortunate position than existed previously.

Now, much to my regret, I cannot bring myself to vote for the bill under present consideration, bringing about this transfer of great powers leading to more centralization of government. I would be unfair to myself to vote for a measure with no hearings and with such a lack of information, and certainly in this situation it is much safer to vote "no."

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Has not the gentleman observed in the press a deliberate propaganda effort to leave the impression on the public that this is a very innocuous measure as compared with the original proposition?

Mr. GIFFORD. I have carefully studied the press, and I must confess—and this will be advanced by the other side—there is an almost unanimous approval by the editorial press of the country of this reorganization bill; but half of the editorials expressed grave doubt as to any savings, and they all practically note that there is no abolition of any jobs. But why should they not speak favorably of it? Everybody believes in a reorganization plan properly considered. They have had no opportunity to study this matter and comment as they should upon it. It is only a generalization of editorial opinion, but it is our duty to study the exact condition that is going to prevail in each and every department which we set up, and for the workings of which we are responsible. At present we have had no opportunity to pass upon this. Only a generalization of approval has been had, and almost unanimous doubt is expressed that there will be any real saving. And where there is no saving and no abolition of jobs, what does a reorganization bill amount to?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman tell us whether there have been any hearings on this bill or any testimony taken by the committee?

Mr. GIFFORD. The Taber resolution was considered for about 15 minutes and voted out adversely.

Mr. MOTT. Has any other investigation or hearing been had on the President's proposal?

Mr. GIFFORD. No; the less we know about this, the better for us, appears to be the plan of the majority.

Mr. MOTT. Can the gentleman tell us why that was the case?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, of course, I can only say what I think. In view of what happened to this Congress last year, because of the expressed public opinion of our constituents, it must not be permitted to happen again, and time must not be given for criticism or opposition.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I would like to tell the gentleman from Oregon and the gentleman from Massachusetts and every one else in the House why there was no opportunity for a hearing. This situation is not of our making. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] immediately rushed down and offered a disapproval resolution. Under the act itself, the committee would have been discharged on Saturday on this resolution. If the gentleman had not introduced that resolution then, of course, he would have had 30 or 40 days to have analyzed and studied it, but after he acted, of course, under the bill there has to be action on it. That is not of our making. The gentleman from New York did that.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman will permit, may I inquire whether there was not opportunity to hold hearings and take testimony after the bill was introduced? Did the gentleman say he had only 5 days within which to report it out?

Mr. WARREN. There was never any request for a hearing until yesterday, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] asked if we would have hearings. His resolution has been pending for a week and it would be subject to discharge on Saturday of this week. Now, you gentlemen created that situation. We did not do it, and therefore it is not up to you to come in here and complain.

Mr. MOTT. So far as I am concerned I have created nothing. I am inquiring why no hearings were had on this matter.

Mr. GIFFORD. I need only to refer to the evident joy on the part of the gentleman from North Carolina that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] acted so quickly. It served him in a difficult situation. I do not know whether sufficient signatures could have been procured to force it out of the committee or not, but no action by the House was desired because if we expressed no disapproval, of course, it would then become law. It is too late to argue now, but it is a sufficient reason for anyone to vote against any reorganization plan because of that novel method by which it can become law without affirmative action by both branches of this Congress. [Applause.]

Constant should be our remonstrance against such action. Why did we so forget ourselves that we should ever have set that precedent of legislation becoming law without the affirmative action of both branches? If one branch is in violent disagreement and the other in agreement, still it becomes a law.

There are many phases which I had intended to discuss, but I have not the time. I shall rely upon that very able gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], of the analytical mind, who will, in the brief period allowed him, give you some real information as to the effect of this reorganization plan upon the particular departments involved.

It is the general plan which interests me. The whole theory of representative government is at stake. During the last 6 years democratic government has gradually been undermined by these new doctrines. Now, even the able gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], for whom we have such high regard, during this administration, although conservative as he is, has had to yield to the word "subsidy"; to the taking away of States' rights. I know he cannot subscribe to that doctrine. But, like a good soldier, he has had to go along with his President. You will only take 10 minutes because it is not wise. It is always for the minority to try to speak of these matters. It is a distressing job sometimes when I take the floor and criticize a little or want to amend a little. Even my newspapers are unkind enough to say I am against the whole proposition. That is the risk one takes. Take it all. If you object at all, you are against the proposition.

I want to talk about these six anonymities. There are to be six of them under the control of the President. He says they are to have no power over anybody. That is what the President assured us. Ah, evidently we are going to have six "Charlie Wests" sitting in the dining room. He could not see all of us. So there will have to be six of them to lobby for the White House. After having looked into it—we get no information about what they are going to do—they do not have any power. What on earth are they for? They can only say that the President is pretty busy and he needs six secretaries. He can have all the secretaries he wants now. No. It is for a peculiar and particular reason.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman refers to them as "Charlie Wests." Did he not intend to say "Charlie McCarthys"?

Mr. GIFFORD. Worse than that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. They are not only men to say "yes" but they are men to look us up. They want to know who our friends are, who control us, who our mothers-in-law may be, who may have influence over us. We heard about Ickes yesterday saying that he handled the purse strings. Shall there be another Ickes put at the head of this Public Works Agency and enlarge the scope of his dictatorship? Will you vote for a measure giving all that power to another Ickes? Will you vote for a measure giving this power to another Harry Hopkins, the social worker, whom the President appointed, the last man on earth that could bring any confidence to the businessmen of the country?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I think I had better be interrupted in this outburst of oratory.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I had no intention of having an outburst of oratory, but has the gentleman dined yet, and has he taken advantage of the invitation that was extended?

Mr. GIFFORD. I suppose the gentleman is trying to say that what I am saying is a lot of "boloney." I recognize the insinuation. That is a mean statement to make. I think he could have put it this way: "Why is the gentleman talking like a fool?" Why did you not say that? Then I could have said, "I have to talk that way so that you can understand me." [Laughter and applause.] You will pardon me, but it was a mean statement that you made.

Speaking about bologna, if I may have a happy ending to these remarks, this thing may look good to you. "I thought you said that water was lukewarm. It was cold as ice." "Well, it 'looked' warm, did it not?" I hope you get it. This may "look" good. But after you try it out it may be anything but good. The last 6 years of experimentation on we guinea pigs is still within our memory.

I will close by a rather unhappy line to some of you, I am sure, but I often take some risks. I found this little verse the other day. It may not tie up the argument I have tried to make on centralization of power, but it does tie with my argument with these new dealers of the Tugwellian stripe and the actions of this administration heretofore:

> Ten minutes! My, oh, my, how the donkey struts
> Since its insides have been filled with New Deal guts!
> It has been rejuvenated by that "brain trust" nuts!
> But one-third of the people still live in huts.

[Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I heard a story the other day that rather aptly characterizes the bill that is before us. It is the story of a colored woman who was the servant in a rather generous family. She had become dissatisfied and had taken employment with another family of rather shabby gentility and slightly down at the heel. After 2 weeks with the new employer, she came back to the original family. The master said, "Mandy, what brings you back? Didn't you like it over there?"

"Well," she says, "Massa, there has been too much shufflin' of de dishes for the fewness of the vittles."

I would suggest with respect to this bill that there has been a lot of shuffling of the dishes but a fewness of the "vittles."

You can argue with facility on both sides of this bill. I recall when I was in the law school a very whimsical dean who was worried and solicitous about a certain student because he had that peculiar mental agility that enabled him to argue on both sides of a question. You can argue with eloquence and persuasiveness on both sides of the pending bill. There is a preponderance of editorial opinion in the country in favor of the reorganization plan, but my opinion is that they have not had an opportunity to analyze it. We do not see the implications of the plan. I confess frankly that after some study I do not understand its implications. I do not know what the ultimate purpose is, but let me show you what I mean by the implications in this plan. For instance, on page 12 of the report which embodies, of course, the plan, this statement is made with respect to the Office of Education, which is in the Interior Department:

> The Office of Education and its functions shall be administered by the Commissioner of Education under the direction and supervision of the Federal Security Administrator.

That will be the new administrator, understand; he has not been appointed yet. He is the man who is going to receive $12,000 a year to take over John Studebaker's agency, which is now in the Department of the Interior, and which is a clearing house for education. John Studebaker will lose his identity to a considerable extent; he will lose in some measure at least his power and authority to determine the policies of that agency, because the reorganization plan states that he shall be under the direction and supervision of the Federal Security Administrator.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. At the present time Mr. Studebaker, in the Bureau of Education, is under the Secretary of the Interior. All that will happen under this Executive order will be his transfer into this new agency, where he will have a superior the same as he has today; but the new superior will be in the same position that the present superior will be in. He will have no power to change existing laws or to abolish the functions of the Bureau of Education. If there were a change in the Presidency would there be a change of Secretaries of the Interior? Mr. Studebaker has served under many superiors who have been Secretaries of the Interior. He has always been a subordinate officer, and he remains one under this set-up.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Has my friend finished?

Mr. COCHRAN. I have.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The Bureau of Education was put in the Interior Department a long time ago because it was just the miscellaneous department of the Government. It was the catch-all. There was a time when the Department of Agriculture was the catch-all, and they finally stuck the Weather Bureau down there. There was a time when the Treasury Department was the catch-all, and they put the Bureau of Public Health in the Treasury Department. That is how the Bureau of Education was assigned to the Department of the Interior in the first place, with virtually complete autonomy and independence. It is intended now to transfer it to the Federal Security Agency.

I ask my friend from Missouri: Who is going to be the administrator? What will be his viewpoint? What will be his philosophy? How is he going to impress his views and his ideology upon the Department of Education? That is the essential thing about it and that is the reason I mention this as one of the implications. That I cannot see, and any good friend from Missouri cannot see. I do not offer this particularly as a reason for voting against reorganization as such, but I am pointing out to you that there is some reason, of course, for the editorial sentiment in the country today. They have not had an opportunity to analyze all the implications of the plan, and we have not either. You cannot do it in the short space of 8 or 10 days.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman asked me a question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Personally, I have no idea who is going to be the administrator.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. COCHRAN. Secondly, the administrator will have no power to go beyond existing law. He will be required by the Congress of the United States to administer existing law.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Existing law, I may say to my friend, has exactly nothing to do with it so far as the broad policy of the Federal Security Agency is concerned. When they start out upon a course of security doctrine in the country the Department of Education rises and falls with it in the same proportion as any other agency that may be impounded in that particular organization.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I thought I was going to have a chance to make a little speech, but I yield to my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The New Deal gentleman's statement in defense of the transfer of the Bureau of Education clearly indicates that not one thin dime will be saved the taxpayers' Treasury by reason of this transfer.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I suppose there are some here who are in about that same mixed frame of mind in which I find myself with respect to this bill. I know there are countless agencies and people in the country who want the Government simplified. So do I. We hoped for some modicum of economy even though the deficit for this fiscal year will be four thousand millions of dollars. The $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 or even $35,000,000 which is the suggested saving under this bill is a mere drop in the bucket; it is simply idle talk. With one hand we spend billions, with the other we reclaim a few pennies.

But I have some doubts as to whether that economy will be effected, because when the three new administrators are set up at $12,000 a year and the three assistants are set up at $9,000 a year, and then the coordinating staff is set up to coordinate each one of the five or six agencies in these new groupings, as I stated, I have some grave doubts as to whether or not a single dollar will be saved.

The other thing is this, and the gentleman from North Carolina alluded to it a moment ago: There is no abolition of functions. I think in my speech on the reorganization matter here some weeks or months ago I styled this the regrouping bill, not reorganization bill. I used a simile at that time. I said, "They can rearrange the flowers in the governmental vase, but they cannot remove any, even though they become drooped and somewhat faded."

Here is the living evidence of it. Here is the regrouping of agencies. There has been no dissipation of personnel under the pending bill. So I am wondering where the economies are going to be effected?

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. It seems to me that the able gentleman from Illinois has put his finger on a sore spot. Instead of abolishing any of these agencies, whether they be temporary in character or not, it simply reshuffles the cards and sets up, in addition, three new administrators.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is pretty nearly the situation.

Let us look at the bill and see what it contains, if you are interested in a bit of analysis. The first thing it does is to take the Budget Bureau from the Treasury and put it in the executive department. It was put in the Treasury under the Accounting Act of 1921. Frankly, I see no objection personally to putting the Budget Bureau in the executive department. I think that is the proper place for it. It functions close to the President and he ought to have control. The Treasury has never exercised control, as a matter of fact. So, to me, that is a wholly unobjectionable transfer, and I think it is probably in the interest of efficiency.

Next comes the Central Statistical Board, which is put in the Executive Office. We have had this matter of the Central Statistical Board before the Appropriations Committee for a number of years. My own notion was that it ought to die. It will die this year in the natural course of events. But if they are going to preserve the Central Statistical Board, if they are going to insist on keeping it, then it is all right to merge it with the Budget Bureau, because it may exercise a rather salutary effect and be in position where it can exercise some authority upon governmental agencies.

As the thing is today, with thousands of forms and questionnaires going out, most of these agencies do not have to pay any attention to the Central Statistical Board and, as a matter of fact, they do not pay much attention to it. The result is that the economies have been moderate, to say the least. But if you will merge that agency with the Budget Bureau and make it a case of dollars and cents and appropriations to be made, with this board sitting in the picture they may be able to do some good. So it is quite all right and I have no objection. In my opinion it ought to be lined up with the Budget Bureau.

The next item is the National Resources Planning Board. If there must be such a board, if those functions must be handled by a separate board, then I have no objection to having them placed in the executive branch, because planning, after all, is one of the functions that must be lodged with the President. However, I do make the statement that the planning functions could have been exercised by broadening the power of the Budget Bureau, perhaps, and we might not have gotten so many wild-eyed, crackpot schemes. My objection would be to keeping the Planning Board as an agency but rather expanding somewhat the functions of the Budget Bureau, because then you tie up planning with dollars and cents, you tie it up with the Budget, you tie it up with the appropriations that will be recommended and the estimates that will be made; so they will have some regard for the fiscal solidarity of the Government. But you go out and dip down most anywhere and get a few long-haired planners together, give them plenty of authority, and they will start right out to remake this country. That is the danger of a separate integral planning board.

You will remember when Dr. Tugwell in 1933 made that rather sage observation in one of his books. He stated, "I will roll up my sleeves and remake America." He testified to that effect before a Senate committee. Too often that is the trouble with professional planners. You know, we have been going along now for 160 years pretty well, until one of these visionaries comes along and decides that the good old U. S. A. is not good enough for this generation; it has to be remade and altered to order. So, if there is to be any planning, why not let the Budget Bureau do it? Why not enlarge its functions? Let us shuffle off one more agency. It would be in the interest of simplicity, in the interest of economy, and in the interest of efficiency.

Finally, in the Executive Office there has been placed the Federal Employment Stabilization Office. It has not functioned much heretofore. The reason is they have never received any money, and it seems Government agencies cannot function without the long green. Its purpose has been to coordinate activities and look after the employment potentialities of public works. So, if there is to be a Federal Stabilization Office, very well, let it be put in the executive branch. I have no objection.

So much for the first part of this bill. Now comes item No. 2, the creation of the Federal Security Agency.

There will be an administrator at $12,000 a year, there will be an assistant administrator at $9,000 a year, and there will be a coordinating staff to vitiate many of the possibilities of economy.

Let us make up our minds about this: You set up a Federal Security Agency, and what you have done is set up a department of social or public welfare. You can call it by any other name that you like, it will smell just as sweet or not so sweet. This is going to coordinate the social and welfare activities in the country. It is going to run into lots of difficulty. Here is one danger I want to point out. I think it will become a very powerful lobbying agency in the future, because in proportion as we walk in the pathway of social welfare we reach out and take away from the States the social-welfare functions and activities that they have carried on, and rightly should carry on. So you are going to create here a great agency which, when it gets its guns trained upon Congress, will wangle extra dollars out of it and the economies will go with the wind.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not very unfortunate also that the United States Employment Agency is taken from under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labor? The Department has all the statistics on the subject and knows how to enforce the laws, and so forth. The Department finds jobs for people and was created for that purpose, to protect labor.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I find myself in disagreement with the gentlewoman from Massachusetts on that particular item, and I am coming to it right now, for this reason: We have overlapping and duplicated service now in the field of employment service. There is the United States Employment Service, which administers grants-in-aid to the respective States.

As I recall, about 50 percent is paid by Uncle Sam to maintain these agencies, and the other 50 percent is made up from State and local sources. In the Social Security Board we have the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation, which also makes grants-in-aid to States. There is, therefore, a sharing or division of responsibility for the same line of work; and in the interest of getting away from confusion and in the interest of coordinating that activity, I am not so sure but that placing it in some agency and merging those two functions will be quite all right.

The question has been raised that the functions of veterans' placement may suffer as a result thereof. That may or may not be, and I am not prepared to say, simply because I do not know; but my notion is that while there may have been some hostility expressed in the Social Security Board with reference to the veterans' placement, the thing can be worked out; and if it is not worked out, why, the Congress of the United States by suitable legislation can say that the veterans will get a square shake in the matter of placement, certainly.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The veterans are very much opposed to this consolidation. They have felt it was the only place where they could go to secure jobs. They have also felt that if they were under the Social Security Board they would have unemployment insurance rather than jobs, and jobs pay much better wages, of course, than the compensation they could get for unemployment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But we have this peculiar situation today: We have the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation in the Social Security Board actually making grants of larger amounts than are made by the United States Employment Service, and yet the United States Employment Service shares the responsibility of certification and of the administration of these funds. I believe it would be in the interest of economy and in the interest of expedition to merge these two activities. So, expressing purely a personal opinion, I am not particularly opposed to that item in the reorganization plan.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman so far is making a very fair and very intelligent analysis. He expresses a fear that this Federal security agency may become superlobbyists. As the gentleman well knows, there are 28 separate and distinct agencies of the Government dealing with welfare problems. I am wondering where the gentleman believes these agencies should go and whether there is not a fertile field for consolidation among these 28 agencies. Where could they go except into a security agency?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say that the gentleman in part is correct. I am simply raising the question rather than expressing a fear, for if the administrator of the Federal Security Agency is one who is possessed of a philosophy that will lead us into various and devious paths of the security principle, we know not how far, then it means he has at his command all these agencies, and every beneficiary of these agencies, and it will become a frightful pressure upon the appropriating branch of this Government. Make no mistake about that. We have seen it work before. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I presume the gentleman will explain later why the W. P. A. is made a works administration matter rather than a relief matter? Is it a relief matter or a work matter?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think it is a relief matter.

Mr. GIFFORD. Then why does it not go under this?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is a question for which we must find the answer if we can.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. What is the necessity for weaving these temporary agencies in with permanent agencies?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman will permit, I wanted to discourse on that very briefly just a little later.

Now, going on with the Federal Security Agency, there comes the Bureau of Public Health. It is over in the Treasury Department. You know how it got there. A long time ago it was the Marine Hospital Service. Shipping, Customs, Coast Guard, and that sort of thing were in the Treasury Department, so the Marine Hospital Service was there also and properly there. Later it was converted into the Bureau of Public Health and remained in the Treasury Department. Now it is proposed to put it in the Federal Security Agency. Is it a good or is it a bad move? Well, you take your choice, but I will say to you that it has enjoyed a full measure of independence in the Treasury heretofore. When it gets into the new agency the plan provides that the Bureau of Public Health shall be under the direction and the supervision of the Federal Security Administrator. The Surgeon General of the Bureau of Public Health may or may not remain a free agent. Up to this time he has been a free agent. He could go on the radio and discuss anything in the broad field of public health. He has done a great and a good work in that respect. Now, when he gets into the new agency, he will be under the direction and supervision of the new Administrator. What will the new administrator want? Will he want the Congress to enlarge the functions of health to carry on new social-welfare activities that probably will entail the expenditure of hundreds of millions a year for some kind of socialized health program ranging the whole field of medicine and dentistry?

I do not know. I do not know who the administrator is going to be. I do not know what recommendations he will make to the Congress, but when he turns on all the heat that is at his command, they may wangle some kind of a bill and it may not be particularly to our liking. We may feel it ought to be deferred a number of years, but when they start out, make no mistake, the full power of that lobbying agency will be turned upon the Congress of the United States. They cannot get it until you write it into law, but there is pending in the Senate and there is pending here now a bill providing for a Federal Health Insurance Corporation. I have forgotten who introduced it on this side. The genial Senator from Kansas, ARTHUR CAPPER, introduced it in the Senate. It is to set up an agency to make grants-in-aid to States for health, and it is virtually to make civil servants out of the doctors and the physicians in the country. That will be the ultimate implication of it when we put the Bureau of Public Health under the new Federal Security Agency and let them become a part of the social-welfare activities of the United States.

You see what you are doing? You are placing all these agencies in one basket. You are making them essentially social-welfare agencies and you are concentrating that power in the Federal Government. You are taking it away from the States where it rightfully belongs. Who would profess to see or to understand what the ultimate and logical end of that sort of thing is going to be? I do not know, and I certainly am not going to cast any aspersions upon anybody. I am not going to professionally view with alarm, rather, I just want to point out with what impartiality I can, something which I think is here that bears watching.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I wonder if the gentleman is thinking of that as anything new. Do we not face that same thing in relation to every new enterprise as well as every old one?

Mr. DIRKSEN. What is the point of the gentleman's question?

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman is setting out that there is danger of this House being called upon to pass some law to accomplish some purpose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not a danger, but rather something that we see here every day.

Mr. KELLER. I was going to ask if that is anything new or anything that is especially affected by this reorganization bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; the essential point I am trying to make about the Federal Security Agency is this. As you coordinate all these social-welfare activities, take them away from the States, drop them into one basket here, array them with ample money, give them a chance to lobby with all the power at their command and the large number of the beneficiaries of the Federal Security Agency, we may be constrained under pressure, as we have been so often, and it is no secret in the country as to the pressure put on Congress before to push things through, that we have not had a chance, perhaps, to examine in detail as we should, to impose new social-welfare legislation on the country when it is suffering already from a species of legislative indigestion. Do you not think it is time that we wait a little bit?

Now, how soon is this new agency going to move? I will tell you how soon it is going to move. It is going to move as soon as the administrator has been appointed, and he will be appointed just as soon as the action of this House is known either this afternoon or tomorrow. After the appointment of the administrator, then comes coordination and then comes the devising of new social-welfare programs, to be administered where? From the States? No; it is to be administered from the great gilded domes in Washington, D. C.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman doubt that future Congresses will be as competent about our future activities as is the present one?

Mr. DIRKSEN. We would hesitate to admit that fact, but I suppose they will be.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. Can the gentleman from Illinois conceive of any agency in the United States Government under the executive branch that is more out of place than the United States Public Health Service in the Treasury Department?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I will admit to the gentleman that from the standpoint of functions it has no particular place in the Treasury Department. It got there, of course, very naturally, as a derivation of the marine hospital which was placed there, but I am speaking about this thing not so much from the standpoint of functions as I am from the standpoint of the independence of the Bureau of Public Health and the fear that they may convert it into a social-welfare agency as against the fine independence and the beautiful accomplishments that it has rendered and achieved for the American people throughout the life of that agency.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman expressed the fear——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not fear; the gentleman should not say I cherish fear—let us say there is a question in my mind about it.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman has referred to the activities of the Public Health Service, saying it might be placed in a position to grant Federal aid to the States.

I want to ask the gentleman now whether he will join me, if that bill comes before this House, and use his great talent to help bring about its defeat?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That would be a fair question but for the fact that I do not have any idea what is going to be in that bill. It keeps me busy trying to find out what is in this bill today, let alone finding out what is going to be in some other bill that is now in the amoebic stage, that is just emerging forward to development for the time when it will be deposited on the floor.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Illinois 15 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They might bring in a bill calling for $5,000,000 to coordinate certain health activities. It might be unobjectionable. They might bring in a contributory scheme that might carry $200,000,000 or $500,000,000 or $800,000,000, and then we may have to retrace our steps even as we are going to do under one title of the Social Security Act, in order to appease the businessmen of the country and to lift the great deterrent tax obstruction. They are going to forego the glorious privilege of collecting that other one-half of 1 percent from now until 1942. So, in all fairness, you cannot express yourself upon a nebulous proposal of which I know exactly nothing.

Mr. COCHRAN. Knowing the principle involved, does not the gentleman believe that $5,000,000 at the outset is just as dangerous as $50,000,000, because once it is started there is no stopping it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. If the gentleman can tell me the basis on which that bill will be set up, I can give him an answer right now. He does not know and I do not know. I cannot even argue about the principle until I find out whether it is going to be concentrated here or whether we will shovel a little money to the States and let them do the job without regimenting the doctors and physicians and surgeons of the country.

Mr. COCHRAN. All Federal aid is concentrated in Washington, because the rules and regulations are set up under which it is to be allocated, and unless the States abide by the rules and regulations they will get no allocation. So, therefore, the power would be centralized in the Bureau of Public Health.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. With fear and trembling I must confess that my brother from Missouri is exactly correct. It is concentrated in Washington and it has been provoking alarm and apprehension in the hearts and minds of the American people.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The Reorganization Act prohibits the President from creating a new department, but if he had authority under that act to create a new department and he wanted to create a department of social security or a department of public works, would he go about it in any different manner than he has gone about the creation of these two agencies? And, in the gentleman's opinion, is there any real difference between the agency as set up in this plan and a department, at the head of which would be a secretary?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman is exactly correct. For instance, the President in his message says we will consolidate all these functions in 10 executive departments and 3 agencies. Now, the next step will be—why not call them secretaries? Why not give them executive departmental rank? Then you have not 10 Cabinet departments, but you have 13; and you will have absorbed those functions, permanent and temporary alike. Where the temporary expires, the chances are we will be asked to confer that authority upon those that are permanent.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Is there anything in this reorganization plan that does decentralize or tends to stop the centralization of power here in Washington?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No. It is very definitely centralized. The bill speaks for itself in that respect. It means more and more control of functions down here. I do not pass upon that item so much at this particular time, because there may come times when some centralization of divergent agencies scattered all over and placed under one authority might be all right, but there is no manner of adjusting one's self to that problem academically. But here is a proposition before us, and I am seeking to do it with respect to the proposition before us.

Now, what I have said about the Bureau of Health is in a measure true of the Office of Education. It is in the Department of the Interior. It has enjoyed great freedom and independence. It is the clearing house, if you please, for educational information. Now, if it is brought under the direction and supervision of the Federal Security Administration, I do not know what is going to happen, but I venture the opinion that Mr. Studebaker is not going to enjoy quite the liberty of action and quite the freedom and quite the independence that he has enjoyed up to this time. That is my opinion. It looks to me like a very natural inference in this situation.

The National Youth Administration is concentrated under the Federal Security Agency. Opinions differ as to the National Youth Administration. I have received many letters from people back home who want the appropriations continued, who think it is a good thing.

I am not insensible that it is just temporary. Put it in here and it may expire, but you know there is going to be a way of making the National Youth Administration permanent just as sure as anything, and you will see these temporary agencies falling into the mold of permanent rigidity when you hitch them up with a couple of permanent horses. Hitch up a weak horse with a strong horse and keep it there long enough and one of two things is going to happen: Either one will go up or the other will drop down. With five permanent agencies put one or two temporary agencies and what is going to happen? Why, the temporary agencies are going to fit right in there like part of a three-team unit. After a time National Youth Administration, whether we like it or not, is probably going to be hardened into permanency and will become another of the social-welfare activities, not of the States but of the United States of America, administered from Washington.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. WARREN. Is not the gentleman speculating?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes, yes; quite.

Mr. WARREN. He is speculating as to what some future Congress may do. The gentleman, it seems to me, has gotten away from the trend of his early argument. I would say that unless the gentleman changes his argument terribly in the next 5 minutes, I am going to be disappointed if he does not vote against this resolution, for he is making a mighty good speech for it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to my good friend from North Carolina that I approach this entirely with an open mind. I say to him frankly that I do not know how I am going to vote on this bill, whether I am going to vote for it or vote against it. I think many others are not quite sure, simply because they do not quite know. I make full and free confession of it, because you know open confession is good for the soul. I take advantage of this opportunity to think out loud, and probably out of my thinking will come a few solid propositions that will become the platform on which I can stand when the roll is intoned.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MASON. Is it not the gentleman's purpose to point out the implications of the plan? In order to do this he must speculate to a considerable degree. Is not that right?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right. I say to my friend that I not only speculate on future Congresses, but I speculate on what we will do in this session and in the next session.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Briefly.

Mr. SHORT. Under existing law many of these temporary agencies born under the cry of emergency will soon expire.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. If this reorganization plan, however, is enacted into law not one, not a few, but several, if not many, of these so-called temporary agencies born of emergency will be frozen into a permanent agency of government along with other bureaus.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me admonish the gentleman that the original reorganization bill did not contemplate that a temporary agency might be continued whose functions would otherwise expire.

Mr. SHORT. But their functions will become absorbed in other ways.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, yes; assimilation and absorption go on continuously.

Mr. SHORT. What is the difference?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Their objects and purposes are merged, as we have seen so often, and they become permanent functions after awhile. So much for the National Youth Administration. Let us look for a moment at one more item, the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The Civilian Conservation Corps is also grouped with others in the Federal Security Agency. The C. C. C. expires on the 30th of June 1940. It has received a fine testimonial from people everywhere. I think rather highly of the Civilian Conservation Corps. They have done a splendid lot of work, but it is not a security agency. There is not a Member of this House who lives out in the country anywhere but can testify that it is a conservation agency. We see them out there doing conservation work. Some of these camps are concentrated under the Interior Department, others in the Department of Agriculture, and some are doing work for the War Department.

Mr. DONDERO. And they are fighting forest fires.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They are fighting forest fires, yes; and these are not security functions; these constitute conservation. So to place the C. C. C. under Federal Security is rather illogical.

Let us now look at Federal Works for a moment. I think the saving is going to be small, for one thing, in consolidating P. W. A., W. P. A., the Public Buildings Branch of Procurement, the Buildings Management Branch of the National Parks Service, and the United States Housing Authority in the Federal Works Agency. There is a tendency, I would say, as has been pointed out before, to confuse the credit and engineering service performed by the Government with the construction services. Let us look at it for a moment with this premise in mind.

The Bureau of Public Roads will be shifted from the Department of Agriculture and put under the Federal Works Agency. The Bureau of Public Roads is not a construction agency, is not a works agency. If you have any idea that it is, ask Mr. MacDonald about it. It is a credit distribution agency operating under the Federal Aid Act of 1916—the Hayden-Cartwright Act and amendments thereto. Under these acts the Federal Government makes grants to the States in proportion to population and other factors. The States submit their plans after we tell them how much money they are to receive from the Federal Treasury. We do a little laboratory work here, we spend a million or so for supervision, but it is very essentially a supervisory agency, not a construction agency.

Now, we put it in the Federal Works Agency, and there is some objection to that. After all, the big job they are going to undertake from here on out for a while will be the farm-to-market road system. It will be built by the States. It will be administered by the highway agency. The money will come from here. The plans will be approved here. The supervision will be from here. But it is not a works agency.

Yet under this reorganization proposal it is put in the Federal Works Agency.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to know whether, in the gentleman's opinion, we can save money in reorganizing otherwise than by consolidating the smaller agencies into the larger ones?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman ask whether we can save any money?

Mr. KELLER. Yes. I would like to know how it can be done.

Mr. DIRKSEN. We can save a paltry sum. You cannot abolish a single function under the bill. You can consolidate them; you can transfer them; but the bill recites specifically that you cannot abolish functions. Frankly, I share with the gentleman some apprehension as to how we are going to save money in substantial quantities so that we can make some impression upon the American people so far as economy is concerned. At the maximum—and my friend from North Carolina will bear me out—it is pretended we will save $35,000,000.

Mr. KELLER. How much?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Thirty-five million dollars at the very outside.

Mr. WARREN. Fifteen million dollars to twenty million dollars on an overhead of $235,000,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. That is a rather substantial saving.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Look at the President's own estimate of the deficit for 1939 and for 1940. What is it for 1940? When we wind up on June 30, 1941, what will be the deficit? According to the President, $3,400,000,000, or thereabouts. Now, then, we will pass some deficiency bills. So we will go right back to $4,000,000,000. What is $15,000,000? What is $20,000,000? What incentive is that to the business element of the country to start the wheels going so that 11,000,000 pairs of idle hands can get back to work? What incentive is it? Not much.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman several times in his speech has lamented the fact that we are not able to abolish functions. I also lament that fact. I am going to recall a little ancient history to the gentleman. When that question was up I looked over there and I saw my distinguished friend from Illinois stand up over there and support an amendment which would prohibit the abolition of any functions.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have no recollection of that, I may say. If the gentleman will bear me out, in the conference with the Senate——

Mr. WARREN. This was not in conference.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The thing we contended for was the fact that under the bill you could abolish no function. You could achieve no substantial economy.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman will recall that the provision prohibiting the abolishment of functions was not in the House bill. It was placed in the bill by the Senate. The minority Members of the House in conference were opposed to receding upon that proposition. I called attention on the floor of the House when the conference report was up for consideration to the fact that the bill would not result in savings because it prohibited the abolishment of functions.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly so; and I think that was the position that was taken.

Mr. WARREN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman from New York is entirely correct about what happened in conference. The Senate prohibited the abolition of functions and we were more or less sandbagged into accepting that proposition. The point I make is that as the bill left the House it provided for abolition of functions, and when the amendment was offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER] the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] supported the amendment.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I have no recollection of that. I have not refreshed myself on all the action that took place at that time. The gentleman may or may not be correct, but I have some doubt as to whether he is correct. If there is any record to substantiate that, I would, in all humility, admit my own error.

Mr. KELLER. May I ask another question? Does not the gentleman think the N. Y. A. has been a great blessing to the youth of the country?

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I say to my good friend from Illinois, it would take quite a while to answer that question. It probably has redeeming features and some not so redeeming.

Mr. KELLER. I wonder if the gentleman has looked into the matter, and I ask the question for the reason that educators of the country have written me on the subject. I have not only been thoroughly convinced from their viewpoint, but from the viewpoint of the actual operation of it in my own district. There I say it has been an unqualified blessing in every way. There has been only one difficulty and that is the fact it has not been capable of very great extension along the very lines we are using at the present time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It may be that one of the real objections to the N. Y. A. might be located in the person of one by the name of Aubrey Williams, who has a habit of making the most curious and peculiar speeches about people sticking together in order to keep the administration in power, regardless of the method by which that may be done.

So N. Y. A. in some measure rises and falls by the horizon of ideals that has been established by the man down there, who certainly is a political realist if there ever was one.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. I do not want to answer for the gentleman from Illinois but as for myself I should like to say to the gentleman that practically every Member of this House worked his own way through school and college by firing furnaces, mowing lawns, and polishing doorknobs, but the youth of today under N. Y. A. have been robbed of their independence, their self-respect has been destroyed, ambition has been absolutely eaten out of their hearts, and they have been rendered dependent upon a patronizing and paternalistic Government in Washington.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman accepts the idea that the present crowd are no good; is that the idea?

Mr. SHORT. In addition to that, it has fostered communism; otherwise it is fine.

Mr. KELLER. I do not favor communism, but will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot yield further.

Let me say to the members of the committee today that when you think of the youth of the country and of the programs and panaceas that have gone out from here, I know of no more expressive way to show the disintegration of spirit on the part of some of the youth of America than to read this headline carried in a high-school paper at Denver in June when those young men and women came out into the realistic world. This headline was, "W. P. A., here we come." God save the mark that the youth of America should look out into the horizon and then draw themselves up to full stature and say, "W. P. A., here we come." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to my friend from Denver.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I may say to my distinguished friend from Illinois that on sundry and divers other occasions he has referred to Denver, in some cases without complete accuracy.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I may say to my friend I will give my friend the authority for that statement. It comes from the Readers' Digest, which is pretty fair authority, I would say.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I should like to see the original paper and not a secondary authority such as the gentleman refers to.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Does the gentleman say it has or has not happened? Does the gentleman say it has not happened?

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. It has not been demonstrated by the mere statement of the gentleman, based on a secondary hearsay source.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am saying that the statement comes from the Readers' Digest, which is a pretty authoritative source that is quoted in many deliberative bodies of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Whether or not it is quoted in deliberative bodies of the United States, I will say it is not a complete or accurate authority.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, the gentleman gets up here and says, "It is not true, because I never heard of it." I will say in all deference to my friend that that is no argument at all. If the gentleman wants to disprove it as against the authority of the Readers' Digest, why, first of all, let him write to the Denver high school and see whether this headline did not appear. That would be infinitely better.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The evident purpose of the gentleman has been on this and other occasions to make reference to something that is alleged to exist or to have happened in Denver and to make a slighting remark about Denver. Even if the incident occurred—and the gentleman has produced no sufficient evidence of its occurrence, as he, as a lawyer, well knows—it was a mere bit of schoolboy humor, not an evidence of the disintegration of spirit on the part of the youth of Denver or of America.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I do not yield any more, unless my friend has some authority that it did not happen. I stick to my statement, and I have quoted the authority. If the gentleman wants it, I will bring the written authority to him insofar as I have it.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Bring it in.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It may be secondary, but I am willing to consider it as a kind of primary authority. The gentleman should not get upset because I talk about his town, because they talk about my town.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield any further.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. This is not the first time the gentleman has misrepresented things alleged to exist or to have happened in Denver, and then when the gentleman's attention has been called to such errors he has declined to correct them.

Mr. BENDER rose.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I had no idea my friend from Denver was so thin-skinned about his town and about the great State of Colorado, I may say. It could have happened anywhere, as a matter of fact.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I will say to the gentleman I am always ready to defend my city and my State.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman to yield merely to make this statement: The opposition to this proposition asked for 10 minutes in which to present their case, and we were given 5 hours.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am afraid it is not going to be enough.

Mr. BENDER. Since we started using our 5 hours the opposition has taken up most of the time of this side. If the gentleman wants additional time, I would suggest that he ask for it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. With apologies to everybody, including my good friend from Colorado—and I still stand by that statement until it is disproved——

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Not just now. I am afraid my hour will be up. I asked for only 30 minutes and I will be violating the rules of the House shortly. I want to complete first my discussion of the Federal Works Agency.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me continue now and I will yield later.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman's time be extended 10 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman does me too much honor, I am sure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is under the control of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Now, let us go on for a moment to the United States Housing Authority, which has been lumped in with Federal Works Agency. It deals with public housing problems and would it not have been more logical to take all the housing agencies and lump them in one group and set up a kind of housing authority for housing administration? Here, for instance, we have Home Owners' Loan Corporation and it actually disburses money on homes and administers property as well. Then there is the Federal Housing Administration, which insures loans that are made by private financing institutions or, at least, it did at one time. Then there is the United States Housing Authority, which deals with slum clearance, the building of group houses and large units through public housing bodies, and, finally, there is the Farm Security Administration, which has been doing some work in that direction, and I would say that if this matter were pursued from the standpoint of logic it would have been infinitely better, instead of putting the United States Housing Authority under the Federal Works Agency, to set up an integral housing group and to consolidate all the housing activities of the United States in such a group. It would really develop efficiency and effect a national housing program that is well coordinated.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Then there is the Public Buildings Branch of the Procurement Division and the Buildings Management of the National Park Service. As the name implies, this is a management service. One looks after buildings in the District of Columbia, and the other looks after buildings in other sections of the country.

I believe a merger of these two functions is quite all right. It does not necessarily have to be in the Federal Works Agency, because it is not a works function. It could have been left in the Treasury Department.

Now comes the W. P. A. I am only going to make one observation about it, and that is this: W. P. A., as we all know, and as was stated to us at the time we created W. P. A., was essentially a relief agency, a work relief agency, but not essentially a works agency as comes within the compass of the Federal Works Agency proposed in the reorganization plan. It does not deal necessarily with durable buildings nor with public works as we conceive the term, and so I am not so sure it ought to belong in the agency as provided.

This is all I want to say about the second group; and, finally, there comes the loan agencies. The Farm Credit Administration, the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, and the Commodity Credit Corporation are kept in the Department of Agriculture.

I think it is O. K. to put Commodity Credit Corporation there because they are dealing with farm commodities and surpluses, but, so far as the Farm Credit Administration is concerned and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation dealing with consolidated bonds in land banks and rural credits, if it is a credit agency, why not put it where it belongs? If you are going to recognize extensions of credit as a policy of government, why not put it in the Treasury? If it is done for the purpose of having some influence upon currency reform and monetary measures, it might very well have been grouped in the Federal Reserve Board. I am just making the suggestion. I recognize the fact that they deal with rural people, that they deal with credits to farmers, but the objective, of course, is credit pure and simple, and it ought to be classified and identified from the functional standpoint as a credit agency, and maybe it ought to have been in the Treasury Department. In any event, to leave them in the Department of Agriculture will mean that the head of that Department might be importuned on credit matters relating to agriculture to the point where it impairs his freedom to deal with the basic problems of agricultural production and distribution as he should.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I want to compliment the gentleman for the suggestion he makes, and I hope the President one of these days will follow out his suggestions.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am pleased the RECORD will show that the gentleman and I are in agreement on that. As a matter of fact, the gentleman and I agree on lots of things. I like the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman does not like me a bit better than I like him, and he knows it. [Laughter.] I gave the gentleman a fine fish dinner yesterday, did I not?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. And I want to compliment the gentleman from Illinois upon his wonderful speech today. He has found credit in the President's order. He has also doubted the wisdom of some of his suggestions; but what worries mè, after hearing the gentleman's excellent speech, is whether he is going to vote "yes" or "no" or "present" on this resolution. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman from Missouri is not going to embarrass me with that kind of question. I want to say I feasted royally on the trout and the whitefish he served downstairs, and today I want to repay him by trying to find a few fish in this bill.

Now, getting back to the loan agencies, there is included, of course, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Electric Home and Farm Authority, the RFC Mortgage Co., and others.

There is listed here the Electric Home and Farm Authority, dealing with the discount of paper, discount of paper that is issued for the purchase of washing machines, curling irons, electric ironers, and all that sort of thing.

A credit agency. Why was it not grouped with the Rural Electrification Administration, which advances money for wiring houses, installing plumbing on the farms, and all that sort of thing? That would have been the logical place for it.

As for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which is lumped in the Federal lending agencies, why was it not set up with the other housing agencies? The Federal Housing Administration, the United States Housing Authority, and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, properly speaking, should all have gone into the same group.

There is included also the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. Why was it not placed with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation from a functional standpoint? That probably would have been better.

Finally, there is the Export-Import Bank. Here it is put in the Federal lending agency. Properly speaking, it ought to have gone with the Department of Commerce.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think I have occupied the floor longer than I should and have trespassed upon your patience and good humor, so I want to bring this rather informal discussion to a close. I had only one purpose in making this statement today, and that is in my humble way to show what is going to happen, as I see it: how they are going to be allocated in these different agencies; what their functions are; and my own personal judgment as to where they might better have been included, in the interest of simplification, identity of interest and function, and finally, perhaps, just a little bit of economy. You can take it or leave it. I can see considerations for approving this bill. The editorial opinion of the country, for instance, says it is all right. They have not analyzed it. We do not know what the implications are. I do not believe I have a right to asperse the character or reputation or idealism of the President of the United States and to say that this is what he is going to do, and that is what he is going to do, or that he is going to subvert some agency to something other than a good public end, but you can see the political possibilities in some of these.

So I say to you I see good and I see bad. I resolve it into your keeping.

Before I close, I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am sure the gentleman does not want to leave the impression that American college boys and girls would look forward to W. P. A. if private enterprise offered them an opportunity to work at decent wages?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Oh, the gentleman is absolutely correct. There is no vigorous, pulsing, young American heart that would accept relief or the bitter crumbs of charity or the hand-outs of any government, no matter how bountiful it might be, if he could look the world in the face and with rugged hands and feeling heart say to the world, "I have got a job." That is the answer.

There may be simplicity in this measure, but there are times when it is doubtful whether substance should be sacrificed for streamlining. This bill may produce some efficiency. In fact, the subordination of heads of departments like that of Education and Public Health and Public Roads to the administrators of the new departments may provide so much efficiency as to be destructive of the will of Congress. And as for economy, the estimated saving of $20,000,000 a year might be and probably will be offset by the increased appropriations which will be requested when these new agencies get under way and mark out their fields of activity. Abraham Lincoln used to say that every proposition was a mixture of good and bad and that the true rule was to accept when the good outweighed the bad and to reject it when the bad outweighed the good. I am of the opinion that in this bill the Nation must give too much for what it gets. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman indicate how many other speakers he has, simply for information?

Mr. TABER. I have three at the present time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, since this bill was passed on April 3, asking that we have reorganization of government, we have the first proposal submitted to the Congress, a big dose in a short time. I am confident that the Government needs reorganization. No one can believe that we do not, if he knows anything about our Government. In order to prove that assertion, I want to read to you from a speech that was entered in the RECORD by Senator VAN NUYS. It is a speech given by Senator BYRD last October. Just let me read to you a part of this speech, and if it does not prove to all Members of Congress that we need reorganization, then I certainly do not know what the Members of Congress might be thinking about:

> The fact is that we are paying for a gigantic, gangling Government of some 150 major agencies and an uncounted number of subdivisions. We are paying for a Government that has not had a thorough overhauling since it was established. It has been growing continually, but since the turn of the century the record shows marked increases in costs and complexity. Piled upon a previous accumulation of disjointed agencies we now have half again as many agencies as we had before the depressions, when, to meet emergencies, we created by statute and Executive orders, agency after agency virtually without regard for coordination in the Federal Government pattern.
> Some of these agencies fill very definite needs. Others overlap. Some have outlived their usefulness or have been superseded. There are glaring cases of duplicated effort. Where the Government was complex before, it frequently is found to be confusing now. To point out 50 Federal agency legal divisions in Washington alone is enough to describe the Federal jungle.
> There have been at least 29 agencies concerned with lending Government funds, according to reports taken from Government records.
>
> There have been at least three agencies concerned with insuring deposits and loans.

There have been at least 34 agencies concerned with the acquisition of land.

There have been at least 16 agencies concerned with wildlife preservation.

There have been at least 10 agencies concerned with Government construction.

There have been at least nine agencies concerned with credit and finance.

There have been at least a dozen agencies concerned with home and community planning.

There have been at least 10 agencies concerned with materials of construction.

There are more than twoscore personnel officers for the Government listed in Washington offices alone.

There are more than 100 information and publications offices in Federal agencies at Washington.

There are more than 100 Federal agency libraries in Washington, besides the Library of Congress.

The Federal Government operates an average of one motor vehicle for every 1,200 people in the United States, and they travel enough miles every year to traverse nearly every highway in the world.

Without counting those who are on relief, or those receiving pensions, or those in the Army, the Navy, and the Marines, or those in the legislative and judicial branch of the Government, there are more people on the Federal civil executive pay roll than there are people—men, women, and children—living in the State of Maine, or New Hampshire, or Vermont, or Rhode Island, or North Dakota, or South Dakota, or Delaware, or Montana, or Idaho, or Wyoming, or New Mexico, or Arizona, or Utah, or Nevada.

The great majority of these people do not work in Washington, and there are more than a hundred thousand of them in the Nation's Capital. This number alone is twice as many as 5 years ago.

The above statement of the good Democratic Senator from Virginia shows definitely we need reorganization. How will we accomplish it? How will it be done? Who will do it? That is the great and all-important question. At least it is to me. Remember the President had for 2 years the power to reorganize and he did nothing. No guaranty of saving any money for Government operation has been shown; but, on the contrary, it looks like the continuation of New Deal agencies set up by the New Deal and operated by the New Deal in an extravagant manner.

Senator BYRD's statement goes on to state how many people have been employed, and the fact that in the last 5 years we have doubled the number of employees on the Government pay roll. So it certainly does prove to us that we need reorganization of the Government.

What are some of these new bureaus? I will enumerate a few of them:

The great question, however, is, How shall we reorganize the Government? I ask the gentleman from North Carolina or the gentleman from Missouri—two Members of the House in whom I have as great confidence as anyone else in Congress—since they have tried to work out this reorganization plan, and since it has been proposed and the bill has been passed, what part have they played in this reorganization? Has it been their work, their handiwork, that is suggested in this reorganization reported by the President of the United States? I would like an answer.

Mr. WARREN. Does the gentleman ask that question of me?

Mr. RICH. I would like an answer to my question from you, please.

Mr. WARREN. I assure the gentleman that it is not my handiwork. I like candor. I can tell the gentleman that the gentleman from Missouri and I were told what this order would be, and had an opportunity to know of its general content several days before it was submitted to the Congress. Outside of that, I know nothing whatever about it.

Mr. RICH. I appreciate the gentleman's statement. If the gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Missouri were to carry out the proposals of this reorganization plan, I would have a whole lot more of confidence in it than I do with its coming from the Chief Executive of the United States.

Again I state that I hold no ill will whatsoever toward the President of the United States, but I call attention to these statements made by the President of the United States, Franklin D. Roosevelt. He made this statement at Sioux City on September 29, 1932:

> We are attempting too many functions, and we need a simplification of what the Federal Government is giving to the people.
> I accuse the present administration of being the greatest spending administration in peacetimes in all our history—one which has piled bureau on bureau, commission on commission, and has failed to anticipate the dire needs or reduced earning power of the people. Bureaus and bureaucrats have been retained at the expense of the taxpayer.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt, the present President of the United States, made that statement in Sioux City, Iowa, in 1932, when he was seeking election as President. Let us look at the record of the President of the United States since his election to office. He has authorized by Executive order, or has requested the Congress to set up more bureaus, more functions of government, than any 10 Presidents in the history of our Nation.

I quote again from a statement of the President. This statement was made in Brooklyn on November 4, 1932:

The people of America demand a reduction of Federal expenditure. It can be accomplished not only by reducing the expenditures of existing departments, but it can be done by abolishing many useless commissions, bureaus, and functions, and it can be done by consolidating many activities of the Government.

Many times in the preelection campaign he promised to cut down Government agencies, Government functions, and Government expenditures. Has he done it? Has he made any effort to do it?

No. Instead he has done the very opposite.

The whole meat in the coconut of our consideration of this reorganization proposal is summed up in the following observation: If a man promises to do one thing and then does something else, how many times shall we place our confidence in him? How many times are we to give him sole power to do something when he promises one thing but does the direct opposite?

If the resolution now under consideration passes, the reorganization he has proposed will become effective, and we shall have passed over to him and confirmed that right and that privilege.

The Democratic platform of 1932 promised:

We advocate an immediate and drastic reduction of governmental expenditures by abolishing useless commissions and offices, consolidating departments and bureaus, and eliminating extravagance to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Federal Government.

The President himself said:

I am for that platform 100 percent.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. Since the gentleman is quoting platforms, I call his attention to the Republican platform of 1932, which favored a reorganization of the Government and which said that the President of the United States is the only one who could do it.

Mr. RICH. The Republican platform; yes. But they did not expect such a President as we have now. [Laughter.] They expected an honest, honorable, conscientious, hard-working man, a man who has had experience, a man who knows something about business, a man who when he says he will do a thing, does it. The people of the United States got fooled, and so did the Republican Party.

Let us go a little further in the matter of the proposed reorganization. We have 10 major departments of government. My idea of reorganizing the functions of government was a reorganization of functions of long standing, not of temporary agencies.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I have listened intently to the gentleman two or three times today on this matter, but I still would like to know what the gentleman's position is. Is he against the bill or is he for it?

Mr. RICH. I think this way: We need reorganization, but I have seen things happen here that have disturbed me profoundly. When I place confidence in men to do certain things and they fail me not once but two, three, or four times, I do not propose to put my faith in them longer. Certain things belong to the Congress and must be reclaimed by the Congress. We are supposed to cut down Government expenses. We are supposed to give an honest and efficient reorganization of the Government. This is your duty, this is my duty; and I propose to do my best honestly and conscientiously to do my duty.

If we place this power in the hands of the President, we do not know whether there will be any accomplishments or not, and I am not going to trust him any further. That is my answer.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield. I do not have the time.

Mr. Chairman, we are not by this bill reorganizing the old functions of the Government. We are taking these New Deal agencies that were set up and making them greater. We are making them permanent. Putting them under the direct supervision of the President.

We are starting a Federal works agency and making that a permanent set-up of the Government. We are creating a Federal security agency as one of the major bureaus. We are creating a Federal lending agency, as if it were going to be necessary for the Federal Government all the rest of our lives to continue making the loans that are being made today.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from North Carolina, I ask the gentleman from Missouri, I ask the majority leader, I ask all the gentlemen on that side of the aisle this question: If we continue to go into debt to the extent of three, four, or five billion dollars a year, as we have in the last 5 years, where are we headed? What is going to happen to us? I ask anyone on that side of the aisle that question. Where are we going to get the money? We have been promised time and time again that the American resources would be conserved. We find that from July 1 last year until April 28 this year, the Government has gone in the red to the extent of $2,882,952,434. The Government will be in the red to the extent of at least three and one-half billion dollars before July 1 this year, and it will be in the red another three and one-half billion dollars when we get through with the year 1940.

Mr. Majority Leader, you promised to some day try to have the Budget balanced. When is that time going to come? Let me read a quotation from a statement the majority leader made on January 18, 1938. Nothing could have been finer, nothing could have been more appropriate, but we want to know when that time is coming. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] said at that time that, "Some of these days whether we want it or not, we have got to do what the sane individual would do, what the sane, sound management of a corporation would do if it is to continue to operate; that is at some time this Government must balance its outgo with its income."

Mr. Majority Leader, when will that time be? Can you tell us? Have you got any idea? Has any Member on this side of the aisle any idea or can he tell us when that sometime will come?

Let us hope it will come soon. This reorganization bill in saving will be only a drop in the bucket. I question if there will be any saving at all.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the expressed opposition to the reorganization measure that was before the Congress last year was profound and overwhelming. Its attempted passage struck fear into the hearts of all true Americans. They saw in its passage a dangerous thrust against our Constitution and liberties. That opinion was expressed to Congress in sufficient volume and intensity to bring about the defeat of the measure. The event heartened many of us to believe that possibly, after all, our statesmanship showed promise of preserving something of our Constitution and American system.

Came the second reorganization bill April 3, 1939. It passed both Houses easily. No opposition by the public was apparent. Yet, in my opinion, this reorganization measure is at least twice as bad as the one defeated last year. Why did the public not oppose it? Because they did not understand it. It was framed in such a manner and couched in such terms as to conceal its real intent and meaning. Indeed, it was so cleverly drawn and presented that it gave the appearance of not being a reorganization measure at all. It did not contain even a suggestion of any plan. Its context merely stated the President would submit a plan to Congress. It did contain a sop for many Congressmen, the exemption of some 21 Government agencies from any reorganization plan the President might set up. Apparently this had a sweetening effect upon many of the Members. I am certain if no agencies had been exempted the bill would not have passed. Yet just a little reflection should convince anyone that the exemption of these 21 agencies from the control of the Executive was an utterly futile gesture. Every agency of this entire Government is now a prey to complete Executive control and domination. I shall show the reason for this later.

It is difficult to describe the iniquity of this bill. First of all, it represents something entirely new in legislation in the United States. Perhaps no precedent for it can be found in the proceedings of any of our legislative bodies. The measure provided not for a reorganization plan but for the submission by the President of one. Then it provided that any plan he might submit would become a law, unless both Houses of Congress rejected it. Legislation by negative action. Of course, the promoters of the bill very well knew if they could get this through there would be little or no opportunity to defeat any reorganization plan that might be submitted. Once it was passed it became a very easy matter to so frame a plan and to so manage it here in Congress as to make it practically invulnerable to successful attack. This we now see before us.

The defeated reorganization bill of last year at least had the merit of being forthright. It actually embodied a reorganization plan which Congress and the Nation could see and understand. The bill we passed contains all but an infinitesimally small part of last year's measures, but in true Machiavellian style, which characterizes so much of recent legislation passed by this Congress, its true intent is completely concealed. This reorganization bill might better be called a handcuff bill. The President wanted his reorganization bill, and in order to get it he had to first put handcuffs on Congress. This is the first time Congress ever passed a bill handcuffing itself, which gives the Chief Executive complete power to pass his own legislation. Oh, what wisdom, statesmanship, and patriotism were here exhibited by this, the greatest parliamentary body that ever was or perhaps will be. Imagine the thrill our children and future generations will get when they read about this.

Are these powers really sought to effect economies and efficiency in our governmental departments? After adding from 50 to 75 new and all-powerful bureaus and 300,000 new political jobs, after doubling the regular operating costs of the Government, after increasing the Federal debt by $25,000,000,000 in peacetime within a period of 6 years, in the midst of the most profligate and wasteful spending any nation in the world was ever engaged, with the President lashing Congress into more and more spending, and with such colossal inefficiency in government operation as never before recorded in history, we are now to believe the purpose of this reorganization bill is to bring about efficiency and economy in government.

"The overhead administrative costs of all the agencies affected in reorganization plan No. I is about $250,000,000," says the President in his "first plan on Government reorganization." He estimates his plan No. I will make an annual saving of between fifteen million and twenty million dollars, or about 7 percent—but this affects only the administrative costs of these agencies and "does not include the loans they make, the benefits they make, the wages of the unemployed who have been given jobs; it does not include the loans and grants to States, or, in short, the functional expense." Bravo! Well, we can be glad it is not 25 percent reduction in government costs he is promising. You remember he did that once and we got an increase of 150 to 200 percent. At the same rate the 7 percent decrease he is promising will perhaps result in no more than 21 percent increase. [Applause.]

Then note the new high-salaried political jobs he creates:

(1) National Resources Planning Board, five members, $50 a day.

(2) Federal Security Administrator, $12,000 a year.

(3) Assistant Federal Security Administrator, $9,000 a year.

(4) Federal Works Administrator, $12,000 a year.

(5) Assistant Federal Works Administrator, $9,000 a year.

(6) Commissioner of Public Building Assistant, $9,000 a year.

(7) Commissioner Public Works, $10,000 a year.

(8) Works Progress Administration Commissioner, $10,000 a year.

(9) Federal Loan Administrator, $12,000 a year.

(10) Federal Loan Administrator Assistant, $9,000 a year.

The President's plan abolishes none of the mushroom bureaus which have developed in the last few years. He says not a word about the 300,000 new political jobs which have been created. These are all to be left intact, "to take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned," as Thomas Jefferson would say.

Now, what does it mean that some 21 agencies—Civil Service Commission, Coast Guard, and so forth—are exempted from the provisions of the act? Really the irony of these exemptions is the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. How can this inclusion in the exemptions possibly affect the President's power over this Board when all of them are appointees of the Executive and he already dominates that body completely?

What possibly can these exemptions mean in the face of all the powers now vested in the Chief Executive. He now has complete control over 47 Government corporations with assets in excess of $8,000,000,000, and which have authority to issue $8,000,000,000 more, with practically no check by the Comptroller General. He exercises the principal control over nearly 2,000 corporations partially owned by the Government, with assets of $4,000,000,000. Through the F. D. I. C., Government ownership of bank stocks, and his complete control of the Federal Reserve System he has virtual control of the credit of the banks, involving $60,000,000,000. Through loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other agencies to insurance companies, building and loan associations, mortgage loan companies, railroads, private industry, and so forth, he has vast control over industry in general.

I pointed out to you here a few days ago that with the President's power over the banking system it is possible for him to issue more than thirty billions of fiat money. He has complete control of the fifteen and one-half billion dollars of gold buried in the ground in Kentucky, which is 60 percent of the world's monetary gold stock. He has unlimited power to use all the commodities of the United States to buy and buy and buy more gold. He has unlimited power over the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund, which he can and does use to bolster and depress foreign currencies. He has unlimited power to use our commodities to buy more and more silver, for which we have no more use than a Chinaman's queue. He now virtually has unlimited power to fix the purchasing power of the dollar. In the face of all this unheard-of power delegated to one man, what boots it to have exempted a few of these agencies from his reorganization plan? Why, they will be swallowed up and digested by this power so completely that there will be nothing left of them but their names.

What madness is it that impels this Congress to continue to vote away to the Chief Executive our constitutional right and duty as a legislative body? From whence comes the evil spirit that causes us to thus barter away the liberties of our people for no more than a little temporary political gain? Well, one thing is certain—we have about reached the limit. There is no longer much left to give over to the President. All industry, all agriculture, all labor is now virtually in subjection to one-man power. Encroachment by the Executive upon all the other departments is now in the stage of consolidating all of them in one. The Father of our Country solemnly warned us in his Farewell Address of the danger of such encroachment when he said it will "create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism." In connection therewith, he further said:

A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of this position.

We might also, with appropriateness, refer to another part of Washington's Farewell Address. Here we see in this Chamber today the full fruition of the spirit of party against which he also so solemnly warned us. He told us of its great dangers, how it may appear in popular government "in its greatest rankness," and how it could become our "worst enemy."

> The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism.

Is it not possible for this body here today to rise above this evil spirit? Can we not, for a few moments, divest ourselves of it long enough to realize what our solemn duty on this occasion may be? May it not possibly help us in this hour of trial if we think of the future—perhaps the heritage of our children? What are we leaving them? That is the big question now.

However, whatever action this body may take on this measure, and, for that matter, in perpetuating the present despotic regime, I, for one, am not resigned. I have faith that millions and millions of my fellow countrymen join with me in this feeling, and we shall yet break these shackles that are cruelly strangling out our social and economic existence. I am sure in due time we shall regain the heritage of our fathers, as so nobly expressed by Thomas Jefferson:

> A wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, shall leave them otherwise free in their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned.

[Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, as I see it, this is just another phase of the juggling that has been going on ever since Congress convened. We are not establishing a permanent reform or relief that will be beneficial to the people generally; we are just juggling. This is another of the things we are doing to make permanent activities that were originally labeled as emergencies.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. No; I will not yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman has made a statement I would like to correct.

Mr. BENDER. I will yield when I get through.

Mr. COCHRAN. The law specifically provides that an agency cannot continue beyond the date Congress sets for its expiration.

Mr. BENDER. When you freeze emergency activities under a permanent heading and hide them under a general agency you are helping to make them permanent. When you make it possible for their employees to go under civil service you are perpetuating activities that should stand out like sore thumbs to remind the people that nothing has been accomplished in the way of correcting the evils these agencies were set up to correct. Despite the conditions of this depression—this recession or whatever else you label it—that has been with us for 7 long years, no effort has been made to abolish any of these emergency agencies. In a very clever way they are so concealed the people cannot see what is going on as readily as they could if the activities showed up, I repeat, like sore thumbs.

This business of juggling agencies is kidding the American people into thinking they are getting something when in reality they are getting nothing. They are asking for bread and we give them a stone. They are asking for employment, they are asking for relief from relief, and they are asking for a permanent solution of the problems of this depression and we give them a sleight-of-hand performance. You say to businessmen, "We are going to give you a breathing spell," and then you beat hell out of them while you kid them into believing that they are getting a breathing spell. [Applause.]

One gentleman on the other side, in questioning one of my colleagues on this side said, "Where will these agencies go?" I say the sooner they go out the window, the better off we will all be. They have done nothing else but reduce the earning power and the incomes of not the lower third, mind you, but the lower half of the people. Since this administration came into power, instead of having the lower third, you have 20 percent of the people actually dependent upon the Government for support and sustenance, and you have another 32 percent, according to the Gallup poll, that are within 3 months of the poorhouse.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. No; I will not yield.

If you are going to do anything in the way of real reorganization, let us take this whole business and take plenty of time to discuss it and go into it carefully. This Congress was told by the electorate last November to do something about this situation, and yet we sit idly by and permit these artful pieces of juggling to be presented and passed on to the people, who are made to feel they are getting something when in reality they are getting nothing at all. Our business interests and our people are calling on us and have called repeatedly for help. How about private industry? Private industry wants the "go" sign. Private industry wants to be relieved of the continual prying into its affairs and making it impossible for it to make a reasonable profit and provide employment. Business wants to provide jobs and pay a regular American living wage. If those of us here who voted against this reorganization plan originally fail to vote against this plan now, we are being very inconsistent. In order to be consistent with our previous vote we can do nothing else, being the minority though we are, than to take a position against this measure. We should not fool our people back home into believing they are getting something when in reality they are just getting an empty bag, with a hole in the bag at that. I am voting for the Taber amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, it is always popular for reformers to try to make people believe they are doing something for them. I was in the Legislature of New York for some years and we had this same proposition coming up from the Democrats. They told the people how much they could do by reforming government and finally brought about reform in government. They preached it so long the people really believed them. But when they cut down departments and combined them they had to have more high-priced men at the head, just as we are going to have in the present reform of government. We had to have more agencies and more departments, and we had to have better men, and when we got through it cost us one-third more for our government than it had cost in the beginning, and did not add any to efficiency in government. Now, we have this same gentleman who is asking for reform in government in our Nation. He was at the head of the government of the State of New York at one time. That is where he got his primary education. That is the reason he is such a good man now. You know we have not got over his being Governor yet. Just at this session of the legislature we have had to cut down the appropriations for schools, we have had to cut down the appropriations for highways, and we have had to cut down the appropriations for many activities to try to cure some of the evils that the present President of the United States foisted upon the State of New York. He did this all in good faith, supposedly. I think he did the very best he could, but he left our budget way out of balance and we have never been able to get it back in balance again. So we have had to go into these savings that we could ill afford to do. It has been hard on the people of our State, and although the taxes have been increased tremendously we have never been able to catch up with the tax burden in all of these years.

Now, we have the same thing here. We have reform in government. We are going to juggle about the departments. We are going to appoint expensive men at the head of them to administer them, but what is that going to do for us? When we get all through I venture to say that the Government is going to cost us more than it has ever cost us before. Yet this man, in his wild sayings when he was going about the State campaigning for election, told us he was going to reduce these expenses by 25 percent. I suppose he thought he was going to do it. We do not think up there he has much business ability. We do not charge that he did this deliberately. He did not make the statement deliberately. He just did not know so much about government, and when we get all through here we are going to have the same thing here we have in New York State and our children's children will have to pinch and connive and save to catch up in the years to come, if we ever do catch up with this terrible bonded indebtedness that has been put upon this Government and on the people and the taxpayers of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, when the reorganization measure was up last year and the country was aroused, it was defeated. I spoke and voted against that bill and this year, when the reorganization bill was brought up again, I spoke and voted against it. My reasons for opposing those measures were the reasons that were generally accepted throughout the country.

Under the Constitution the Congress is invested with the power to reorganize the various branches of the Government and the American people expressed themselves to the effect that they did not desire Congress to transfer this legislative authority to the President.

Recently, we passed an act by which we surrendered our legislative authority and gave it to the President, and so far as this legislation is concerned, we abdicated instead of legislating. [Applause.]

Congress has the power and should reorganize the Government. What has been the history of the President's record to justify us in believing that he can do it? We know that in the State of New York, where he was Governor for several years, governmental agencies and officials grew in number year by year and the debt of that great State grew year by year.

When Mr. Roosevelt was seeking this great office he said that he was going to cut out useless bureaus and commissions. What has been the result? He has added more bureaus and commissions than any President or any dozen Presidents.

He said we had too many officeholders. When Hoover went out we had about 530,000 officeholders. If you count those engaged by the Department of Agriculture throughout the country, we have now 1,100,000 officeholders. He has given us more bureaus than any President. He has increased the number of officeholders more than any President. What is there in the record of President Roosevelt to convince you or me that he is going to reduce commissions or reduce the number of officeholders or reduce the expense of government?

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. In just a moment.

The fact about it is there is nothing to this reorganization plan to convince anybody that there is going to be any reduction in the number of officeholders. It freezes into the general administrative agencies of this Government emergency commissions and bureaus, a thing many of us hoped to get rid of, and this is emphasized here in the President's plan. It will not be 6 months or 12 months until a lot of these emergency agencies will become a part of the warp and woof of the Government itself, and it will be impossible to take them out or get rid of them.

I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. The gentleman has perhaps answered the question I was going to ask him, and that is, Does not this plan contemplate perpetuation in office of the present officeholders?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. In my view of it, it does. A bill will soon be brought up to put all these emergency officeholders under civil service, giving a permanent status.

Mr. SHORT. In other words, it is impossible to unscramble eggs.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes. It will be a difficult matter, without this reorganization, to get rid of many of these so-called emergency bureaus and commissions; but it will make it much more difficult if we pass this reorganization measure and make them a part of and intertwine them with the regular agencies of the Government.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I am just wondering if a new Congress, different from the one at present in power, and a new President of a different party were elected in 1940, could not undo this whole thing?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Well, that is the trouble with the New Deal set-up. You have been doing this and doing that; we have emergency this and emergency that; saying we are going to get rid of it; yet every move you make tends toward making it permanent.

Mr. KELLER. Could you not do just what I have suggested?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Oh, there will be a new Congress and there will be a Republican House. It will be Republican; and there will be a new President just because of New Deal proposals of this kind. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. In that case could you not undo this whole thing?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Why should we commit a wrong today and wait 2 years to correct the wrong?

Mr. KELLER. You ought not fret about it if you cannot do it so quickly.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. But here is the trouble with this situation. You and I know that the President himself did not work out this plan of reorganization. He got it just as we have been having bills handed to us for the last 6 years—from the bureaucrats down at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. They have been preparing these bills and sending them up to the Congress. The President did not have the time. He had to take the plans of the commissioners, administrators, and other bureaucrats who helped him and had most to do with handing to you and to me this reorganization proposition. It is the bureaucrats' plan.

Now, I object to it for another reason; not only because it is our duty but we have the right and power to reorganize the Government if it needs it. I, for one, am unwilling to admit that I am a legislative eunuch and that I must depend solely upon the bureaucrats at the other end of the Avenue to hand to me what I ought to vote for and what I ought to do as a Member of the House. [Applause.]

Here is where it irks me so much: These bureaus that have grown fat and powerful, who desire above all things that they continue and grow, have asked the President to bring this bill in and to weave each one of these emergency agencies into the regular department of the Government. They, no doubt, helped write into the reorganization bill that proposition that you cannot do away with any function of this Government, however useless it may be. Although we have three or four hundred thousand useless officeholders, under this bill you cannot do away with a single one of them. You have to keep them all.

If you have to keep them all, you have to keep all the officeholders. There is nothing to the claim you are going to save the taxpayers any money. But what do they send up here to you and to me? The President says it is necessary to preserve the democracy of this country; yet 531 of us, elected as Representatives and Senators by 130,000,000 people, do not have the right to dot an "i" or cross a "t." It cannot be amended or changed. Are you willing to admit that the group at the other end of the Avenue can get up something that is so perfect that neither the House nor the Senate of the United States dare to dot an "i" or cross a "t" in the document they sent here to us and to the Senate of the United States? [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Does the Congress dot an "i" or cross a "t" in the rulings of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Well, I just have to laugh at that question. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Well, does it? Does it?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. It was the Congress that created the Interstate Commerce Commission as an agency of Congress to do certain things. It was not handed to Congress by the bureaucrats.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. And who created the bill as an agency to do this?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Well, you helped to do it—hand over your power to the President. I did not, I thank God. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Of course. That is the answer.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. When our distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. SUMNERS of Texas], one of the ablest statesmen in this House and in this country, offered an amendment which, in effect, would say to the President and these bureaus and commissions, "You get up what you think is a good reorganization bill and send it up to Congress, but it can never become law until the representatives in the House and Senate elected by the American people vote to make it a law," that amendment was defeated by the administration. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield to my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman is referring to an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] which was under consideration. That amendment was declared by Mr. Hoover's Attorney General to be unconstitutional and was held as the reason for the invalidation of the Hoover act. That is the reason it was not accepted. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. That is not the reason it was rejected. The majority of my New Deal friends over here wanted to do the very thing they did do—strip themselves of their legislative, constitutional power and hand it over to the President. That was your reason; not some decision of a Democratic Attorney General under Herbert Hoover some years ago. [Applause.]

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. ROUTZOHN. Is it not a fact that the President would not submit his plan to Congress until Congress reversed the legislative procedure?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Absolutely.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WARREN. Before the gentleman proceeds—and this will not be taken out of his time—I think we have been very liberal, indeed. We have given the opposition far more than they themselves stated they wanted. We would like to know when the minority will be through. Can the gentleman from New York tell us?

Mr. TABER. So far as we know at the moment, this is our last speaker.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Just a moment. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman from Kentucky has yielded generously to Members on the Democratic side.

Mr. WARREN. I am not objecting; I am merely asking the question how much longer the gentleman cares to go on; that is all.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. As I recall, the law which the gentleman advocated changed the rules of the House. That law guarantees the House 10 hours of debate.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no, indeed; it does not.

Mr. MICHENER. Not to exceed 10 hours.

Mr. WARREN. That is a different thing, not to exceed 10 hours; but we had a unanimous-consent agreement, including consent of the three members of the minority, that this bill would be discussed for 5 hours. The House has not put that agreement into effect. The minority desired 2½ hours. They have certainly had more than that amount of time. We are not complaining. I am merely asking the gentleman is this to be the last speech.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] is not complaining, but he is here saying that this thing should be rushed through. It seems to me that if this bill is as important as the gentleman says, if it is of the importance the President says it is, that democracy hangs upon it, it little behooves the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina to complain because some Members of the House perchance might want to talk 15 or 20 minutes about this thing upon which democracy itself hangs.

Mr. WARREN. I am not complaining. I am sure that when the gentleman from Kentucky shall have concluded his last 5 minutes he will have said all that is necessary on the question.

Mr. MICHENER. Maybe the gentleman from North Carolina thinks that when the gentleman from Kentucky has concluded his 5 minutes he will have said enough. Possibly he has already said enough to satisfy the distinguished proponent of the bill, but there are others here who think the matter important and who feel that we should be permitted at least to debate the bill.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. MICHENER. The regular order is demanded. The gentleman from North Carolina said that this would not be taken out of anybody's time.

The CHAIRMAN. It is taken out of the time of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. WARREN. Not at all. I yield sufficient time to the gentleman from Kentucky that he may proceed for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No; it was not a matter of what the plan of somebody else might be. I know one thing, the Constitution gives you and me the right—and it is our duty—to legislate on the matter of reorganization. The Constitution nowhere gives such power to the President or to any bureaucrat. That power is lodged in the Congress of the United States.

The Democrats may have the majority to force this plan through, but, mark my words, a year from now you will find that you have not added to the efficiency of the Federal Government, that you have not reduced the cost of the Federal Government, for that is not in your plan, that is not in your minds. You do not know how to reduce taxes or expenses of Government. [Applause.] The American people have quit expecting anything from this administration except bills like this and the centralization of power and more power in the President and the bureaucrats against the will of the people. They are waiting until they can go to the polls in November 1940. There will then be a reorganization in this House, at the White House, and throughout this Government of ours. The Republicans will be in control. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, it must be evident to everyone that no votes will be changed by this debate; and those familiar with the situation realize, of course, that from the beginning there has never been any doubt that this Congress would permit the President's reorganization order to become law. The very fact that the Congress passed the reorganization bill of 1939 settled that matter definitely.

Whether we like to admit it or not, this matter, from which party politics should have been divorced, has resolved itself into more or less of a party matter, and when the vote comes I venture the prediction that it will be pretty much upon party lines. The Republicans generally, I think, can be expected to oppose the President's reorganization plan which is now before us, because they consider this particular plan or order to be the first step toward putting into effect the President's whole theory and philosophy of reorganization; and Republicans, as has already been demonstrated by their votes on the reorganization bills of 1938 and 1939, are generally opposed to that theory and philosophy, and they are also opposed to the motive which they believe to be behind the President's demand for reorganization.

This, I say, is generally true. There are a few exceptions, of course, as is evidenced by the fact that a few Republicans supported the 1939 reorganization bill, upon the authority of which the President has submitted this Executive order, known as reorganization plan No. I, and which will automatically become law unless the pending resolution to prevent it is adopted by the House and concurred in by the Senate.

The majority party, on the other hand, I think, can be counted upon to support the President's plan simply because it is the President's plan and because they have all along contended that the Congress is incapable of reorganizing the Government by law, and that the only way to accomplish reorganization is by Presidential order. So far as the President's plan or order is concerned, the majority party in the House has already announced that it is not even interested in the debate upon it. The majority leaders formally stated at the beginning that they intended to consume only 10 minutes in debate upon the resolution which is now before us.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Is the gentleman authorized to say to the House that the vote will be along party lines and that this is a political question?

Mr. MOTT. I do not know in what sense the gentleman uses the word "authorized." I am speaking on my own responsibility, of course, and am venturing to predict what the vote will disclose.

Mr. COCHRAN. I thought so.

Mr. MOTT. What I say in debate is naturally an expression of my own opinion, as the gentleman knows, and his question, therefore, is pointless.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Certainly the gentleman does not want to intimate that all Members on the majority side are rubber stamps and will support anything the President might send down here?

Mr. MOTT. I imagine there will probably be a few votes from the more independent Members on the other side of the aisle. I hope there may be, but I would be greatly surprised if there were many. I do not think it is a question of the majority Members' being rubber stamps in this case. I think most of them are really of the opinion that the Congress is incapable of legislating on this subject and that our authority in that regard ought to be surrendered to the President.

It has been said here—and perhaps correctly—that this proposal of the President's seems to be popular throughout the country and that it has the preponderance of editorial support. That may be true, because neither the people nor the editors have had opportunity to study it. Even the Congress has not studied it. There have been no hearings in committee. No testimony has been taken, and, as I have said, the majority party does not even intend to debate it here on the floor of the House. It is obvious, therefore, if this reorganization plan has popular support, that support is not based upon any real study of the proposal.

Perhaps that is a good reason why a Member of the House who is opposed to the proposition should state for the record, at least, his reasons for opposing it, and that I wish to do here briefly.

Mr. Chairman, aside from the fundamental principle involved, I oppose this reorganization plan because, from as careful an analysis as I have been able to make, I have failed to discover any merit in it. I cannot see, in the first place, where economy will be effected. I cannot see where any efficiency in government will be effected. I have studied the various transfers and consolidations set forth in this Presidential order, and I do not find where any of those transfers or consolidations will eliminate a single useless or overlapping bureau. I find no evidence that a single dollar will be saved. I find no evidence that any of the personnel of any bureau, agency, or department will be reduced. All I am able to discover in this plan is the further concentration of authority in the President. I am convinced that that is the sole purpose of this plan, known as reorganization plan No. I, just as it was the sole purpose of the reorganization bill of 1939, which became law this year, and of the original reorganization bill of 1938, which was recommitted last year.

There may be a few good individual items in the plan. One or two transfers may make for efficient operation. I do not object to those particular transfers, but under the Reorganization Act I cannot have those unobjectionable things unless I agree to accept everything else in the plan, no matter how objectionable. I must accept this thing just as the President has written it. I cannot change a word or a syllable of it.

There are transfers here which obviously should never be made. It would take too long to enumerate all of them or even a part of them; but I am going to mention one glaring example of the unsoundness of this proposal. That is the transfer of the Bureau of Public Roads to a new set-up under this bill called the Public Works Agency.

The work of the Bureau of Public Roads has nothing to do with such public works as the W. P. A., or P. W. A., or any of those other emergency agencies which are lumped together in this plan to form the Public Works Agency. The Bureau of Public Roads now functions as an independent agency in the Department of Agriculture. It functions for the purpose of carrying out the established road policy of the United States, a policy established by the Congress of the United States and with which all the people of the United States are in agreement. To transfer it to this new set-up and to make it subservient to an Administrator of Public Works would change the whole road policy, and might even result in taking away from Congress the exclusive jurisdiction which it now has on the road policy of the United States.

I cannot discuss these particular items because I want to tell you, if I have time, what the more fundamental reasons are for my opposition to this reorganization plan.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I opposed the first reorganization bill when it was introduced in Congress at the direction of the President in 1938. I opposed the second reorganization bill in the last Congress. I was of the opinion that at that time, and I think the majority of the people in the country were of similar opinion, that the original reorganization bill was probably the most dangerous proposal that has ever been made to the Congress of the United States. [Applause.] To my mind it was equally as dangerous as the Supreme Court bill. It was introduced in Congress at the same time as the Supreme Court bill, by the same people who wrote the Court bill, and as a part of the same scheme. That scheme was to centralize all governmental authority in the hands of the President of the United States. If the original reorganization bill had become law, and particularly if the two companion measures, the Supreme Court bill and the reorganization bill, had both become law, I think to a very large extent representative government in this country would have ceased to exist. Those bills did not become law because consideration of them was deferred long enough so that the people understood them, and they then brought enough pressure upon their Representatives in Congress to cause defeat of the measures.

In the Seventy-fifth Congress another reorganization bill was introduced. I took occasion to observe in my remarks in debate on that bill that in my opinion there was no essential difference between the second reorganization bill and the first one. I am still of the opinion that the President under the reorganization bill which became law can do practically everything he could have done under the original reorganization bill had that bill become law.

What was the purpose of the first and second reorganization bills, and what is the real purpose of this plan which the President has submitted under authority of the reorganization bill of 1939? I believe the real purpose and the real object behind the plan now proposed by the President is to centralize as much authority in his hands as he possibly can. It has always been his object, and I believe that this plan will enable him to carry it out, to take away as much of the independence of the so-called independent agencies as the Reorganization Act will permit him to take; and I further believe that this plan No. I and the other plans which are to follow will take away practically all of that independence.

Now, when you transfer these so-called independent agencies, whether they be separate agencies or whether they have been placed in some of the departments, and when you transfer them to one of the new set-ups created under this Presidential order, you take away their independent status and character, because then instead of being independent they are to become subservient to the administrator which under this plan is to be placed over them. That is the vicious part of the plan, and it is my belief that it is the main purpose and object of the plan.

Mr. Chairman, when the Congress created these agencies it admittedly created them as independent agencies to carry out the will of the Congress in the administration of certain laws. Had the Congress desired these agencies to be executive agencies, it would have placed them under the jurisdiction and direction of the President of the United States. But the Congress did not do so. If the Congress now wishes to change the status and character of those agencies it should do so by statutory law. Under this plan, however, and without the consent of the Congress, the President changes, alters, or repeals the law of the Congress by Executive order, and he becomes in effect the actual administrator of all the independent agencies affected by the order.

This reorganization plan No. I would have been bad enough, even if in making the plan the President had adhered to the spirit of his limitations as provided in the reorganization bill. But the President did not confine himself to the limits of the bill in formulating and presenting this reorganization plan. I observed in the debate on the second reorganization bill that in my opinion that would be the case. I said the President if he pleased under that reorganization bill could really create a new department, in spite of the fact that the language of the reorganization bill prohibited him from doing that. That is precisely what he has done under this plan in three separate cases.

He has created, for example, actually a Department of Public Works, with all the power, all the authority, and all the jurisdiction that a new department of public works, headed by a secretary of public works, would have if the bill provided for such a department in so many words. It is not called a department of public works in this Presidential order, because to call it that would be in violation of the letter of the law. So it is called an Agency of Public Works. The head of that department is not called a secretary. He is called an Administrator. But it is a new department, nevertheless, and it violates the spirit of the Reorganization Act.

This particular subterfuge is typical of the whole of the reorganization plan. The plan is wrong because its purpose is to carry out an authority which is wrong and which the Congress should never have given to the President. Now is the time and this is the opportunity for the Congress to correct the mistake it made in passing the reorganization bill. The resolution now before us declaring that the Congress does not agree to reorganization plan No. I should be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from New York concluded?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], and then will ask that the Clerk read the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, on April 25, immediately after the President sent his message to the Congress, accompanied by reorganization plan No. I, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] took the floor and denounced the plan as bad. Because he said it was bad does not necessarily make it so. Immediately upon the conclusion of his statement on that day I took the floor and pronounced it good and said that the President had done a magnificent job. Because I said it was good does not make it good.

The difference, however, was this: The gentleman from New York was straining his ears to hear the message, and when he made the statement he had never even read the reorganization order itself, while I had had the advantage of knowing several days in advance just what was in the order and had had full time to study and analyze it. Since then any Member of the House who was sufficiently interested has had ample time to consider this whole question thoroughly.

As I previously stated during the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], this situation, calling up this matter today, is not of our making. The gentleman from New York did not wait 40 or 50 days from the time the order came in, but was so determinedly opposed to it that he immediately rushed in and offered the resolution to stop the reorganization plan. Under the very stringent rules to guarantee a vote and full expression by those who might be opposed to it, of course, this matter had to come up certainly between now and Monday.

I had hoped so much that we would reach some phase of the whole question of reorganization where it would not be treated solely as a partisan question, but the new leader of the minority, who has just preceded me, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT], presumably speaking for others in his party, has told us that it is a partisan question and that the Republicans will vote accordingly.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman heard me state very plainly, I am sure, that in making that statement I was speaking on my own responsibility and was stating my opinion.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. I also ventured the guess that my opinion would be found to be correct when the vote came. That is what I stated, but that is not what the gentleman quoted me as stating.

Mr. WARREN. I am afraid the gentleman's opinion is going to be correct.

Mr. MOTT. Now, let me ask the gentleman a question. Does not the gentleman agree with me that this vote will be upon party lines?

Mr. WARREN. I am not putting it upon party lines, I assure the gentleman; not at all.

Mr. MOTT. That is not answering my question.

Mr. WARREN. Nor did I make the vote when we passed this bill on party lines; nor did I appeal to the Democrats of this House until we had seen it made an almost entirely partisan issue on that side.

Since my time is limited, I cannot yield any more.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman answer that question?

Mr. WARREN. I cannot yield any more.

I criticize no one for his vote on any matter that arises here. I criticize no position that anyone may take on any matter of legislation. I am always willing to accord the same sincerity of purpose to any man or woman in this House that I would like to have accorded to me. But for years now we have all been prating about the necessity of governmental reorganization. We have recognized our inability to do it.

We have authorized the President to do it under certain restrictions and limitations and subject to our disapproval. He has acted with promptness and dispatch. It would be humanly impossible for the President or for any Member of Congress to write an order that would please everyone. There is no doubt some feature in the order now under consideration does not appeal to some Member of the House, and some of the features do not personally appeal to me, but the more I study this order as a whole the more I marvel at its basic reasoning and its desire to follow the mandate of Congress to promote efficiency and economy and to eliminate duplication and overlapping. It has met with widespread approval. The press of the country, regardless of party affiliation, students of government, business, and a large majority of the Congress have hailed it as a great forward step. Regardless of whether anyone disagrees with the method provided, surely a vote to overturn this order can only be construed as a vote against any form of Government reorganization whatever. The value of the order must be proven in the months to come after it goes into effect. Certainly the coordinator over each new agency must make an exhaustive study. Then we can best see what can be saved and what can be eliminated, and what efficiency we may secure. If it should develop that some regrouping or some transfer does not prove feasible, then it may be quickly changed by another order or by the Congress itself.

Mr. Chairman, this is one of a series of probably about five orders. It is my opinion that all of them will not be presented at this session. There are certain transfers and regroupings that in their very nature must have careful study, and the whole job should not be expected in a few weeks. The order now under consideration is a splendid start. It is entitled to our wholehearted support. When we get back here in January we will probably be in a position then to gage its full effects.

Mr. Chairman, I shall now yield the floor to the gentleman from Missouri so he may move that the Committee rise, and we will call the roll. Those who are in favor of this plan going into effect should vote "no" when we go back into the House. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 19

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress does not favor the Reorganization Plan No. I, transmitted to Congress by the President on April 25, 1939.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report House Concurrent Resolution 19 back to the House with the recommendation that it not be agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McGRANERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration House Concurrent Resolution 19, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it be not agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

Mr. COCHRAN and Mr. TABER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 265, answered "present" 2, not voting 35, as follows:

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think if there is a man in public life who has been treated kindly by the press, including the columnists, I might qualify, and I am deeply grateful that that is the fact.

On last evening, speaking before the Junior Chamber of Commerce of Gastonia, N. C., I did not mention in my speech the names Republican, Democrat, and in no wise did I make any statement that might be considered as partisan or critical of any human being alive.

I have in my hand a dispatch from Gastonia, N. C., published in many of the papers because it came to them, from which I read the following:

RAYBURN told the annual junior chamber of commerce meeting that many Washington columnists spy and lie for sensational effect.

I did not use the word "spy" or "lie" in reference to columnists or anybody else. I did not utter one unkind word about a columnist or any other writer. So this statement emanating from Gastonia, N. C., is an infamous and diabolical distortion of the truth. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two particulars, to include a radio address to be delivered tonight over the National Broadcasting System by our colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] and myself, and also in connection with my remarks on the subject of neutrality.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CONSTRUCTION OF RESERVOIRS ON THE GRAND (NEOSHO) RIVER

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill (H. R. 6078) to authorize the construction of reservoirs at Markhams Ferry and Fort Gibson on the Grand (Neosho) River for flood control and other purposes, introduced yesterday by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

EXPLANATION OF VOTE

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that I was absent from the Chamber on urgent departmental business and missed voting on the concurrent resolution. Had I been present I would have voted against the concurrent resolution and in favor of the reorganization.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a statement given by General Tyler to the Flood Control Committee yesterday on the question of flood control.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on Friday next, after the regular order of business, and any special orders that have been entered, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to address the House for 10 minutes.

DEATH OF THE SON OF HON. E. H. CRUMP, FORMER REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House who served in the Seventy-second and Seventy-third Congresses with my predecessor, Hon. E. H. Crump, of Memphis, will learn with keen regret of the tragic death of his son, John Crump, on yesterday evening in an airplane accident. I mentioned the sad occurrence to some of our colleagues who are friends of former Representative Crump and found that they knew nothing of it, and I thought that it would be appropriate to mention it on the floor so that those who would want to communicate with Mr. Crump could do so.

The young man was a passenger in an airplane that was in the act of landing at Grenada, Miss., where Mr. John Crump was to extend an invitation on behalf of the city of Memphis, and in trying to avoid running over some children who had crowded onto the field the plane turned over and took fire, and the three occupants were burned to death.

John Crump was a splendid young man, of fine character, of great promise in the business world, and popular throughout the South. His father is one of the distinguished citizens of our country, and no man in the House while he was here was more highly regarded than the Honorable E. H. Crump. He and his family have the sympathy of us all in their overwhelming loss.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour I shall not address the House this evening, but ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, after the disposition of the legislative program for the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. CRAWFORD. On roll call No. 60 I am paired against the veterans' bill. I was not present on the floor of the House when the roll was called and I had not left any arrangement for a special or general pair.

I ask unanimous consent that the Journal and the RECORD may be corrected accordingly.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the RECORD and the Journal will be corrected accordingly.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. SCHIFFLER] is recognized to address the House for 20 minutes.

TARIFF POLICIES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SCHIFFLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak with regard to the protective tariff on imports, an issue that is at this time interwoven with our foreign policies and of vital importance to every American citizen. The retention of our domestic markets is far more important to the welfare of the American people than is the attempted capture of ever-changing foreign markets. Our total exports last year, stimulated by war conditions and the purchases to sustain warfare, were approximately $3,000,000,000. Our gross national income was about $66,000,000,000. Therefore, our total collections from exports contributing to our national income were less than 4 percent of such national income.

Our tariff policies date to the founding of our Republic, and the first protective-tariff law was approved and signed by President George Washington July 4, 1789. This act was supported by Mr. Madison, afterward President of the United States, and was in its preamble declared to be "for the support of the Government, for the discharge of the debt of the United States, and for the encouragement and protection of manufacturers." Thus from the very inception of our Government it was recognized by the Congress and the President that "protection of manufacturers" was fundamentally essential to the industrial and economic life of the Republic. This law was passed by the unanimous vote of the Senate and by a majority in the ratio of more than 5 to 1 in the House of Representatives.

From the time of the adoption of the first tariff and the beginning of the War of 1812, 12 additional tariff acts were passed, which generally increased the rate of duty and added to the protective power of such tariffs. In his message of December 1795 to the Congress, President Washington said "our agriculture, commerce, and manufacture are prospering beyond former example," and again, "every part of the Union displaying indications of rapid and various improvement with burden so light as scarcely to be perceived." In his message of 1796, the Father of his Country urged upon Congress "the necessity of accelerating the establishment of certain useful manufactures by the intervention of legislative aid and protection."

In his first message delivered in December 1801, Thomas Jefferson congratulated Congress upon the revenues derived from tariff duties and suggested that "there is now reasonable ground for confidence that we may safely dispense with all internal taxes."

By reason of the embargo during the year 1812, and during the period ending in 1815, the country made great strides in its development. American manufacturers and agriculturists were in very prosperous condition. Until this time little or no controversy arose between the Democratic statesmen and the Whig statesmen regarding the tariff policies. From 1816 until 1824, due to various changes both in the internal policy and in the tariff protective policy, considerable distress was experienced. This led to a difference as to the causes of such distress. In 1828 a still more effective tariff measure was passed. Following this, a southern hostility began to develop against the protective-tariff policy, and Mr. Calhoun, then the great Democratic leader, who had been an original protectionist, and concluding that manufactures could not be established in the planting States in the South, and that free labor and slave labor could not be made to harmonize, advocated and was successful in having enacted into law in 1833 a tariff bill which provided, over a 10-year period, for a sliding scale downward. This resulted in disaster in 1837 and contributed largely to that outstanding panic, which resulted in forced sales of farms and other property throughout the country, with thousands of men out of work and thousands of others toiling for 25 cents a day or less, and accompanying distress among the people.

Our foreign policies for nearly 150 years and our domestic policy with respect to imports and exports and the protection of American agriculture, labor, and industry are fundamentally identified and correlated to such extent that the future policy and preservation of our Nation depend upon the strict and unbiased observance of these principles. I am firmly convinced that the adherence to our Constitution, to the foreign policy and conduct inaugurated and advised by President Washington, and the tariff policy which was enacted into law by the First Congress with the approval of President Washington are the keystones to a revival of American progress and prosperity. Abandon constitutional government by whatsoever method or device and in lieu thereof we inevitably cannot avoid dictatorship; forsake the advice of President Washington by meddling in the affairs of foreign nations and by entering into alliances and agreements with them, and we shall pay with the precious lives of our boys, not to mention the incalculable suffering and monetary losses; abolish our protective-tariff policy, under whatsoever guise, whether by substituting so-called reciprocal-trade treaties, establishing a barter or trade system, or in any other manner, and the inevitable result is widespread unemployment of men and women in industry and a paralysis and collapse of our agriculture.

Partly through the reciprocal-trade agreements and by reason of the fact that we have traded ourselves out of markets, comes the outstanding fact that our recovery in the family of nations affected by the world-wide condition of 1929 and 1930 is down to fourteenth, and in a large measure is due to the abandonment of our tried and proven protective-tariff policies, as well as of other innovations in our system of government not contemplated by the Constitution. There remains unemployed approximately 12,000,000 men and women, who, in part, are compelled to accept relief, or employment at the hands of the Government at low and un-American rates of pay. Such wages do not sustain a standard of living as is regarded necessary to maintain a free American citizen and family, neither does it create the volume of purchasing power essential to maintain a prosperous America.

The more quickly that we, as the representatives of the people, recognize these deficiencies and inaugurate proper, progressive, and protective methods that will result in the reemployment in private industry of the unemployed men and women at the American standard of wages, just so soon shall we bring back prosperity, contentment, and sound progress to our people. Equally so, just as soon shall we destroy the seed of discontent which breeds the "isms" that are so much discussed and so violently loathed by every patriotic American citizen. It might also be observed that so long as we fail to recognize that unemployment and distress are the fertile soil which breeds discontent and fanciful panaceas in the minds of the people, that anything which promises betterment, notwithstanding how fanciful and impracticable, is blindly followed with the hope that such is the remedy. In America obnoxious "isms" are developed by reason of unemployment and distress, and not, as in most countries, by reason of religious and political persecutions. Our constitutional Government is the most equitable and just yet devised by the mind of man. Permanent employment at good wages, with the opportunity for leisure and recreation, and no "ism" yet conceived, finds favor and support among intelligent American workers.

One of the important immediate steps in our economic and political life, and one that will make a profound difference in our prosperity, is the immediate abolishment of the so-called reciprocal-trade agreements and the establishment, through proper orderly processes, of protective tariffs upon all competitive manufactured commodities and farm products. Unfortunately, the fundamental policy which actuated the negotiation and entering into the reciprocal-trade agreements is highly illusory and fanciful. Such being predicated upon the idealistic theory that the removal of the so-called trade barriers by the giving away of American markets to foreign manufactured goods and commodities and foreign-grown agricultural products and livestock, would promote and produce world-wide peace among nations.

For more than 3 years we have pursued such policies and urged the balance of civilized nations, with whom we transacted business, to sit at the table of peace while we bartered away much of our markets in exchange for their good will and peace. This policy was false and unsound and is well evidenced by the economic and military aggressions the world over. Ominous for several months is the threat of a world conflagration that threatens to ensue at any moment. Experts predicted that such will rapidly destroy the constructive efforts of mankind attained after 2,000 years of constant effort and labor. This is the situation that faces American industry, agriculture, and labor after having made gratuities of American jobs and markets to those dovelike nations.

Having this experience and acting as ordinary prudent men and women, and holding the light of such experience as our guide, it is high time for us to turn to our fundamental American practices, in that we shall make America safe and prosperous for American farmers, workers, and industry. The future of American institutions and ideals which are seriously and eminently threatened, by the practice of internationalism rather than nationalism, require, and it is a solemn duty of every patriotic liberty-loving American citizen, to reestablish and reaffirm his allegiance to our Constitution and the institutions promoted and fostered by such.

There exists today no sectional difference on the issue of protective tariff. Well meaning and intelligent thought discloses that such is just as important for the protection of the cotton grower of the South as for the wheat and corn growers of the West; the cattle and sheep men of Texas and Wyoming and the grape and potato growers of California and Maine; equally as important for the textile and shoe manufacturer of New York and Massachusetts as for the glass and pottery manufacturer of West Virginia, Ohio, and New Jersey.

Our men and women now unemployed must be placed in jobs. A protective tariff will in a large measure aid in that. We must stop the Messianic attitude toward the world and protect our Americans by providing these jobs and this encouragement and protection to agriculture and industry.

It would be superfluous for me to recite numerous figures intended to demonstrate the difference in wages paid in the United States and other countries, as well as the differences in other elements entering into the cost of manufactured and grown commodities. Such are easily available and doubtless you are familiar with them. Suffice it is for me to say that the American farmer and the American manufacturer cannot grow and produce commodities that can be sold at any profit, in competition with the same articles grown and manufactured in nearly every other country on earth. Compare the labor costs of a Japanese girl, employed in a cotton-textile plant where she is paid 2½ cents per hour, as against an American girl employed in the same type of plant and who receives not less than 25 cents per hour, and in many instances more. Recognizing labor cost as one of the important elements in all manufactured and grown commodities, it is quite easy for us to discover that under no imaginable circumstances can the American manufacturer compete with the manufacturer of Japan, England, Belgium, France, and other countries where raw materials are cheaper, labor costs a fraction of those of the United States, and transportation charges comparatively small.

A ton of steel can be shipped from Liverpool to New York or Montreal more cheaply than it can be sent by rail from Pittsburgh to New York. However, I shall not burden you with matters already known to you, or easily discovered by only a most casual examination. Are we going to abandon the present high standard of living of American workers after preserving and protecting such for 150 years, and force our workers to subsist upon wages comparable to those received in foreign nations, and accordingly so lower the purchasing power of the workers' income and thereby completely demoralize and collapse the American economic system? If so, to what lower standard must they go? Shall it be the low paid and meagerly supported peasant and factory laborer of Europe who subsist from year to year upon only the meager necessities of life, or shall it be to the still much lower standard of the Far East, where malnutrition is widespread and only the barest necessities are obtainable for a day's labor? I reply, most emphatically, no. The American standard of living with an abundance of necessities of life and with ample time for leisure and recreation has been established, tried, and proven, and is yet easily available and cannot be abandoned. To countenance such would be a crime against God and our civilization. The constitutional form of our Government has well proven its worth and solidity. The economic system of the United States under such will sustain its position if permitted to do so without interference and with encouragement, and likewise American labor, as a part of such, cannot be let down.

Divine Providence endowed this Nation with every conceivable resource for an abundant and contented life for its citizens. Today we possess all such gifts. Money and credit remain idle; millions of men and women are unemployed, and natural resources are plentiful. The regret is that these have been ill-managed by the constituted leaders of men. It is not too late for action. We still possess the remedies. It is our sworn duty to apply sound and progressive policies to aid and encourage our people. I do not claim the adoption of a sound protective tariff to be a complete remedy for all our economic ills; I do claim, however, that it is one of the most important essentials, and as such, will contribute much to restoring a prosperous condition in our Nation.

I represent the First West Virginia District, which is one of the most highly industrialized districts in the United States. Glassware, potteryware, steel, cotton, textiles, aluminum and enamelware, tin plate, zinc, and tobacco, as well as various other commodities are manufactured. Our prosperity and success depend upon the proper tariff protection. When such tariffs are low and nonrestrictive of imports thousands of men and women from these industries are laid off. It is this type of worker that constitutes the backbone of American civilization, and it is to them that I feel an obligation of providing adequate tariff protection and of recovering their positions which have, by the process of reciprocal-trade agreements, been transferred to foreign soil.

I have introduced bills, known as H. R. 3372 and H. R. 3373, respectively, the former proposing to refer the tariff question to the Committee on Ways and Means for study of our tariff problem with a view of making recommendations for new tariffs, and the latter having for its object the abolition of the existing reciprocal-trade agreements, which are now and have been since January 30, 1939, pending before the Committee on Ways and Means.

I implore you members of the Committee on Ways and Means to give to these measures your immediate and energetic support in order that the Members of the House of Representatives may have an opportunity to vote on them.

As the elected leaders of a great nation, endowed by divine Providence, with an abundance of all things necessary for a happy, peaceful, and prosperous land, it is our solemn duty, without bias or prejudice, to courageously provide by sound legislation the means whereby our people are restored to prosperity by restoring jobs to make them happy and contented. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CLAYPOOL, for 2 days, on account of important business.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Father of lights, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, and with whom is no variableness, neither shadow that is cast by turning: Send out Thy light and Thy truth that they may lead us to a clearer understanding of the problems that confront us, with their everchanging meaning and their complicated worth.

Grant to our President such measure of Thy wisdom that, under his leadership, we may prove ourselves a people worthy of Thy choicest blessings as we yield ourselves wholly to Thy will.

May all who wait upon Thee here renew their strength; may they mount up with aspiration's wings that they may discern the truest way, the highest duty; may they run and not be weary, as the mighty rush of feeling interprets truth and goodness; and may they walk and not faint, as dream and rapture are carried out in the actualities of life, with duty no longer merely the stern daughter of Thy voice but their constant guide and inspiration on life's journey.

We ask it in the Saviour's name. Amen.

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, May 2, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1939.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the bill merely proposes to change the times of holding terms of the Federal District Court for the Northern District of Mississippi. The amendment of the House does not change the purpose of the bill passed by the Senate. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

GALLUP POLL ON FLORIDA SHIP CANAL PROJECT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a report of the Gallup poll showing that 75 percent of those who expressed opinions throughout the United States are opposed to the Florida ship canal project.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

75 PERCENT OPPOSE PROJECT FOR FLORIDA CANAL—73 PERCENT VOTE AGAINST PASSAMAQUODDY POWER PLAN IN MAINE, SURVEY SHOWS

THE QUESTIONS

Have you heard of the proposal to build a ship canal across Florida?

Should the Federal Government spend $150,000,000 for this project?

Have you heard of the Passamaquoddy power project in Maine?

Should the Federal Government spend $36,000,000 for this project?

(By Institute of Public Opinion)

NEW YORK, February 12.—With the proposed Florida ship canal and the Passamaquoddy tidal power projects in the lap of Congress again, a survey of public opinion throughout the United States shows that the great majority of those who have opinions about the projects are opposed to going ahead with either of them.

The two projects—one in Florida and the other in Maine—were voted down by Congress in 1936, after the economy-minded opposition had singled them out as supreme examples of "boondoggling" Government spending. But backers of the twin proposals have carried on their fight, and 3 weeks ago President Roosevelt recommended reconsideration.

Advocates of both plans in Washington have linked the idea of a Gulf-Atlantic canal and cheap electric power with the needs of national defense.

The public's chief objection to both "Quoddy" and the canal, today's survey shows, is the belief that the results would not justify the costs. "Quoddy" would involve about $36,000,000, while the costs of the Gulf-Atlantic canal have been estimated at between $150,000,000 and $200,000,000.

ONLY HALF OF VOTERS HAVE OPINIONS

Only about half of the voters proved familiar enough with either project to have a definite opinion about it. Among those having opinions, however, the votes on whether Congress should appropriate the necessary funds in each case are almost identical.

	Percent
Favoring Florida Canal	25
Opposed	75
Favoring Passamaquoddy	27
Opposed	73

Slightly more Republicans than Democrats have opinions about the two proposals, but the rank and file of both parties are critical.

Republican voters with opinions are 93 percent opposed to Passamaquoddy, 87 percent opposed to the Florida ship canal.

Even Democrats are 57 percent opposed to "Quoddy" and 66 percent against the Florida Canal. Some Democratic voters favor the former because they think it would be "the start of a little T. V. A. in New England," their comments show.

GOVERNMENT LOSSES IN SHIPMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Government Losses in Shipment Act, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, chapter I and a section of chapter II of part 3 of the Commission's report on its study of investment trusts and investment companies entitled "Background of Investment Company Industry in Relation to Abuses" and "Detailed Histories of Various Investment Trusts and Investment Companies," which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ACT 65 OF THE HAWAIIAN LEGISLATURE, SESSION OF 1939

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a copy of Act 65 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1939 (transmitted through the Department of the Interior), being an act to amend Act 29 of the Session Laws of Hawaii 1929, granting to J. K. Lota and associates a franchise for electric light, current, and power in Hanalei, Kauai, by including Moloaa within said franchise, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Joint Resolution 9

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to provide by law that dairy products be made a basic commodity

Whereas dairying comprises a wide and varied agricultural enterprise which provides a major income for a large number of farmers in the several dairy States; and

Whereas, because large sums of money are invested in the dairy sections of today for the purpose of producing dairy products of good quality and due to climatic conditions, dairy farmers cannot profitably engage in other types of farming; and

Whereas the dairy farmer is at a disadvantage compared with the cotton, corn, and wheat farmer in that the Agricultural Adjustment Act does not control the production of dairy products; and

Whereas the dairy industry would be immeasurably benefited if it were made subject to the Agricultural Adjustment Act and dairy farmers favor control of production in dairying in the manner provided in said act for controlling production of agricultural products affected thereby: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation providing that dairy products be made a basic commodity and that a parity payment be made to equal the difference between the average price of butter on the New York market and the parity price; and be it further

Resolved, That properly attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following translation of a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs:

House Concurrent Resolution 9

Concurrent resolution to request from the Congress of the United States that it resolve the critical situation of the coffee growers of Puerto Rico

Whereas various agencies of the Federal Government have for some time been aware of the serious situation confronted by coffee growers in the insular possessions of the United States, and although several remedies have been suggested no definite program has been put into effect to resolve the difficult crisis experienced by these growers;

Whereas the coffee growers of Puerto Rico and Hawaii, although separated and at great distance from each other, and although their conditions are different, have in essence the same problem, inasmuch as both are forced to buy in a protected market having high prices and to sell their exports in unprotected markets, and it appears clearly that their condition can be remedied only through the grant of at least some measure of recognition by the Government of the United States, such as is granted to the sugarcane growers;

Whereas since there are over 14,000 coffee plantations in Puerto Rico and around 1,000 in Hawaii, and since 500,000 inhabitants depend for their subsistence on the success of these plantations, the problem is urgent, involving not only a social problem but also the just recognition of an old and well-established agricultural industry;

Whereas on the financial condition of the coffee industry depends directly the welfare of almost half a million people residing in the coffee districts, and indirectly the welfare of 2,000,000 people, it becomes very important that the critical condition of the said industry be recognized, with a view to remedying the situation;

Whereas coffee plantations occupy a considerable portion of the territorial area of the island of Puerto Rico, and coffee is the only commercial product of importance cultivated in such portion and occupies 25 percent of all the tillable land of the island, and it being a product grown in the most mountainous regions, no substitute has so far been found that will yield better results to the growers;

Whereas the cost of producing coffee in Puerto Rico amounts to approximately 14 cents a pound, of which approximately one-half is a fixed cost, inasmuch as almost the whole industry is laboring under the burden of heavy indebtedness dating from the hurricane of 1928;

Whereas the high cost of production and the high standards of living in Puerto Rico and in Hawaii hinder the coffee growers thereof from competing with other coffee sold in the market of the United States;

Whereas Puerto Rican coffee had a very good market in the various countries of Europe, which market it has gradually lost through the restrictions imposed by many of the various governments, and through the failure of the United States of America to take it into consideration in making its reciprocity treaties, the Puerto Rican growers find themselves in the difficult plight of not being able to export their coffee at prices in consonance with their high cost of production;

Whereas since the continental United States consumes more coffee than any other nation in the world, and since consumption therein has reached, during the last 3 years, an approximate average of 1,750,000,000 pounds, it would be easy for the United States to solve the problem;

Whereas in order to enable growers to compete successfully it would be necessary to grant each grower a subsidy or compensation of 5 cents a pound;

Whereas through a direct compensation of 5 cents a pound made to the coffee growers of Puerto Rico and Hawaii, these could attain sufficient stability, and the emigration en masse of the mountain people to the cities, which will come unless the situation with which they are confronted is not permanently resolved, would be prevented;

Whereas the payment of this compensation of 5 cents a pound would serve, among others, the following purposes:

(1) Of allowing coffee growers under the American flag to compete in the American market with foreign growers of Arabian type coffee.

(2) Of bringing with it a saving in direct emergency relief.

(3) Of rehabilitating the coffee industry of Puerto Rico, on which depend several hundreds of thousands of people and which is now experiencing deplorable conditions.

(4) Of enabling the coffee growers to save their plantations from mortgage foreclosures, said plantations being now heavily burdened with liens the growers will not be able to meet at maturity.

(5) Of enabling the United States to have a source of supply of coffee in case the Nation should be cut off from any South American countries through such internal revolutions or disturbances as may occur in some of these countries.

(6) Of greatly improving the general stability of the leading coffee districts of Puerto Rico and Hawaii and eventually rendering them capable of self-support.

(7) Of lessening social unrest and preventing an increased number of persons from leaving the coffee districts to move to the central cities which are already overpopulated.

(8) Of entailing recognition and encouragement of an industry in every way entitled to recognition and encouragement, and which, due to the absence of investments of American capital and to the distance which separates it from the continent, has found scant backing and small opportunity to protect itself, and lastly, the possibility of furnishing through this compensation, protection to the coffee growers of Puerto Rico against the consequences of the hurricanes by continuing the payment of 5 cents to the growers whose crops and trees are destroyed, taking as a basis therefor the average production of said growers during the 3 years preceding the hurricane. These annual payments assisting them in great measure in the rehabilitation of the plantations destroyed by the hurricanes and of farms in general by providing a source of income until such time as the farms are again in production: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the Senate of Puerto Rico concurring), First. To request from the Congress of the United States, as it is hereby requested, that a tax be levied on each pound of coffee imported into the continental United States (an import duty and handling tax) and that the amount of this tax be one-fifth cent on each pound, to be applicable to all coffee imported, including the coffee from insular possessions.

Second. That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and to the Speaker, respectively, of the two Houses of the Congress of the United States; to the President of the United States; to the Resident Commissioner for Puerto Rico in Washington, and to the Governor of Puerto Rico.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of National Research Project Local No. 9, United Federal Workers of America, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for the hearing and disposition of employee appeals from discriminatory treatment by superiors in the Federal Service, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. LUCAS presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Illinois praying that the United States be kept out of war and free of foreign entanglements, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LUCAS. I present a petition signed by various individuals, citizens of Illinois, favoring the Townsend plan. I do not assume any responsibility for the views expressed in the petition because I am opposed to the plan referred to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL SERVICE AND CIVIC RIGHTEOUSNESS, NORTH CAROLINA BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I present a report, which is in the nature of a memorial, from the Committee on Social Service and Civic Righteousness of the North Carolina Baptist State Convention, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the report was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL SERVICE AND CIVIC RIGHTEOUSNESS, 1938

Again this year, because of the crowded condition of the convention program and of the limited time allowed for the presentation and consideration of this report, we are limiting the report to a few simple, direct resolutions concerning some vital matters which ought to claim our attention at the present time.

We recommend the adoption of the following:

Be it resolved by the North Carolina Baptist State Convention:

I. CONCERNING RACE RELATIONS

1. We recognize and deeply regret human weakness and frailty which express themselves in universal racial antipathies and friction. Racial frictions are by no means limited to the South, nor to the relations of the white man and the Negro. The most flagrant expression of racial antipathy at the present time is found in the universal prejudice against the Jew and the terrible persecution now inflicted upon the Jews by Germany, Poland, and other countries. We rejoice that the gospel of our Lord and Savious Jesus Christ offers an adequate remedy for racial hate, and we believe that only as this gospel is preached and accepted by all nations can we hope to see racial hatred disappear and to see all races living together in peace.

2. We rejoice to believe and to recognize the fact that in North Carolina, and throughout the South, the spirit of harmony and cooperation between the white and colored races is steadily and surely increasing. This is manifest in many ways and in many places. Prejudice is being broken down on both sides; white people are coming to have greater freedom of approach and are using this freedom to help the less fortunate race and their efforts are bearing good fruit.

3. We recognize that there is yet much to be done to secure for the Negro a greater degree of justice in the courts, a more equal opportunity to labor and earn a livelihood and to receive a more adequate wage for his labor, and to secure for him more equal and adequate opportunities; and we pledge ourselves as citizens and Christians to strive to secure for the Negro race these things, and other fundamental human rights.

II. LYNCHINGS

1. We recognize that lynchings are not wholly the result of racial hatreds, but in many cases they are. We record our satisfaction that the number of lynchings has been steadily declining in recent years. There were only eight lynchings in the United States in 1937, and thus far this year there have been only three.

We pledge ourselves as citizens, as Christians and as ministers, to continue to use all of our influence and to put forth every effort to the end that this form of barbarism may be entirely banished from our State and our land.

III. FREEDOM OF RELIGION

1. That the North Carolina Baptist Convention reaffirms its devotion to the basic American and New Testament doctrine of the absolute freedom of religion and the absolute separation of church and state.

2. That this principle always and everywhere forbids all government subsidies to religion and religious institutions and all governmental authority over or control of the free exercise of religion.

3. That we urge upon all our Baptist people and institutions the vital importance and necessity for their being alert and sensitive in such matters and refusing all governmental aid, however indirectly offered, and of resisting the bestowal of such aid upon any interest or institution of any and all other denominations.

4. That the convention give its approval to the proposal to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to prohibit the appropriation of public funds to sectarian institutions by any unit of government.

5. That if and when such amendment shall be again offered in Congress, the Committee on Social Service and Civic Righteousness is hereby authorized to use its influence in every proper way to secure the adoption of such amendment.

IV. GERMAN PERSECUTION

1. That the North Carolina Baptist Convention, representing 400,000 white Baptists, condemn, and it does hereby condemn and deplore, the present policy of the German Government, which it pursues in relentless and inhuman persecution both of Christians and Jews on purely religious and racial grounds.

2. That we believe the Government of the United States, without any general repeal or revision of its immigration laws, should somehow find it possible so to modify the application of these laws as to offer asylum to these persecuted and outraged people, regardless of the immigration quotas fixed by statute.

V. THE THREAT OF THE RUMANIAN GOVERNMENT AGAINST RELIGIOUS FREEDOM

1. That the North Carolina Baptist Convention, representing 400,000 white Baptists, hereby expresses its deepest disapproval of the indicated purpose of the Rumanian Government to put into effect December 15 next an ordinance, No. 26208, which would make it impossible for Baptists or other free church people to have churches, maintain public worship, and carry on the preaching of the gospel. In behalf of our fellow Baptists of Rumania, numbering 70,000, and in behalf of our fundamental and deeply cherished religious principle of freedom of conscience in all matters of religion, and in keeping with the Rumanian Constitution, which guarantees entire freedom of conscience, we appeal to the Rumanian authorities to revoke the above-named ordinance entirely and promptly, and so to announce to the world.

2. That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Rumanian Minister at Washington, D. C., and also to Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States.

VI. WORLD REFUGEES

That the Christian churches have a definite responsibility and a rare opportunity to act in the spirit of Jesus in caring for the castaways and refugees who wander hungry and homeless through many lands. Among them are the 700,000 persons in greater Germany, over half of them Christians—if that makes any difference; 70,000 devotees of democracy, Sudeten Germans who would not bow the knee to the dictator, now homeless in Czechoslovakia; other Czechoslovakians who will be homeless as Hitler tightens his grip on their land; threatened Baptists in Rumania; millions of hungry and homeless Chinese who must be fed until the harvest of 1939. Dr. Charles E. Maddry, secretary of our foreign mission board, has addressed to our people an appeal in favor of the Chinese, which must not be denied. Other reputable American Christian leaders are calling for help for the harassed and persecuted in Europe. Our own problems in the United States are tremendous, but if America would once more aid the oppressed in many lands, she would rise to new heights of greatness and would reap the harvest of her generosity for generations to come.

VII. PEACE AND WAR

Christianity and democracy need each other for the fullest expression of both. The American people want their country to do two things—stay out of war and be an influence for peace everywhere. For the purpose of attaining this dual goal we favor the following:

1. The removal of the economic causes of war. We commend the cultivation of good relations with Latin America. Mr. Hull's trade treaties have been, we believe, the most practical move for peace of all those carried out by our Government. We recommend that the Van Zeeland report on international economy be called out of hiding and that the President call a world economic conference, the principal end of which would be to remove the economic causes of war. We submit that it is far better to work together in the removing of the economic cause of war, which we think is the greatest single cause, than it is to enter upon an armament race which threatens as always to end in war, and which, according to leading and impartial economists, will invariably upset the economic structure of any nation which indulges therein and threatens the liberties of the people, as they are pauperized in the manufacturing costs of unproductive goods.

2. The second major movement for world peace which we must support as Christians, and in which we should not wait for our Government to lead, is the caring for the millions of refugees of the world as stated above. We commend most heartily the action of our country and that of Great Britain pointing to the establishment of a haven for these harassed human beings.

3. We are of the opinion that North Carolina Baptists need to be better informed on certain questions concerning world peace and recommend that systematic study of them be made in the churches. For example, should the present neutrality bill be strengthened in order to keep America out of war? Should a constitutional amendment requiring a popular referendum before foreign wars can be waged be adopted? Shall an all-time embargo on the export of munitions be effected? Should the United States lead in the rebuilding of world peace machinery, with the remaking of the League of Nations as a body which represents the will of all peoples, providing for peaceful change after the hearing of the grievances and demands of all, strong and weak? We are convinced that the world needs an informed Christian conscience, articulate and unafraid to guide it through the present crisis and at all times.

4. We recommend that a copy of this resolution on peace and war be forwarded to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, and to Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State.

VIII. ELECTION LAW REFORM

1. That the North Carolina Baptist Convention hereby takes notice of the recent and numerous cases of dishonest ballots and election frauds within our State; that we regard a free and untainted ballot as the very foundation of all democratic government; that we hereby declare our earnest belief that the Legislature of North Carolina at its next session should make such amendments to the revisions of our election laws as to safeguard elections and to protect the name of our State from such further scandal.

2. That particularly we regard the absentee-ballot law as opening the way for all manner of irregularity and corruption when administered by dishonest and unscrupulous men, and that we believe that this law should be repealed, recognizing that the benefit it bestows upon honest citizens, who of necessity must be absent from their polling places on election day, is more than offset by the fraud and evil which the law makes possible.

IX. RESTORATION OF THE RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLE

1. That we hereby again express our hearty disapproval and condemnation of the acts of the North Carolina General Assembly by which it ignored the will of the people as expressed at the ballot box and usurped the rights of the people by fastening the liquor traffic upon North Carolina in violation of the sentiments and wishes of an overwhelming majority of North Carolina citizens.

2. That we appeal to the approaching session of the general assembly to correct this flagrant violation of the principles of representative democratic government by the enactment of a law which will give the people of North Carolina as a whole the right to pass upon the question of whether or not the manufacture, distribution, and sale of liquor in any form shall be tolerated anywhere within the bounds of our Commonwealth.

X. A RETURN TO REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT

Without the slightest thought of political parties, but having solely in mind the fundamental principles of human liberty and individual initiative and action, upon which our American Government is founded and which are embedded in the Constitution, we record our conviction that the American people should go no farther toward the centralization of power in governmental affairs, in the regulation of details of private life, in the regimentation of the citizens and toward the establishment of a totalitarian state, but should return to the simple principles of representative and responsible democratic government, under which our fundamental rights, both religious and civic, will not be put in jeopardy.

XI. THE PRESENT DRY ORGANIZATIONS AND PLANS IN NORTH CAROLINA

1. That we gratefully recognize the patriotic and unselfish services of Mr. Cale K. Burgess, who has for the past several years given so much of his time, strength, and money to the dry cause, without compensation for his services, and even without full reimbursement of his funds.

2. That we regard the present dry organizations and plans in North Carolina as inadequate to combat the liquor forces and the liquor lobby in our State.

3. That we believe the dry organizations should be formed on such a basis and should lay such plans as will secure the presentation of the dry cause to the churches of all denominations in a regular and systematic way by strong and capable speakers, and thus call out from the people a much larger financial support of the cause, that we may maintain a more adequate working force, create a deeper conviction among the people, marshal public opinion against the liquor traffic and secure more adequate representation before the legislature and its committees and secure the repeal of the present liquor laws and the enactment of suitable prohibition measures.

XII. GREATER AND MORE ADEQUATE PRACTICAL EFFORT IN SOCIAL SERVICE AND CIVIC RIGHTEOUSNESS

1. That resolutions and commitments are good and ought to be continued, but that they are not the measure of our opportunities and obligations in this field.

2. That this convention instruct the general board to employ as soon as possible a suitable man to represent our North Carolina Baptist people in the whole field of social service and civic righteousness.

3. That such man should work in close cooperation with the committee on social service and civic righteousness.

4. That this convention express its hearty appreciation to the State prison system and to its religious director, the Reverend E. C. Cooper, for making it possible for our Baptist pastors and others to conduct services in the prison camps throughout the State each Sunday afternoon, and that this convention respectfully request the religious director of the State prison system to extend further this effective service, if possible, by furnishing to pastors or other religious workers at least a week or two in advance of their dismissal names and home addresses of prisoners whose terms will expire, in order that some assistance may be given them in the work of rehabilitation.

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further carry out the provisions of section 32, as amended, of the act entitled 'An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes,' approved August 24, 1935, and subject to all provisions of law relating to the expenditure of funds appropriated by such section, $150,000,000. Such sum shall be immediately available and shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, other appropriations made by such section or for the purpose of such section: Provided, That not in excess of 25 percent of the funds herein made available may be devoted to any one agricultural commodity. So much of such funds as may be devoted to encouraging the exportation of cotton or cotton articles, and any other funds which may be available or may hereafter be made available for the purpose of encouraging the exportation of cotton or cotton articles, shall be expended in accordance with the provisions of the following new section which is hereby added to the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, as amended:

"'SEC. 23. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make payments in kind or in money to any person who exports any raw cotton or articles manufactured in whole or in part from cotton, at such rates and under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture determines are necessary in order that the cotton, or the cotton content in cotton articles, so exported shall be fully competitive in the world markets: Provided, That such payments shall be discontinued during any marketing year when exports of cotton from the United States during such marketing year equal the average of the exports from the United States during the 10-year period ending July 31, 1932. Such payments on raw cotton are authorized to be made only upon cotton bought in the open market, except that payments may be made upon cotton released from loans made or made available by the Commodity Credit Corporation when cotton of suitable classes and quantities to fill cotton export requirements is not available in the markets of the United States. The Secretary is authorized to decide when such free cotton is not so available; but no such payments shall be made, and no obligation to make such payments shall be incurred, prior to January 1, 1940, with respect to any cotton on which a loan has been made or made available by the Commodity Credit Corporation, nor shall such payments be made or obligations incurred during the period from August 1 to December 31, both inclusive, in any marketing year with respect to any cotton on which any such loan has been made.

"'(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized and directed, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, upon application by the owner, or his assignee, of cotton held under loans made or made available by the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide for the release to such owner, or his assignee, of any or all of the cotton of such owner, or assignee, during any marketing year, except during the period from August 1 to December 31, both inclusive, if the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the release of cotton held under such loans (1) is needed to supply suitable classes and quantities of cotton to meet the operating requirements of mills in the United States and is not available in the markets of the United States, or (2) is needed to supply suitable classes and quantities of cotton to meet export requirements and is not available in the markets of the United States. Such cotton shall be released at a cost to the owner, or his assignee, equal to the current loan rate, plus (1) interest, insurance, and storage, for the period beginning at the average time when cotton was put into the current loan and ending at the end of the month when the cotton is released from the loan, and (2) one-fourth cent per pound for miscellaneous charges.

"'(c) The Commodity Credit Corporation is authorized and directed, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, to acquire and to make available to him such cotton as may be necessary to make payments in kind authorized by this section. The funds now and hereafter made available to the Commodity Credit Corporation are hereby made available to such Corporation to acquire and make available to the Secretary of Agriculture such cotton as may be necessary to make the payments in kind authorized under this section, and to provide for the release of cotton under this section. The funds now or hereafter made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of encouraging the exportation of cotton or cotton articles, including, but not limited to, the funds now or hereafter made available by, or for carrying out the purposes of, this title, section 32, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, as amended, and sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, are hereby made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for payments authorized in this section, and for administrative expenses in accordance with the applicable provisions of this title. The determinations of the Secretary of Agriculture made pursuant to the provisions of this section and the facts constituting the basis for any payment when officially determined in conformity with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be final and conclusive.'"

After the foregoing amendment, insert the following:

"In order further to safeguard the expenditure of the funds appropriated in this item and any other funds which may be available or may hereafter be made available for the purpose of encouraging the exportation of cotton or cotton articles and for all other purposes section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act (of 1933), as amended, is hereby amended by inserting the words 'or are likely to be' after the word 'being' in subsection (a), by striking out the expression 'July 1, 1928, to June 30, 1933' and inserting in lieu thereof the expression 'January 1, 1929, to December 31, 1933' in subsection (b), and by striking out the words '15 days after the date of' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'the date fixed in' in subsection (c)."

STUDIES OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION—WORK OF THE SESSION—FINAL ADJOURNMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Concurrent Resolution 15, submitted by Mr. BANKHEAD on the 2d instant, providing for a sine die adjournment of the session and authorizing certain committees of the two Houses thereafter to study revenue and neutrality matters and changes in the Interstate Commerce Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the concurrent resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the concurrent resolution will lie over.

The routine morning business is closed. The consideration of bills on the calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if the Senate will indulge me, before we proceed with the call of the calendar I ask unanimous consent that I may address the Senate for about 10 minutes on the suggestion that Congress come to early adjournment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, as usual at about this time of the year there are those who begin to express the belief that Congress should and will adjourn at a very early date. If Congress should adjourn at an early date with the affairs of this Nation and world affairs as they are, it would be like the officers in command of an army deserting in the midst of a battle.

This age may be faced with a general collapse of civilization, and not only will it require all of the wisdom statesmen possess collectively and individually to avoid such a collapse but it will require the hardest work which statesmen have ever done. For the past 6 years we have been attempting to stem the tide of adverse conditions, and while we have made great progress, still it has been through artificial means, and the patient would die if we should cease to apply remedies which should never have to be applied in the life of a nation. It would not take much to plunge our people back into the dark days of the early 1930's. We know that the achievements of this administration have been great. We likewise know that the opposition to the things which have been done is alined along every front, giving battle to the new freedom which is represented by the New Deal. Every mistake we have made, or may make in the future, will be exaggerated and broadcast among the people.

Life in this age depends on trade—a world-wide exchange of goods and services. There is no prospect of bringing about such interchange of goods in the immediate future, confidence and credit are both needed and both are lacking. It is our job to restore both, and if we should abandon the task which we sought, and which can only be completed by the Congress, it would be an admission that our minds are too puny to do that which is necessary to restore confidence and credit.

Some rave against the New Deal, which has much more good than bad to its credit. Some rave at businessmen without stopping to think that businessmen cannot carry on business unless the consuming public has the purchasing power to buy that which is produced in the factories, on the farms, and in the mines. If we could give to the people purchasing power—I do not say restore, because they never had it—which would enable them to have the actual necessities of life, there would be no unemployment, no idle factories, no abandoned farms, and no closed mines. The problem which confronts us, reduced to its simplest terms, is that of increasing the income of the consumer until he can buy what he needs. We have been trying, and we are still trying, to do this through spending, and we spend because apparently there is nothing else that we can do. To cease to spend at this time would mean destruction. So we continue spending, knowing that the time will come when we can spend no more, and also knowing that then a crash may come which will completely destroy our Nation. Before we reach that point we must find some means of increasing the income of the people of the Nation. It will be a slow process. Means must be found to enlarge business, and that cannot be done if we allow the businessmen in the small cities and in our rural communities to close their stores or shops or abandon their farms or mines because they have no means of procuring money with which to conduct their business at this time. There is no place to which a businessman can go now and procure money. Banks will not allow him to have it; the investment bankers will not fool with him because he is too small, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, like the investment banker, either cannot or will not make loans to those who are most needy.

Our Government must learn to take a chance in making loans to men who create wealth and increase purchasing power. Some may fail, but if the result is an increase in the general wealth of the people greater than their losses, it is good business for the Nation as a whole. It has been my belief for a long time that our problems cannot be solved until Congress deals with our monetary system. I do not see how any investor could be expected to invest his money without some stabilization of prices, or without some assurance that the dollars he invests today will not be worth less tomorrow. It is only in the hope of making a profit that men invest money in enterprises, and when there is no security, no stability, men allow their money to stay in the banks, awaiting the time when they can see an opportunity to make money.

If it be true that Congress does not have the power to stabilize values—that is, to stabilize the value of the unit of measurement—then the makers of the Constitution thought the people would be wiser than they are today. Values can be stabilized if Members of Congress will forget the things they thought they knew about our monetary system and reexamine the question with open minds. There must be some way. If a farmer toils one year to produce wheat and sells it for $2 a bushel, he finds life an illusion if he does the same thing the next year and sells his wheat for 30 cents a bushel. If a laborer can earn enough to support his family one year, he ought to have a reasonable assurance that by doing the same thing the next year he can support his family. But, under present conditions, when next year comes, he may have no job at all.

Our whole system is a crazy quilt so far as values are concerned. Unemployment will be with us until we can give assurance of reasonable security to him who is willing to take a chance on investing his money. Congress should not adjourn until it has made an honest effort to stabilize prices, and if it succeeds in that, the question of unemployment—which means the question of relief and the farm problem and all related problems—will be settled.

We have made some start on social security, but it has been a halting, imperfect start. No one thought that we could accomplish in a few years that which it will take many years to accomplish, but there is dissatisfaction because, after having neglected all attempts to bring about social security for a century and a half, we cannot bring it about within a year or two. If we do not do something about our monetary system, so that men who desire to work can earn enough to support themselves and their families in comfort, we are going to have something which most of us do not look upon as sound.

When we discussed old-age pensions 2 or 3 years ago, the faces of nearly 7,000,000 citizens lighted up with hope, because they thought the nightmare of old age and helplessness had been brushed aside. But we see now that the shadows hover over them again. Many of those who are approaching 65 years of age know that they must cease to work, and they know that they cannot get other jobs. Yet we are doing practically nothing about it. What the aged need is a pension that is certain and sure, and not the haphazard system we have now, which in some of the States is equivalent to no help at all. We might as well know it now as later that if we cannot find some plan whereby the aged may receive a reasonable pension, probably as much as $50 a month, without being classed as beggars, we will see tried the Townsend plan or something worse. The payment of pensions to the aged would go a long way toward restoring the purchasing power of the people. Of course, it would not be enough, but it would help the people as a whole in actual dollars and cents more than the amount taken out of the Treasury with which to pay the pensions. Yet we talk about quitting and leaving this great question unsolved.

Mr. President, we have made some progress toward bringing about better conditions in the field of labor. Labor has been very loyal to this administration, because it has held out hope to it; but the Wage and Hour Act is so imperfect that I seriously doubt whether it can be enforced. It can be made to work by an intelligent Congress; but if we quit and go home, matters will grow worse. Many businessmen would close their establishments because they could not comply with the provisions of the law. And with shorter hours and better wages there will be fewer places to be filled. We ought not to leave such a condition existing in our country if we are wise enough to solve the problem.

We helped labor by providing for collective bargaining, but we went further and apparently placed autocratic powers in a board which has not administered the law very well. Nothing has brought this administration into greater trouble than the administration of what is known as the Wagner Act. The good things for labor in that act can and should be preserved, but I doubt whether there is any one of us who of his own free will and accord would not vote to make some change in it so that it might not be used as an instrument of persecution and destruction. Yet some say that we ought to go home and leave that problem unsettled.

Then there is the problem of finding a way to make money available to the small-business man immediately. It is a big problem, and undoubtedly will require the best thought of the Members of the Congress; but we hear it said, while more businessmen are failing because of the imperfection of our financial system, that we should adjourn and go home and leave a larger number of men out of employment.

There is much talk about economy and balancing the Budget. We ought to devise some plan before we leave here this year which will give assurance as to what may be expected along these lines. We know that economy pressed too far at this time would bring disaster, and we certainly know that an unbalanced Budget continued through the years will also bring disaster. Why not put our heads together on the matter and see if we cannot find some solution? Taxes are burdensome and are growing more so, and there are many inequalities to be found in our taxing system. There should be sufficient ability in Congress to revise our tax laws so as to remove such inequalities as may be found and give assurance that the Government will not take every hope of profit out of any business enterprise. But we are thinking about going to our homes, where we can meditate without work.

We have been trying to do something for the farmer for many years, but his condition does not improve very much. Certainly it is not his fault. He needs guidance and help, and he looks to the Congress to find ways of affording such help, but rather than to give it we prefer to go home and leave the farmer in his distress, hopeless and helpless.

I have referred briefly to some of the very important subjects relating to our domestic affairs with which we need to deal. Foreign affairs are more ominous. A general war will be going on in Europe within the next few weeks, perhaps, and, while many of the leading Members of Congress say that we ought to keep our noses out of the business of other people, I think Congress should be in session to help determine what is our business and what is the business of others.

As for me, it is my opinion that Congress should remain in session, intelligently working toward a solution of our problems, until the snow flies, and if we have not found a satisfactory solution of all of our questions by that time we, at least, should be able to report progress, and take a short breathing spell and start in again.

THE FOREIGN DEBTS

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the Senate for about 3 minutes during the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Washington is recognized.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, day before yesterday on the floor of the House of Commons in London, England, there was asked a question of the British Secretary of State for War, the answer to which—if an answer had been made—would have interested every man, woman, and child in the United States. The question remained unanswered.

The unanswered question is one which long has been in the minds not only of those who, like myself, served on the special Senate committee investigating the munitions industry, but in the mind as well of every patriotic and responsible Member of the Senate.

Let me read to my colleagues of the Senate of the United States the brief dispatch from London telling how this question came to be raised:

LONDON, May 2.—The question of Britain paying the war debt to the United States was raised in the House of Commons today, without reaction from the Government.

Leslie Hore-Belisha, War Secretary, revealed that Britain is continuing to pay royalties on the Bren gun of Czechoslovakia, adopted by the British Army, despite the German annexation of Czechoslovakia.

A member asked whether Hore-Belisha is aware that "we are increasing the financial strength of Germany by continuing these payments."

"Maybe so," Hore-Belisha replied, "but it is not customary for this country to repudiate payments which have been legally contracted."

"What about America?" cried an unidentified member.

There was no reply.

Mr. President, yesterday morning the newspapers of this country carried reports of a survey of American public opinion demonstrating that the American people are, as nearly as is possible in a democracy, unanimously against the sending of American troops abroad to fight in another world war. Our tragic experience in our last venture to make the world safe for democracy might be sufficient reason for this attitude, but this attitude is sharpened and emphasized by the admission Tuesday on the floor of the House of Commons by the British Secretary of State for War that the unprincipled and murderous practices of the international munitions industry have not ceased, but, rather, has been intensified as the international situation grows more tense.

The British Government frankly admits that it is "increasing the financial strength of Germany continuing these payments" to the German industry for machine guns to equip the new conscript British army, and it defends its action on the ground that "it is not customary for this country to repudiate payments which have been legally contracted." But when asked, "What about America?"—what about the American war debts, which were also legally contracted—there was no reply.

Mr. President, in the name of the American people, I again address this question to the British Government, and I warn those who do not understand the temper of the American people that this question must be answered, and until it is answered the bulk of the American people will wonder why they should concern themselves with a situation which may lead them again to the shambles.

CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will proceed with the call of the calendar under rule VIII.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is not present in the Senate Chamber at the moment. For a number of days when the calendar was called I have interposed objection to several measures, the purpose of which is to refer to the Court of Claims demands by various Indian tribes. I have submitted these bills to the Department of Justice and to the Treasury Department, as well as to the Department of the Interior, and I have just received full reports with respect to the bills. It is my purpose to confer with the Senator from Oklahoma tomorrow and show him the reports so that on Monday we shall be able to take action upon them. I ask that the bills, which I have heretofore asked to go over, may again be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bills beginning with Calendar No. 100, Senate bill 783, down to and including Calendar No. 116, Senate bill 498, will go over.

The bill (S. 1706) to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is not in the Senate Chamber at the moment. I am a member of the special committee which reported the bill. The work in connection with the bill was in part performed by another committee. I ask that the bill go over for today. Really, I think it should be indefinitely postponed; but in the absence of the Senator from Virginia, I shall not make any other request than that it be passed for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1162) to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. That, Mr. President, is also a bill which should be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT PRIVILEGES, COMMANDING GENERAL, GENERAL HEADQUARTERS AIR FORCE

The bill (S. 1462) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, so as to confer on the commanding general, General Headquarters Air Force, the same retirement privileges now enjoyed by chiefs of branches, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I ask that Calendar No. 339, House bill 4087, be substituted for Senate bill 1462, Calendar 215, and be considered at this time. House bill 4087 is identical with Senate bill 1462.

While I am on my feet I wish to say a word about the bill. The present law provides that any officer who shall have served 4 years as chief of a branch and who may subsequently be retired may be retired with the rank authorized by law for the grade held by him while such chief.

The only amendment of the law proposed in the bill is that there shall be included therein the commanding general of the General Headquarters Air Force. The Secretary of War recommends the passage of the bill and states that the air force has now attained to the same dignity and responsibility as any other branch of the Army, and that he feels that the commanding general of the air force should be entitled to the same retirement privileges as now enjoyed by chiefs of other branches. The bill does not call for any appropriation or additional allowance. It simply will give recognition to the increasing importance of that arm of the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming that House bill 4087 be substituted for Senate bill 1462 and be now considered?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4087) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, so as to confer on the commanding general, General Headquarters Air Force, the same retirement privileges now enjoyed by chiefs of branches, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1462 will be indefinitely postponed.

BILLS AND RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

NATIONAL AVIATION DAY

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 111) designating August 19 of each year as National Aviation Day, which was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized to designate August 19 of each year as National Aviation Day, and to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on that day, and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate exercises to further and stimulate interest in aviation in the United States.

Mr. KING. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he will be kind enough to allow me to make a brief explanation of Senate Joint Resolution 111? There was introduced in the first instance a measure which provided that it shall be the duty of the President, in commemoration of National Aviation Day, which is the birthday of Mr. Orville Wright, to call upon the armed services of the country to participate in celebrations in observance of the day. Some Senators, I think, properly objected to that, both on the ground of expense and, perhaps, of expediency.

Subsequent to that time an amended and new joint resolution was presented, which was considered by the Senate committee, and is now on the calendar, with the favorable recommendation of the Senate Committee on Commerce. The joint resolution merely proposes to designate the 19th day of August, the birthday of Orville Wright, as National Aviation Day. It does not make it a legal holiday. It does not require any expense on the part of government, either local or national. It is simply designed for the purpose of encouraging the formation of a sentiment that would be favorable to the development of the aviation facilities of the United States.

In view of the fact that there is no expense involved, that there is no public participation of any sort required, but that it is merely educational in its character, and has already been approved by many Senators on the floor, and by the Senate Committee on Commerce, which considered the matter, I hope the Senator from Utah will be gracious enough not to object to its passage.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall withdraw my objection after making an observation. We are now having requests—indeed, demands—from various parts of the country for the observance of Labor Day, Naval Day, and so forth. I have received requests that we designate a day to commemorate the development of the sugar business, a great industry. I received a letter the other day insisting that if we are to have days designated to commemorate the development of industries we ought to have one for the dairy industry, because that industry furnishes more than $2,000,000,000 to the economy of our country—the greatest product of the country, far greater than cotton.

I have had requests that we set apart a day to be known as Mining Day, because the mining industry furnishes the sinews of war; it gives us our gold and our silver, our copper, and the minerals which are so indispensable to a growing and progressive civilization.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we will soon have to enlarge the number of days in the calendar so that, instead of 365, we shall have four or five hundred days in order to meet the demands for days to be devoted to some particular observance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Florida if the joint resolution makes August 19 a holiday, or simply designates it as a day when someone can celebrate with the flag flying on high?

Mr. PEPPER. That is one of the points I wanted to impress upon the Senate. The joint resolution does not make the day a national holiday. It does not require the participation of any of the services of the country. The purpose of the measure is to call attention to the fact that Congress, by the passage of the joint resolution, recognizes the importance of aviation, and thus stimulate public interest in aviation.

I shall appreciate it very much if the generous Senator from Utah will not insist on his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 111) was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the June 1937 and July 1938 accounts of Guy F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, Division of Disbursement, Treasury Department, without charge against the certifying officer of the Department of the Interior, for the following vouchers covering the purchase of tents and canvas: Voucher 13–85798, $65; voucher 13–86963, $73.75; voucher 13–87591, $784.25; voucher 13–87592, $366.02; voucher 13–8340, $40.75.

SAN FRANCISCO MOUNTAIN SCENIC BOULEVARD CO.

The bill (S. 68) for the relief of San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is to pay to the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co. the sum of $15,500 as full settlement of any claim of said company against the United States arising out of expenditures made for the benefit of the United States in the construction of the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard within the Coconino National Forest in Arizona.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether or not he regards the road as necessary to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. The report of the Department so indicates.

A portion of the road which was constructed is of value to the Forest Service in the administration of the Coconino National Forest, since it makes accessible parts of that forest which otherwise would not be accessible to vehicular traffic.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co. the sum of $15,500 as full settlement of the claim of said company against the United States arising out of expenditures made for the benefit of the United States in the construction of the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard within the Coconino National Forest in Arizona: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a copy of the report of the committee on the bill.

There being no objection, the report (No. 334) submitted by Mr. HUGHES on April 27, 1939, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 68) for the relief of the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co., having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with the following amendment:

At the end of the bill add the following:

": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The purpose of the bill is to pay to the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co. the sum of $15,500 as full settlement of the claim of said company against the United States arising out of expenditures made for the benefit of the United States in the construction of the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard within the Coconino National Forest in Arizona.

The Acting Secretary of Agriculture recommends favorable consideration of the bill.

The records of the Department show that, under the regulations relating to the administration of the national forests, a permit was issued on March 29, 1920, to the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co. authorizing it to construct a road across national-forest lands so as to reach the summit of the San Francisco Peaks, a high mountain in this locality. The road was to be constructed within a specified time and was to be maintained in a serviceable condition to meet tourist demands. It was expected that the permittee would reimburse itself for expenditures made in the construction and maintenance of the road by charging a toll for the privilege of passing over the road. The company seems to have had difficulty in financing the project, since the construction of the road was never completed, although the period for building it was several times extended. The company was not successful in obtaining sufficient revenue in the way of tolls from the road to maintain the portion constructed in a safe and serviceable condition and therefore the Department, after due notice, on January 19, 1938, canceled the permit so that thereafter the company had no control over the road, but for all practical purposes it became the property of the United States, since it was constructed on lands of the United States.

The records further show that a portion of the road which was constructed is of value to the Forest Service in the administration of the Coconino National Forest, since it makes parts of that forest accessible which otherwise would not be accessible to vehicular traffic. An examination by the Forest Service as to the cost of this part of the road, or rather what it would cost the Federal Government were it to construct a like road in this locality, indicates that the cost of such construction would be approximately $15,500, the amount stated in the bill. In view of the fact that this road is of value to the Government in the administration of Coconino National Forest and that were the Government forced to construct a like road it would be put to an expense of approximately $15,500, the Acting Secretary states: "It is believed that it would be no more than equitable to pay the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co. the cost of such road construction, and therefore the Department recommends S. 68 to the favorable consideration of your committee."

Your committee concur in the view of the Department, and it is accordingly recommended that the bill do pass.

The letter of the Acting Secretary of Agriculture is appended hereto and made a part of this report.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, March 8, 1939.

Hon. M. M. LOGAN,
Chairman, Committee on Claims,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR LOGAN: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of February 13 enclosing copy of S. 68, a bill for the relief of the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co., and asking for a report thereon.

The proposed legislation would direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the San Francisco Mountain Boulevard Co. $15,500 as full settlement of the claim of the company against the United States growing out of expenditures made in the construction of a road within the Coconino National Forest, Ariz.

Under the regulations of this Department relating to the administration of the national forests, a permit was issued on March 29, 1920, to the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co. authorizing it to construct a road across national forest lands so as to reach the summit of the San Francisco Peaks, a high mountain in this locality. The road was to be constructed within a specified time and was to be maintained in a serviceable condition to meet tourist demands. It was expected that the permittee would reimburse itself for expenditures made in the construction and maintenance of the road by charging a toll for the privilege of passing over the road. The company seems to have had difficulty in financing the project, since the construction of the road was never completed although the period for building it was several times extended. The company was not successful in obtaining sufficient revenue in the way of tolls from the road to maintain the portion constructed in a safe and serviceable condition and therefore the Department, after due notice, on January 19, 1938, canceled the permit so that thereafter the company had no control over the road but for all practical purposes it became the property of the United States since it was constructed on lands of the United States.

A portion of the road which was constructed is of value to the Forest Service in the administration of the Coconino National Forest since it makes parts of that forest accessible which otherwise would not be accessible to vehicular traffic. An examination by the Forest Service as to the cost of this part of the road, or rather what it would cost the Federal Government were it to construct a like road in this locality, indicates that the cost of such construction would be approximately $15,500, the amount stated in Senate bill 68.

In view of the fact that this road is of value to the Government in the administration of the Coconino National Forest and that were the Government forced to construct a like road it would be put to an expense of approximately $15,500, it is believed that it would be no more than equitable to pay the San Francisco Mountain Scenic Boulevard Co. the cost of such road construction and therefore this Department recommends Senate bill 68 to the favorable consideration of your committee.

Sincerely,

HARRY L. BROWN,
Acting Secretary.

N. F. CLOWER AND ELIJAH WILLIAMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2056) for the relief of N. F. Clower and Elijah Williams, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment at the end of the bill to insert a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury, for and on behalf of the United States of America, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to execute to N. F. Clower, of Shelby County, Tenn., a quitclaim deed conveying any right, title, and interest of the United States of America in the following-described real estate lying and being in Shelby County, Tenn., and particularly described as follows:

Being in the second civil district of said county and State, to wit: Twenty-seven and six one-hundredths acres of land bounded on the north by the lands of ——— White; on the east by the lands of Fields; on the south by the lands of ——— Weaver; and on the west by the lands of Ensley or ——— Barrett; and lots 9, 11, 12, and 13 in Clower's subdivision in Shelby County, State of Tennessee, which subdivision was made in January A. D. 1925; said lots are bounded on the north by the lands of N. F. Clower; on the east by the lands of Williams and Birdie Rice; on the south by Mitchell Avenue, and on the west by the Macedonia Missionary Baptist Church lands; said lots 9, 11, 12, and 13 are in block 2 of said subdivision; together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury, for and on behalf of the United States of America, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to execute to Elijah Williams, of Shelby County, Tenn., a quitclaim deed conveying any right, title, and interest of the United States of America in the following-described real estate lying and being in the county of Shelby, Tenn., and particularly described as follows:

Being in the second civil district of said county and State, to wit: Lot 42, block 1 of W. O. Crump's Warford Avenue subdivision, as shown in plat book 8 at page 205 of the register's office for the county of Shelby in the State of Tennessee, said land beginning on the north side of Calvert Avenue at the northwest corner of Branch Street thence west 40 feet; thence north parallel with Branch Street 125 feet; thence east parallel with Calvert Avenue 40 feet to the west side of Branch Street; thence south with said west line 125 feet to the beginning, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging.

SEC. 3. That the clerk of the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee, at Memphis, is hereby authorized and directed to satisfy of record the judgment obtained by the United States of America against N. F. Clower and Elijah Williams, as sureties on the forfeited bail bond of Robert Rhone, who was charged with violation of the United States Internal Revenue Act and who failed to appear as required by law but who subsequent to the first setting of his trial and within the same term of court, made his appearance, stood trial July 21, 1937, was convicted, sentenced, and has served his time and been discharged: Provided, however, That as a condition precedent to the reconveyance of the property and the satisfaction of the judgment the claimants pay to the United States their proportionate share of the sum of $167.96, said sum representing costs and expenses incurred by the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee in connection with Senate bill 2056 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report (No. 335) submitted by Mr. HUGHES on April 27, 1939, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2056) for the relief of N. F. Clower and Elijah Williams, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass with the following amendment:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Provided, however, That as a condition precedent to the reconveyance of the property and the satisfaction of the judgment the claimants pay to the United States their proportionate share of the sum of $167.96, said sum representing costs and expenses incurred by the Government."

As amended, the Attorney General has no objection to the enactment of the bill.

The files of the Department of Justice show that on June 16, 1937, Robert Rhone was indicted on a charge of operating a still in violation of the internal-revenue laws; that he was released on bond in the sum of $1,000 on which N. F. Clower and Elijah Williams were sureties; that defendant failed to appear on the date set for his arraignment and on June 24, 1937, the bond was forfeited. Judgment was entered against the sureties on November 8, 1937, in the sum of $1,000 with costs.

In July 1938 certain real property belonging to the sureties was sold in execution of the judgment. The United States bid it in for the sum of $960, of which the sum of $710 was paid for the Williams property and the sum of $250 for the Clower property. After applying this amount to the judgment there remained a balance due of $205.46 which is still unsatisfied. The bill proposes that the United States reconvey the property to claimants and cancel the balance due on the judgment.

On July 19, 1937, less than a month after the default, the defendant was produced by the sureties for trial. He was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary for a term of 2 years. He was subsequently released on a writ of habeas corpus, the court holding that the count of the indictment on which he was convicted was void.

The Attorney General states that "I find no objection to the enactment of the bill, if it is amended to provide that as a condition precedent to the reconveyance of the property and the satisfaction of the judgment the claimants pay to the United States the sum of $167.96," the amount of costs and expenses incurred by the United States.

The following letter from the Attorney General is appended hereto and made a part of this report, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 19, 1939.

Hon. M. M. LOGAN,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Claims,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your letter of April 5, requesting my views concerning the merits of the bill (S. 2056) to provide that the United States shall convey to N. F. Clower and Elijah Williams title to certain real property located in Shelby County, Tenn.; and to provide for the satisfaction of the judgment secured against them as a result of the forfeiture of a bail bond filed in a criminal proceeding against Robert Rhone in the United States District Court for the Western District of Tennessee.

The files of this Department show that on June 16, 1937, Robert Rhone was indicted on a charge of operating a still in violation of the internal-revenue laws. He was released on bond in the sum of $1,000, on which N. F. Clower and Elijah Williams were sureties. The defendant failed to appear on the date set for his arraignment, and on June 24, 1937, the bond was forfeited. Judgment was entered against the sureties on November 8, 1937, in the sum of $1,000 with costs.

In July 1938 certain real property belonging to the sureties was sold in execution of the judgment. The United States bid it in for the sum of $960, of which the sum of $710 was paid for the Williams property and the sum of $250 for the Clower property. After applying this amount to the judgment, there remained a balance due of $205.46, which is still unsatisfied.

The pending bill proposes to provide that the United States shall reconvey the above-mentioned property to N. F. Clower and Elijah Williams and cancel the balance of $205.46 due on the judgment.

On July 19, 1937, less than a month after the default, the defendant was produced by the sureties for trial. He was convicted and sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary for a term of 2 years. He was subsequently released on a writ of habeas corpus, the court holding that the count of the indictment on which he was convicted was void.

I am informed that Clower is 84 years of age and that the property includes his home.

The Government incurred costs and expenses in this matter aggregating the sum of $167.96.

In view of the foregoing consideration, I find no objection to the enactment of the bill, if it is amended to provide that as a condition precedent to the reconveyance of the property and the satisfaction of the judgment, the claimants pay to the United States the above-mentioned sum of $167.96.

With kind regards,
Sincerely,

FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General.

FRANCIS GERRITY

The bill (S. 648) for the relief of Francis Gerrity was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over. It is objected to by the Secretary of War.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, am I to understand that there is objection to Senate bill 648?

Mr. KING. Yes, Mr. President. I notice from the report which accompanies the bill that the entire matter has been given mature consideration and that the War Department adheres to the views expressed in its previous report, which is quoted, and recommends that the bill be not enacted into law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Will the Senator withhold his objection for just a moment?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I have no interest whatever in this case. I did not know anything about it until the matter was referred to me to make a study of it.

The report to which the Senator refers is merely one of the routine reports which are turned out at the War Department on every case that comes to the Department for consideration. It does not mean a thing in the world.

The facts concerning this case are as follows:

Francis Gerrity enlisted when he was 17 years old. He went to the Philippines. He served 2 years and 9 months in the Philippines. He was brought back to Junction City, Kans. One pay day Gerrity and two other soldiers obtained leave and went to town. The day before, a soldier from Junction City had gotten into some trouble and had killed a policeman in cold blood. At that particular time feeling was very strong against men who wore the uniform. Gerrity, in company with the two other soldiers referred to, went to town. They met a civilian, and the four of them went to a sporting house. While they were there, all of them drinking and all of them more or less intoxicated, the civilian claimed that he had been robbed; that his pockets had been picked. So the soldiers were arrested and tried under very unfavorable circumstances. The two older soldiers were sentenced to the penitentiary for a year. On account of his youth, Gerrity was sentenced to a year in the reformatory.

There was no evidence to show which one of the soldiers, if any of them, had robbed the civilian. It is just an unfortunate case. Francis Gerrity at the present time is in a logging camp in the West. He is a hard-working man with a good reputation. The situation is an unfortunate one, which only the Congress can correct.

The War Department had no alternative except to discharge Gerrity. When he was convicted in a civil court, he had to be taken out of the Army. He was not dishonorably discharged. He was discharged "without honor." It seems to me that the Congress ought to correct a situation of that kind.

Mr. KING. He was discharged because he was convicted of picking pockets and sentenced to 1 year in the penitentiary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He was sentenced to 1 year in the reform school.

Mr. KING. To 1 year in the reform school.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. As I have said, there were three soldiers in the party.

Mr. KING. If the three engaged in picking pockets or robbing some person, I do not think one should be exculpated merely because perhaps the crime was not fastened directly upon him. The three were together. The report shows that Gerrity was convicted of picking pockets.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. He was convicted of picking pockets. All three of the soldiers were convicted, and the older boys were sent to the penitentiary. Does not the Senator believe that sometimes a conviction is wrong? From my study of the case, I have very good reason to believe that the conviction was wrong.

As I say, I have no interest in the case other than a humanitarian interest.

Mr. KING. The War Department has made an investigation, and the Senator has made an investigation. The investigation of the War Department was made by Adjutant General Adams, a man of the highest character and integrity, for whom I vouch in every activity of life. Does the Senator believe, after his investigation, that Gerrity did not indulge in picking pockets, and did not join with his associates in that crime?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think he did not have anything to do with the crime of picking pockets. I do not think anybody's pockets were picked; but the Army had no other choice than to discharge the men when they were convicted in court. The Army could not go back of the conviction. The Army had no alternative. It was compelled to accept the conviction, and to discharge "without honor."

I wish the Senator would study the case, and, because of his humanitarian instincts—which I know are very great—and his gratefulness to the men who wear the uniform, be lenient in this case.

An identical bill has passed the Senate at two previous sessions. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall adhere to my objection for the present. I shall confer with the War Department; and if any injustice has been done Francis Gerrity, I shall be the first to move for rectification. However, in view of Secretary Woodring's statement that the matter has been given full consideration, and in view of the recommendation of Major General Adams, it seems to me we ought to have further light before we pass the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 3221) to authorize the Secretary of War to provide for the sale of aviation supplies and services to aircraft operated by foreign military and air attachés accredited to the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not know that I have any objection to the bill; but I should like to have an explanation of it, because the title is not sufficient to enlighten me as to its true purpose.

Mr. KING. Also, there is a minority report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 198) to provide that records certified by the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court in response to writs of certiorari may include material portions of the evidence, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CHARLES C. RASCOE

The bill (S. 682) relating to the military record of Charles C. Rasco, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over. The War Department reports adversely upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ] reported the bill, and the Chair will refer the Senator to him.

Mr. KING. The War Department has reported adversely, and I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection and permit me to make a brief statement?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I will explain the situation in reference to this bill. The young man in this case, Charles C. Rascoe, was a soldier on duty in France. As to his general character, it may be stated that he submitted himself to two operations in order finally to become physically qualified for admission into the service. He served in France in the Transportation Corps. His duty was to travel up and down a railway line as a trackwalker. One day while he was walking the tracks a squad of 10 or 15 soldiers were unloading some hospital supplies. The car from which the supplies were being unloaded had been wrecked or damaged, so that some of the cases in which bottles were packed had been broken. It was cold, and this young soldier, a mere boy of 19 or 20, coming down the right-of-way, as was his duty to do, found the other soldiers in a little shack in which there was a stove and a fire. I may say, by the way, that a sergeant was there. The young soldier stepped into the little shack. There was on the stove in the shack a concoction that was made, as the soldiers thought, out of grain alcohol; but, as a matter of fact, it was made out of wood alcohol. They had mixed sugar and water into it, and invited this young soldier to have a drink. Any Legionnaires who may be here who ever took a drink while they were on duty will understand the situation. So he took a drink, as the other boys did, and went on about his duties. The next day he became sick, and, after he was in the hospital for a day, he died.

The War Department issued a certificate as to the cause of his death, it being reported that the cause was cerebrospinal meningitis. Another boy who drank some of the same concoction in the shack on that cold morning also died. Then the record was changed to show that he died from the effects of drinking wood alcohol, that his stepping into the shack was outside the line of his duty, and, therefore, he died from an act committed while he was not in the performance of his duty. That being their finding, it was held that his separation from the service was not honorable, and it was so noted on his record. Of course, his mother is greatly interested in this matter, and she is most particularly interested in it because she does not like to have that record against her boy. I have taken the trouble in looking into this case to go to the War Department and find other similar cases where honorable discharges were given, and I have incorporated them in the report.

In the interest of fair play to this boy and his mother, and because I realize, Mr. President, that it is a practical impossibility to get the War Department ever to vary, by a dot or a comma or anything else, what they have put on the record as to the cause of death, when soldiers are in the field, and when sudden courts martial or sudden courts of inquiry are held. Under the circumstances, I hope the Senator from Utah will permit this bill to be considered and passed by the Senate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned, I have no interest in these matters other than to do my duty. Personally I should be very glad to be far more generous than is my friend from Wyoming. I find that the first time the War Department considered this case it strongly recommended "that the bill be not favorably considered." Secretary Woodring further adds:

> After reconsideration of the entire matter, the War Department adheres to the view expressed in its previous report, quoted in the foregoing, and recommends that S. 682 be not enacted into law.

The facts are, so far as the report which the Senator submits discloses, that this young man and others had certain duties to perform. They left the scene of the duty to which they were assigned and went into what the Senator calls "a shack"—into a house—which was not connected in any way with their duties, and there they partook of a beverage. The report seems to indicate that larceny—a petit larceny, probably—was committed in obtaining the beverage. The result was, as the Senator states, that death followed the next day.

I am willing that the Senate should pass upon the bill, and I withdraw objection to its consideration. I only want the Senate to understand that the Secretary of War, "after further consideration," strongly recommends against the favorable consideration of the bill.

I wish to say, not by way of exculpation, for the War Department does not need any apologist for its record, that I do not agree with my dear friend from Wyoming that the War Department, always without changing a dot, as he stated, recommends adversely on such measures as this. It is quite the reverse; I know of many cases where they have favorably recommended appropriations and correction of records; and I do not want the RECORD to show that we assent to the charge that the War Department always recommends against these cases. I think the War Department tries to get the facts, and I want to exonerate it in this case, as in others, when the charge is made that the Department has not acted fairly.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, let me refer to one of the conclusions of the War Department:

There are a considerable number of cases similar to this for which remedial legislation would undoubtedly be asked should this bill become a law.

It has been my experience, as a member of the Military Affairs Committee, that when an attempt is made to correct the record of a soldier there is included in practically every adverse report the statement that it would establish a precedent. I had hoped these cases might be determined upon their individual merits.

As to my statement about the facts and circumstances, there is in the files of the Military Affairs Committee in this case the complete record of the testimony taken of all the men who were there, including the sergeant. All the young soldier did was to stop on his travels up and down the railway line and accept a drink with the other boys who were taking drinks. It is on that ground that a black mark has been written against his record in the War Department, and that, I think, the Senate should correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I have withdrawn my objection under the circumstances explained by me.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Charles C. Rascoe, deceased (Army serial No. 2687114), who was a private, Seventy-eighth Company, Transportation Corps, United States Army, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private on April 9, 1919: Provided, That no back pay, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act.

PROHIBITION OF RADIO ADVERTISING OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks the Senate to recur to Calendar No. 362, Senate bill 517, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 517) to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by radio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to make it plain that he does not object to that bill. It was objected to by other Senators, and the bill went over.

RECORDS CERTIFIED TO SUPREME COURT BY THE COURT OF CLAIMS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair also asks to recur to Calendar No. 363, Senate bill 198, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 198) to provide that records certified by the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court in response to writs of certiorari may include material portions of the evidence, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3, subsection b, of the act of February 13, 1925 (43 Stat. 936, 939, c. 229; U. S. C., title 28, sec. 288 b), be amended so as to read as follows:

"(b) In any case in the Court of Claims, including those begun under section 180 of the Judicial Code, it shall be competent for the Supreme Court, upon the petition of either party, whether Government or claimant, to require, by certiorari, that the cause be certified to it for review and determination of all errors assigned, with the same power and authority, and with like effect, as if the cause had been brought there by appeal. In such event the Court of Claims shall include in the papers certified by it the findings of fact, the conclusions of law, and the judgment or decree, as well as such other parts of the record as are material to the errors assigned, to be settled by the Court:

RAILROAD TRACKAGE, FORT LEAVENWORTH MILITARY RESERVATION

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1307) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to the Union Pacific Railroad Co. to maintain certain railroad trackage on the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with an amendment, on page 1, line 10, after the word "purpose", to insert:

Provided, however, That nothing herein, or in such license, shall be construed as relieving said railroad company of compliance with any of the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, or as it may hereafter be amended.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War (hereinafter referred to as the Secretary) is authorized to grant to the Union Pacific Railroad Co. and its successors in interest a license to maintain, operate, repair, renew, and reconstruct, at its own expense, upon the Fort Leavenworth Military Reservation such railroad trackage as, in the opinion of the Secretary, will not conflict with the use of such reservation for any governmental purpose: Provided, however, That nothing herein, or in such license, shall be construed as relieving said railroad company of compliance with any of the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, or as it may hereafter be amended. Any license so granted shall (1) be revocable at the will of the Secretary, (2) provide that the Secretary may, in lieu of revoking such license, require the grantee to relocate any such trackage for the purpose of preventing such trackage from interfering with the use of such reservation for governmental purposes, and (3) provide that the privileges granted thereby shall be exercised subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary, or the commanding officer at such reservation with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe in the interests of maintenance of good order, sanitation, discipline, public safety, and the interests of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REINTERMENT OF CERTAIN BODIES

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 62) to reinter the bodies of Mary McDonough Johnson Daughtery and Sarah Phillips

McCardle Whitesides near the body of former President Andrew Johnson, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to disinter the bodies of Mary McDonough Johnson Daughtery, mother of former President Andrew Johnson, and of Sarah Phillips McCardle Whitesides, the mother of the wife of former President Andrew Johnson, and to reinter the same within the same plot of ground, and within the railing surrounding the said plot of ground, in which the body of the said former President of the United States, Andrew Johnson, is himself buried.

SEC. 2. That an appropriation to cover the expenses of the action herein directed, not exceeding $200, be, and is hereby, authorized.

Mr. McKELLAR subsequently said: Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] has submitted an excellent report on Senate Joint Resolution 62, and it is very short. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD in connection with the passage of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (No. 344) submitted by Mr. AUSTIN on May 1, 1939, is as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 62) to reinter the bodies of the mother and the mother-in-law of former President Andrew Johnson, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with a recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to disinter the bodies of Mary McDonough Johnson Daughtery, mother of former President Andrew Johnson, and of Sarah Phillips McCardle Whitesides, the mother of the wife of former President Andrew Johnson, and to reinter them within the same plot of ground, and within the railing surrounding the said plot of ground, in which the body of Andrew Johnson, former President of the United States, is buried.

Section 2 of the bill authorizes an appropriation of $200 to cover the expenses that would be incurred in carrying out this purpose.

The committee favor this legislation, but it is not the intention of the committee to establish a policy other than that of considering every application of this kind on its merits.

Three letters from the only surviving next-of-kin of former President Andrew Johnson, giving their consent and endorsement of Senate Joint Resolution 62 and House Joint Resolution 4014, to reinter the bodies of the mother and the mother-in-law of former President Andrew Johnson, follow:

GREENEVILLE, TENN., April 12, 1939.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Senate Joint Resolution No. 62, introduced by Senator MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, provides that the bodies of Mary McDonough Johnson-Daughtery and Sarah Phillips McCardle-Whitesides, mother and mother-in-law, respectively, of President Andrew Johnson, be disinterred (Old Greeneville Cemetery) and reinterred in the Andrew Johnson National Cemetery, of Greeneville, Tenn., in the family plot and near the remains of President Johnson and wife.

Under the provisions of the will of the late Martha Johnson Patterson, the land comprising the Andrew Johnson National Cemetery was deeded to the Federal Government. It set forth the names of the members of the family of the late President who were to be interred in this National Cemetery. The late President and Mrs. Johnson, and certain other members of his family, are interred in a plot in this cemetery, which is now surrounded by an iron fence. The other members of the family have been and will be interred in the family plot outside of the iron fence, leaving a space for two graves within the enclosure of the iron fence and near the bodies of the late President and his wife. As one of the three surviving heirs at law of Andrew Johnson, I am anxious and willing that Senate Joint Resolution No. 62 be approved by your committee and passed, and that the two bodies be reinterred in the space mentioned above within the plot surrounded by the iron fence.

Mrs. Martha J. Patterson was the mother of only two children, Andrew Johnson Patterson and Belle Patterson, both of whom are dead. I am the only child and heir at law of Andrew Johnson Patterson. Mary Belle Patterson married John Landstreet, of Richmond, Va., both of whom are deceased. They had only one child, Martha Belle Landstreet, who married Robert Willingham, of Richmond, Va., who now survives, she being the only other heir at law of Martha Johnson Patterson.

Mrs. Mary Johnson Stover (second daughter of Andrew Johnson) was the mother of three children, Lillie, Sarah, and Andrew Johnson Stover, all three of whom are dead. Sarah (wife of W. B. Bachman), had two children, Samuel (deceased), and Andrew Johnson Bachman, now living in Elizabethton, Tenn., being the only heir at law of Mary Johnson Stover.

As one of the three heirs at law, I want to hereby give my consent to have these bodies reinterred in the Andrew Johnson National Cemetery at Greeneville, Tenn., and urge the passage of Senate Joint Resolution No. 62, providing for same and trust it may be favorably acted upon without delay, I am,

Respectfully yours,

MARGARET JOHNSON PATTERSON.

ELIZABETHTON, TENN., April 15, 1939.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Senate Joint Resolution No. 62, by Senator McKellar of Tennessee, and its companion measure, House Joint Resolution No. 4014, by Representative Albert Gore, of Tennessee, provide for the disinterment of the bodies of Mary McDonough Johnson-Daughtery and Sarah Phillips McCardle-Whitesides, mother and mother-in-law, respectively, of President Andrew Johnson, and for their reinterment in the Andrew Johnson National Cemetery at Greeneville, Tenn.

Andrew Johnson had five children; however, only two had issue. Martha Johnson, the eldest daughter, married David Trotter Patterson. They had two children, Andrew Johnson Patterson and Mary Belle Patterson, who married John Landstreet, both of whom are now dead. Andrew Johnson Patterson left only one heir-at-law, Miss Margaret Johnson Patterson, now of Greeneville, Tenn., and Mrs. Mary Belle Landstreet, had only one child, Mrs. Robert Willingham, of Richmond, Va., who now survives. Mary Johnson, second daughter of President Andrew Johnson, married Daniel Stover. They had three children, namely, Lillie, Sarah, and Andrew Johnson Stover, all of whom are dead. Sarah married W. B. Bachman, and had two children, Samuel, now deceased, and Andrew Johnson Bachman, the writer, who is the only heir at law of Mary Johnson Stover. In other words, there are only three next of kin of President Andrew Johnson now living, namely, Miss Margaret Johnson Patterson, of Greeneville, Tenn., Mrs. Robert Willingham, of Richmond, Va., and the writer.

I want to hereby give my consent to the passage of Senate Joint Resolution No. 62, and House Joint Resolution No. 4014, for the removal of these two bodies to the Andrew Johnson National Cemetery, under the conditions set out in these resolutions, and urge the passage of same.

Respectfully,

ANDREW JOHNSON BACHMAN.

RICHMOND, VA., April 17, 1939.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Senate Joint Resolution 62, introduced by Senator MCKELLAR, of Tennessee, provides that the bodies of Mary McDonough Johnson-Daughtery and Sarah Phillips McCardle-Whitesides, mother and mother-in-law, respectively, of President Andrew Johnson, be disinterred from the old city cemetery in Greeneville, Tenn., and reinterred in the Andrew Johnson National Cemetery of that city, which meets with my approval.

Andrew Johnson had five children; however, only two, Martha Johnson Patterson and Mary Johnson Stover, had issue. Mrs. Martha Johnson Patterson had two children, Andrew Johnson Patterson and Belle Patterson, my mother, who married John Landstreet. Both Andrew Johnson Patterson and Belle Patterson Landstreet are deceased. Miss Margaret Johnson Patterson is the only heir at law of Andrew Johnson Patterson, and I am the only heir at law of Belle Patterson.

Mary Johnson Stover, second daughter of Andrew Johnson, and sister of Martha Johnson Patterson, has only one heir at law living, he being Andrew Johnson Bachman, of Elizabethtown, Tenn. In other words, there are only three next of kin of President Andrew Johnson now living, as shown above, they being Miss Margaret Johnson Patterson, of Greeneville, Tenn.; Andrew Johnson Bachman, of Elizabethtown, Tenn.; and myself.

As one of the two heirs at law of Martha Johnson Patterson, and as one of the three surviving next of kin of President Andrew Johnson, I want to hereby give my approval to the passage of Senate Joint Resolution 62, and urge its immediate passage.

Respectfully yours,

MARTHA LANDSTREET WILLINGHAM.
(Mrs. Robert Willingham.)

Report from the War Department, under date of March 23, 1939, follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 23, 1939.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: Careful consideration has been given to the Joint Resolution 62, to reinter the bodies of Mary McDonough Johnson-Daughtery and Sarah Phillips McCardle-Whitesides near the body of former President Andrew Johnson, transmitted with your communication of February 14, 1939, with request for report thereon and such views relative thereto as the War Department may desire to submit.

The applicable provision of existing law is the act of Congress approved June 12, 1906 (34 Stat. 240, 259), authorizing the establishment of the Andrew Johnson National Cemetery.

This joint resolution, if enacted into law, would necessitate the expenditure of $200 for the accomplishment of its purpose. No additional funds would be required annually as the care of these graves would be included in the general care and maintenance of the national cemetery.

The ground on which the Andrew Johnson National Cemetery is located was conveyed to the Government of the United States by deed under the provisions of the will of the late Martha J. Patterson, such deed designating by name the persons who should be interred in the plot reserved for the family of the late President Andrew Johnson. In view of the terms of the deed, specifically setting forth those who should be interred in this plot, the proposed law would probably be without effect in the absence of the approval of the heirs of Mrs. Patterson to the burial of the individuals named in the joint resolution. This Department has no information as to why President Johnson's mother and mother-in-law were not included in the list mentioned in this deed.

While the War Department has no objection to the enactment of the proposed legislation, it is deemed pertinent to point out that the passage of this bill would establish a precedent which might lead to future efforts along similar lines. In addition to the Andrew Johnson National Cemetery, the Zachary Taylor National Cemetery contains the remains of former President Taylor and certain members of his family, and there may be descendants who would attempt to secure, by legislation, the privilege of being interred in his tract. The same conditions apply to Arlington in view of its historic background.

In the final analysis, the question of whether or not the proposed bill should be enacted into law is one of general policy upon which the Department should express no opinion.

This proposed report has been submitted to the Bureau of the Budget which advises that there would be no objection to its submission to Congress.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY H. WOODRING,
Secretary of War.

APPOINTMENTS FROM THE DISTRICT TO MILITARY ACADEMY

The bill (S. 1683) to amend the act of June 7, 1935 (49 Stat. 332), and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I know nothing about this proposed legislation. I should like to have the able Senator from Utah explain it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no personal interest in the matter at all. It has been suggested by various persons, including the War Department, and by many residents of the District of Columbia, that, in view of the large and increasing population of the District of Columbia, the number of cadets who may be appointed from the District should be increased from five to nine. It has been favorably reported upon by the War Department and approved by the people generally.

Mr. McNARY. How does the proposed increase in number compare on the basis of population with the number of cadets who may be appointed from the respective States? For instance, the able Senator from Utah has a total of three appointments available only when vacancies occur in his quota.

Mr. KING. Then the other Senator and the Representatives from Utah have three appointments. So I think, generally speaking, the population of the District of Columbia would warrant an increase in the number of cadets measured by the appointments made from the respective States.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection if the bill provides a fair representation for the District of Columbia compared with that of the States. I do not desire that any special privilege should be conferred on any State or on the District of Columbia. So I am asking the Senator what the relationship is. The population of the District of Columbia, say, is 650,000.

Mr. KING. It will soon be 700,000; it is increasing very rapidly.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. How does that compare with the appointments from the States that have the same or greater population?

Mr. KING. I think, probably, that it would give a little preponderance to the District of Columbia. There is one suggestion that might be made that is worthy of consideration. As the Senator knows, a large number of officers of the Federal Government, particularly of the War Department, the Navy Department, the Coast Guard, and other quasi-military establishments, are required to be in Washington a greater part of the year. It is, therefore, difficult for them to claim residence in other portions of the United States. I think that fact was taken into consideration in recommending the passage of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. That is not an accurate statement. Those cases are covered by an act which authorizes the President to make Presidential appointments. I think the number of appointments permitted to the District under the bill is wholly out of proportion to the number permitted to the States according to population.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HILL. I may say to the Senator that I have no personal interest in the bill, but I think I have the answer to the question the Senator asked. I notice that in the War Department's letter under date of March 25, addressed to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, the Secretary of War, Mr. Woodring, makes this statement:

The reason advanced for increase in the number of appointments allotted to the District of Columbia is based on the fact that, under existing law, eight States with an estimated smaller population than the District of Columbia each have a total of nine appointments to the Military Academy, while the District of Columbia has but five. In view of the fact that the allotment of appointments is based in general upon population, it is the opinion of the War Department that the enactment of S. 1948 would correct an existing inequality.

Mr. McNARY. That may be true as to eight States, but it is not true as to the other 40 States. For instance, if I may be pardoned for taking as an illustration the State of Utah—that delightful State, so ably represented here—it has a population much in excess of that of the District of Columbia without having proportionately as many appointees. Oregon, an even more delightful and more populous State, has but three more than Utah.

I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over on objection.

DEPUTY CHIEF OF STAFF

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2222) to provide for a Deputy Chief of Staff, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 5 of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916 (39 Stat. 166), as amended by the act of June 3, 1938 (52 Stat. 610), be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting in line 4 of said paragraph, after the words "Chief of Staff", a comma followed by the words "the Deputy Chief of Staff" and a comma; by striking out the word "four" appearing in line 4 of said paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five"; and by striking out the word "eighty-eight" in line 6 of said paragraph and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one hundred and two."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, is the enactment of this bill deemed to be important for military purposes? I address my question to the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who occupies the chair at the moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no Deputy Chief of Staff at this time; and certainly a Deputy Chief of Staff is very much needed on account of the recent expansion of national-defense activities. For the same reason the bill adds a few more staff officers.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2223) to authorize the acquisition of additional lands for military purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we have some explanation of that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair will ask that that bill go over for the present.

FORTY-HOUR WEEK FOR PNEUMATIC-TUBE-SYSTEM POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 4786) to extend the provisions of the 40-hour law to pneumatic-tube-system employees in the Postal Service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] would like to have an explanation of the bill, and I will make the explanation.

These tube systems are now operated by the Government as a part of the postal machinery. The systems are leased from the private owners, and the employees are now Government employees. The bill merely applies to these employees the same provisions of law which are already applied to all other postal employees doing like work.

That is the explanation of this bill and the succeeding ones. They are recommended by the Department. They are really Department bills. They have already passed the House, and I hope they will pass the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT FOR TRANSMITTING THREATENING COMMUNICATIONS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3230) to amend the statutes providing punishment for transmitting threatening communications, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 3, line 22, after the word "thereon", to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That any defendant in an indictment hereunder, relating to communications originating in the United States, shall, upon motion duly made, be entitled as a matter of right to be tried in the district court of the United States in which the matter mailed or otherwise transmitted was set first in motion; that is, in the mails or in commerce between the States", so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) Any person violating this section may be prosecuted in the judicial district in which such letter or other communication is deposited in such post office, station, or authorized depository for mail matter, or in the judicial district into which such letter or other communication was carried by the United States mail for delivery according to the direction thereon: Provided, That any defendant in an indictment hereunder, relating to communications originating in the United States, shall, upon motion duly made, be entitled as a matter of right to be tried in the district court of the United States in which the matter mailed or otherwise transmitted was first set in motion; that is, in the mails or in commerce between the States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, page 6, line 18, after the word "addressed", to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That any defendant in an indictment hereunder, relating to communications originating in the United States, shall, upon motion duly made, be entitled as a matter of right to be tried in the district court of the United States in which the matter mailed or otherwise transmitted was set first in motion; that is, in the mails or in commerce between the States", so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) Any person violating this section may be prosecuted either in the district into which such letter or other communication was carried by the United States mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by the United States mail to the person to whom it was addressed: Provided, That any defendant in an indictment hereunder, relating to communications originating in the United States, shall, upon motion duly made, be entitled as a matter of right to be tried in the district court of the United States in which the matter mailed or otherwise transmitted was set first in motion; that is, in the mails or in commerce between the States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 8, line 6, after the word "aforesaid", to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That any defendant in an indictment hereunder, relating to communications originating in the United States, shall, upon motion duly made, be entitled as a matter of right to be tried in the district court of the United States in which the matter mailed or otherwise transmitted was set first in motion; that is, in the mails or in commerce between the States", so as to make the paragraph read:

(d) Any person violating the provisions of this section may be prosecuted in the judicial district from or into which such threat is transmitted, as aforesaid: Provided, That any defendant in an indictment hereunder, relating to communications originating in the United States, shall, upon motion duly made, be entitled as a matter of right to be tried in the district court of the United States in which the matter mailed or otherwise transmitted was set first in motion; that is, in the mails or in commerce between the States. The term "interstate commerce," as used in this section, shall include communication from one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

APPRAISAL OF NEW YORK AND BOSTON PNEUMATIC MAIL TUBE SYSTEMS

The bill (H. R. 3811) to provide for the appraisal of the pneumatic mail tube systems in New York and Boston was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNUAL AND SICK LEAVE OF POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3812) granting postal employees credit for Saturday in annual and sick leave law, thereby conforming to the 40-hour workweek or 5-day-week law, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after "1925", to insert "(U. S. C., title 39, 1934 edition, sec. 823)"; and on page 2, line 7, after the words "Postmaster General", to insert "Provided, That the 15 days' leave shall be credited at the rate of 1¼ days for each month of actual service", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph 1 of section 11 of the act entitled "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, 1934 edition, sec. 823), as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Employees in the Postal Service shall be granted 15 days' leave of absence with pay, exclusive of Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, each fiscal year, and sick leave with pay at the rate of 10 days a year, exclusive of Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, to be cumulative, but no sick leave with pay in excess of 6 months shall be granted during any one fiscal year. Sick leave shall be granted only upon satisfactory evidence of illness in accordance with the regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster General: Provided, That the 15 days' leave shall be credited at the rate of 1¼ days for each month of actual service."

SEC. 2. This act shall become effective as of February 1, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. This is the bill of the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], who, I am sure, will be very happy to explain it.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, under existing law, postal employees are allowed only 15 working days for their annual vacation. Other employees of the Government are allowed 26 working days for their annual vacation. Under a recent decision of the Comptroller General, Saturday—which has been made a holiday by the 5-day-week law—is to be considered a working day and charged against a postal employee on annual leave. So we hold that Saturday is a holiday for the postal employee at work, but it is a working day when the postal employee is on vacation.

Therefore, the application of the law by the Post Office Department will have to be changed as a result of the decision of the Comptroller General unless we enact this proposed legislation, which will consider Saturday, like Sunday, a holiday for the computation of annual leave. The enactment of the bill will cost no more money. It is recommended by the Department, and, in my judgment, it is the logical sequence of our enactment of the 5-day-week law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MAILING OF FIREARMS TO OFFICERS OF COAST GUARD

The bill (H. R. 3231) to authorize the mailing of pistols, revolvers, and other firearms capable of being concealed on the person, to officers of the Coast Guard was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIMITATION OF WORKING HOURS OF PNEUMATIC-TUBE-SYSTEM EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 4771) limiting working hours of pneumatic-tube-system employees to 8 in 10 hours a day was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TIME CREDITS FOR SUBSTITUTES IN PNEUMATIC-TUBE SERVICE

The bill (H. R. 4772) to provide time credits for substitutes in the pneumatic-tube service was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DIFFERENTIAL IN PAY FOR NIGHT WORK OF PNEUMATIC-TUBE-SYSTEM POSTAL EMPLOYEES

The bill (H. R. 4785) to provide a differential in pay for night work to pneumatic-tube-system employees in the Postal Service was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FOOD, DRUG, AND COSMETIC ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5762) to provide for temporary postponement of the operations of certain provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, page 2, after line 7, to insert "Provided, That persons who not later than December 1, 1939, notify the Secretary by affidavit, setting forth the facts, that compliance on January 1, 1940, with the labeling provisions enumerated in this subsection would be unduly burdensome and that the public interest is being adequately served, shall, as a matter of right, be exempted from compliance therewith until July 1, 1940", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the effective date of the following provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act is hereby postponed until January 1, 1940: Sections 402 (c); 403 (e) (1); 403 (g), (h), (i), (j), and (k); 501 (a) (4); 502 (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h); 601 (e); and 602 (b).

(b) The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized further to postpone the effective date of the following labeling provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act: Sections 403 (e) (1); 403 (g), (h), (i), (j), and (k); 502 (b), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h); and 602 (b) to the extent that the operation of such provisions would be unduly burdensome by reason of the cost of compliance therewith, but only insofar as such postponement will not prevent the public interest being adequately served: Provided, That persons who not later than December 1, 1939, notify the Secretary by affidavit, setting forth the facts, that compliance on January 1, 1940, with the labeling provisions enumerated in this subsection would be unduly burdensome and that the public interest is being adequately served, shall, as a matter of right, be exempted from compliance therewith until July 1, 1940. The authority granted to the Secretary under this subsection shall not, in any case, be exercised (1) to postpone the effective date of any such provision beyond July 1, 1940, or (2) with respect to labeling which was lithographed, etched, stamped, printed, or otherwise manufactured after February 1, 1939. No postponement shall be made under this subsection with respect to labeling which would not have complied with the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act of June 30, 1906, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 1, after the word "thereof", to strike out "name" and insert "name,", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. Section 502 (d) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act is hereby amended by striking out the words "name, quantity, and percentage" where they appear therein and substituting in lieu thereof "name, and quantity or proportion."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS BY NATIONAL BANKING ASSOCIATIONS

The bill (S. 1964) to amend section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to authorize charitable contributions by national banking associations was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire an explanation of the bill. In the absence of an explanation, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, my distinguished friend the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] asked that if no explanation were made of Senate bill 1964, it be passed over. I have just asked him if I might recur to that bill; and I ask unanimous consent that I may do so, in order to make a very brief explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill is recurred to.

Mr. KING. Under the present law, directors of banks may not, even though they and the stockholders so desire, make contributions for community or charitable purposes. They are absolutely prohibited from doing so. The bill merely authorizes them to make such contributions if the directors desire to make the contributions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean that the directors are prohibited from making contributions. He means that they are prohibited from making corporate contributions.

Mr. KING. I think the individuals themselves are prohibited from doing so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I never heard that directors of a bank individually were not at liberty to make such contributions.

Mr. KING. At any rate, the bill proposes to amend the present law so as to provide that a national banking association may—

Contribute to community funds, or to charitable, philanthropic, or benevolent instrumentalities conducive to public welfare, such sums as its board of directors may deem expedient and in the interests of the association, if it is located in a State the laws of which permit State banking institutions to contribute to such funds or instrumentalities.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Evidently the present law covers only institutional contributions.

Mr. KING. I have no interest in the matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. The restriction applies to the bank itself. Under the present law the bank may not make such contributions. The directors or officers may do so.

Mr. KING. The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has made a favorable report on the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the bill. I can see no reason for its enactment.

Mr. KING. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over on objection of the Senator from Georgia.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1701) to amend section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the first proviso of paragraph (7) of subsection (1) of section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the words "with respect to any bank which closes after the date this paragraph as amended takes effect" the words "or which was reorganized subsequent to March 9, 1933, and closed subsequent to January 1, 1938."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the report made on the bill from the Committee on Banking and Currency by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is very brief. A single paragraph makes very clear the purpose of the bill:

The effect of this amendment will be to require the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to waive any claim for stockholders' liability against the stockholders in a reorganized bank which had closed prior to the effective date of the first amendment requiring such waivers (May 25, 1938). The reason for extending the exception to a period prior to such effective date in the case of a reorganized bank is that upon the reorganization of a bank which closed shortly before our amendment the depositors had been persuaded to utilize a portion of their deposits for the purpose of furnishing capital to the bank. Thereby they became stockholders, and unless the now uniform waiver rule is extended to them they will be compelled to pay to the Insurance Corporation as stockholders the amount they had once sacrificed as depositors in order to reorganize the bank.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. THOMAS

The bill (S. 444) for the relief of John F. Thomas was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

MOREHEAD CITY TARGET RANGE, N. C.

The bill (S. 1156) to authorize the transfer to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury of portions of the property within the military reservation known as the Morehead City Target Range, N. C., for the construction of improvements thereon, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to make transfers to the jurisdiction and control of the Secretary of the Treasury of such portions of the property at present included within the military reservation known as the Morehead City Target Range, N. C., and upon such conditions, as may be mutually agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to construct within the limits of the property so transferred, from such funds as may be now or may hereafter become available, such improvements or buildings, appurtenances, and approaches thereto as he may deem adequate and suitable for the use of said property as a target range by the United States Coast Guard, and for use in carrying out any other functions or duties of the Treasury Department: Provided, That upon cessation of such use the premises or any part thereof so transferred shall revert to the jurisdiction of the War Department.

COMPACT FOR DIVISION OF WATERS OF YELLOWSTONE RIVER

The bill (S. 1759) granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana, North Dakota, and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved August 2, 1937 (50 Stat. 551), granting the consent of Congress to the States of Montana and Wyoming to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement for division of the waters of the Yellowstone River be, and it is hereby, amended to provide that the consent of Congress is given to the State of North Dakota to negotiate and to enter into the compact or agreement therein authorized providing for an equitable division and an apportionment between the States of the water supply of the Yellowstone River and of the streams tributary thereto, upon condition that the representative appointed by the President of the United States under the act of August 2, 1937, to participate in said negotiations as the representative of the United States and to report to Congress of proceedings and of any compact or agreement entered into, shall continue to represent the United States and to report under this act: Provided, That such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon any of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislatures of each of the said States and by the Congress of the United States: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall apply to any waters within or tributary to the Yellowstone National Park or shall establish any right or interest in or to any lands within the boundaries thereof.

JOSEPH ALDER AND OTHERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2054) for the relief of Joseph Alder, E. G. Allen, and E. G. Allen and By Hanchett jointly, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $422.96 to Joseph Alder, the sum of $100 to E. G. Allen, and the sum of $124.75 to E. G. Allen and By Hanchett jointly, in full satisfaction of their claims against the United States arising out of the breaking of Cluff Reservoir Dam No. 3, near Safford, Ariz., on May 1, 1937, such dam having been constructed by the Department of Agriculture through the Soil Conservation Service: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STANDARD OIL CO., INC., IN KENTUCKY

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1467) for the relief of the Standard Oil Co., Inc., in Kentucky, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to add a proviso at the end of the bill, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Standard Oil Co., Inc., in Kentucky, the sum of $941.59 which is due by reason of an error in making settlement for gasoline furnished the War Department under contract No. W 535-AC-8868, dated June 13, 1936, which sum shall be in full settlement of any claim against the Government by the Standard Oil Co., Inc., in Kentucky, by reason of deliveries of gasoline under said contract for the months of July, August, September, and October 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, do the bills now being considered appear on the calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These measures were reported yesterday, but were not printed on the calendar of this morning.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, committees had authority to report during the recess, and some committees made reports on bills which were not printed on the calendar.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, except that I think we ought to have explanations if the bills are very important.

DOROTHY CLAIR HESTER

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1322) for the relief of Dorothy Clair Hester, daughter of E. R. Hester, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$1,316.35" and to insert in lieu thereof "$316.35", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. R. Hester, of Arcadia, La., for the benefit of his minor daughter, Dorothy Clair Hester, the sum of $316.35, in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for permanent injury received when she was struck by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck as it passed along the Arcadia-Bryceland Highway in Arcadia, La., March 7, 1936: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 289) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain, and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think this bill should go over so that we may look into it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over on objection of the Senator from Utah.

The bill (H. R. 2067) for the relief of the Atlas Powder Co., was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. May we have an explanation of the bill? It may be all right.

Mr. NYE. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BOZZANI MOTORS, LTD.

The bill (H. R. 1694) for the relief of Bozzani Motors, Ltd., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGE LIMIT IN GOVERNMENT EMPLOYMENT

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, a short time ago a bill in which I am interested was passed over. My reason for desiring that the bill be acted on at this time is that this is Reemployment Week, inaugurated by Presidential proclamation, when private industry is exhorted to extend employment opportunity to older workers.

After conference with some of my colleagues, I have decided not to ask the Senate to take the matter up for consideration today. However, in view of the fact that this is Reemployment Week, and as a result of the fact that the persons included within the scope of the bill are the principal victims of the machine age in which we live, and for the added reason that not only the Federal Government but local governments are offenders in the same light as is the case with private enterprise, I trust that the bill may be considered at an early date and passed.

A similar bill passed the Senate on a former occasion; a law embodying similar provisions is in force in the State of New Jersey, and legislation of this character I understand was passed in Massachusetts. Under existing law there is hardly a Senator in the Chamber, or a Member of this body, who would not, as a result of the age barrier, be considered ineligible to fill any position in the Federal service. My bill merely aims to eliminate that discrimination and to permit of every other qualification now required under the law.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I merely asked that the bill go over because I received a request that it be expanded and made a little more liberal, and I desired to look into the matter. I therefore request that the Senator let the bill go over until Monday, so that we may look into it.

Mr. MEAD. I am very glad to agree with the Senator that the bill go over.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1706, Order of Business 147, to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes, be indefinitely postponed, since a similar bill has been passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] desires to have certain measures on the calendar go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has been my intention to ask that private bills on the calendar go over, because I desire to make a suggestion to the officials of the Senate. When there is unanimous consent for the reporting of bills and joint resolutions during a recess of the Senate, and that they be considered as on the calendar, I think private bills should not be called until they are printed and on the calendar, so that every Member of the Senate may see what they are.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I agree with the suggestion as a matter of general principle. The bills referred to were reported on yesterday, and why they were not printed on the calendar I cannot state; but I think that as a general rule the suggestion made by the Senator should be followed.

COOS BAY WAGON ROAD GRANT LANDS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I did not understand that the Senator from Tennessee asked that all the bills go over if they were not printed on the calendar. The omission from today's calendar of measures reported during the recess was due to a mistake of the printer. There is a bill among those referred to in which I am deeply interested. It is merely to correct existing law. It is a departmental bill, and I should like to have it acted upon.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection in the world to that being done. I was merely trying to correct a practice which I think is wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 242. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 242) relating to the disposition of funds derived from the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That beginning with the fiscal year next following the date of the passage of this act, not to exceed 75 percent of the receipts derived in any one year from the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands in Oregon and deposited in the special fund in the Treasury created by the act of February 26, 1919 (40 Stat. 1179), and designated "The Coos Bay Wagon Road grant fund" shall be paid annually, in lieu of taxes, by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon certification by the Secretary of the Interior, to the treasurers of Coos and Douglas Counties according to the ratio that the total assessed valuation of the reconveyed Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands, belonging to the United States, in each of said counties bears to the total assessed valuation of all said lands in those counties, to be used for the purposes mentioned in said act: Provided, That until such time as the general fund of the Treasury of the United States shall have been fully reimbursed by Douglas County for expenditures which were made charges against the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant fund by section 5 of the act of February 26, 1919, said Douglas County shall be entitled to receive only 50 percent of the amount to which it would otherwise be entitled under this act: Provided further, That prior to making any payment under this authorization an appraisal of the land and timber thereon shall be made, within 6 months after the passage of this act, by a committee to consist of a representative of the Secretary of the Interior, one representative for the two counties interested, and a third person satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior and the county officials, but who shall not be an employee of the United States nor a resident of, nor a property owner in, either Coos or Douglas County. Upon appraisal thereof, the land and timber thereon shall be assessed as are other similar properties within the respective counties, and payments hereunder in lieu of taxes shall be computed by applying the same rates of taxation as are applied to privately owned property of similar character in such counties.

SEC. 2. Appraisals of the land and timber thereon shall be made, in the manner prescribed in section 1 hereof, not less frequently than once in each 10-year period, and the amounts due hereunder in any year shall be computed as specified in section 1 of this act upon the basis of the last appraisement. The expenses of making the appraisements provided for in this act shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury upon certification by the Secretary of the Interior, from that portion of the receipts derived from such lands and timber payable to the counties and shall be deducted from any amount due said counties.

SEC. 3. If, during any one year, 75 percent of the receipts are insufficient fully to meet the payments due the counties hereunder, the Secretary of the Treasury, upon certification by the Secretary of the Interior, may pay an additional sum from any surplus of 75 percent of prior year receipts: Provided, however, That in no event shall the aggregate of payments during any 10-year period commencing with the period beginning July 1, 1940, exceed 75 percent of the receipts deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant fund for such period: Provided further, That at the end of each 10-year period any balance of the 75 percent not required for payments to the counties shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 4. Not to exceed 25 percent of the annual receipts shall be available, in such amounts as the Congress shall from time to time appropriate for the administration of the act of August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 874), insofar as it applies to the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant lands. Any balance not used for administrative purposes shall be covered into the general fund of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 5. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, yesterday this bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. It is a departmental bill, sent to me by the Department of the Interior acting in conjunction with the Bureau of the Budget. It attempts to cure a defect in a measure passed last year which did not specify the amount of money which could be paid in the way of administration costs in connection with the timber affected. The bill is in the interest of the Government, I am offering it as a departmental bill, and I should like to have it acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNDER SECRETARY IN THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 2314, to establish the position of Under Secretary in the Department of Commerce. It does not add to the general expense beyond a thousand dollars a year, as it contemplates the abandonment of one of the positions of Assistant Secretary of Commerce whenever the position shall become vacant. There are peculiar reasons why this bill should be passed, and it is in accord with the general tenor of legislation with respect to other departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2314) to establish the position of Under Secretary in the Department of Commerce, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established in the Department of Commerce the position of Under Secretary of Commerce, with compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum and with appointment thereto by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

SEC. 2. Such Under Secretary shall perform the duties of the Secretary of Commerce in the case of absence or sickness of the Secretary, or in the case of the death or resignation of the Secretary until a successor is appointed.

SEC. 3. Whenever a vacancy shall occur in any one of the two positions of Assistant Secretary heretofore established in the Department of Commerce, such vacancy shall not be filled and there shall thereafter be only one position of Assistant Secretary in such Department.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I voted against favorably reporting the bill, because I do not believe in extending the policy of having Under Secretaries in all of the departments of the Government. I shall not object to the immediate consideration of this measure, but I am opposed to the bill in principle. I merely desired to make this statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURCHASES FROM INDIANS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, yesterday three bills were reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs which do not appear upon the calendar. They are very short. I desire to make a brief statement about the bills, and following the statement I shall request unanimous consent for their consideration.

The first of the bills is Senate bill 2154. Under the present law no Indian agent or employee of the Indian Service can purchase any article from an Indian. If any such agent or employee should purchase a pair of sandals or a belt or a ring made by an Indian, it would be against the law. The bill repeals that provision and makes it possible for persons employed in the Indian Service to purchase goods from Indians.

I ask that Senate bill 2154 be laid before the Senate for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The bill (S. 2154) to modify the provisions of section 10 of the act of June 30, 1834, and section 10 of the act of June 22, 1874, relating to the Indians, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That anything contained in section 10 of the act of June 30, 1834 (4 Stat. 738), or in section 10 of the act of June 22, 1874 (18 Stat. 177), now sections 68 and 87, respectively, title 25, United States Code, to the contrary notwithstanding, employees of the United States Government, including those in the Indian Service, may, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, be permitted to purchase from any Indian or Indian organization any arts and crafts or any other products, service, or commodity, produced, rendered, owned, controlled, or furnished by any Indian or Indian organization: Provided, That nothing contained in the acts of Congress above referred to shall be construed as preventing Indian employees of the United States Government, of whatever degree of Indian blood, during their term of employment or otherwise, from obtaining or receiving any benefit or benefits made available to the Indians generally or to the members of any particular tribe, under any act of Congress, nor to prevent such employees having Indian blood from being members of or receiving benefits by reason of their membership in Indian tribes, corporations, or cooperative associations organized by the Indians, when authorized by the Secretary of the Interior under appropriate regulations to be promulgated by him.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. This is a departmental bill submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs by the Department of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOROTHY CLAIR, G. F. ALLEN, AND EARL WOOLDRIDGE

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Senate bill 2239 has been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It corrects the record in a case of an employee of the Indian Service, in the amount of $127.28. It does not call for payment of any money out of the Treasury. It simply corrects the record. At a former time some money was paid to an Indian Service employee, and later the payment was found to be irregular. The record, for that reason, is incomplete.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection of the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 2239) for the relief of Dorothy Clair, G. F. Allen, and Earl Wooldridge, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit to Dorothy Clair, a former employee of the Rocky Boy Indian Agency at Rocky Boy, Mont., and to allow credit in the accounts of G. F. Allen, chief disbursing officer, and Earl Wooldridge, formerly superintendent and certifying officer of that agency, for the amount of $127.28, representing per diem and travel expenses paid to said Dorothy Clair for the period August 19, 1937, to September 10, 1937, inclusive.

RECOVERY BY INDIANS OF TAXES ERRONEOUSLY ASSESSED

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Senate bill 2192 was favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs yesterday. The bill is similar to one which was passed by the Senate last year. It was sent to the House and was reported favorably by the committee of the House which considered it, but the bill was not passed by the House. The bill gives to Indians who have erroneously or illegally paid income taxes the opportunity to recover the amounts so paid. The provisions of the law have the same application to Indians as to white persons who pay taxes and later on the taxes are found to have been erroneously assessed or erroneously collected. Provision was made for a 2-year period during which they must file their claims, but some of the Indians in my State did not know of the law and did not file claims within the 2 years. The bill simply gives them the right to file claims now after the 2-year period has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2192) to carry out certain obligations to certain enrolled Indians under tribal agreement, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 3, after the word "income", to insert "tax", and on page 3, line 11, after the word "death", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "And provided further, That any contract made by or for any Indian for the employment of an attorney or attorneys for the securing of a refund of taxes erroneously or illegally paid under the provisions of this act shall provide that such attorney or attorneys shall be a resident or residents of the State of Oklahoma, shall be admitted to practice before the Treasury Department, and such contract shall provide for a fee not in excess of 10 percent of the amount recovered in behalf of any such Indian claimant", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person duly enrolled as a member of an Indian tribe who received in pursuance of a tribal treaty or agreement with the United States an allotment of land which, by the terms of said treaty or agreement, was exempted from taxation, restricted against alienation, or which, by the terms of any act of Congress, was continued under the supervision of the United States during the minority of such allottee, and from which land the restrictions have or have not been removed, and any such enrolled member of an Indian tribe having restricted money in the custody and control of the United States, and who was required or permitted to pay prior to April 26, 1931, any Federal income tax on such lands or on the rents, royalties, or other gains arising from such lands during such restricted or tax-exempt period or on income from such restricted funds while in the custody or control of the United States, or on income from any allotment during the minority of the allottee, or any such person who has been erroneously or illegally taxed by reason of not having claimed or received the benefit of any deduction or exemptions permitted by law, and who would be entitled under this or previous acts or rulings of the Treasury Department in similar Indian cases to a refund of the taxes so illegally or erroneously collected, but for the fact that he failed to file a claim for such refund within the time prescribed by law, shall be allowed 2 years after the approval of this act within which to file such claim, and if otherwise entitled thereto he may recover such taxes in the same manner and to the same extent as if such claims for refund had been theretofore duly filed as required by law, it not being the policy of the Government to invoke or plead a a statute of limitations to escape the obligations of agreement solemnly entered into with its Indian wards, or prior to April 26, 1931, to exact for its own use and benefit an income tax from them while their property continued under the supervision of the United States: Provided, however, That in the case of the death of a member of an Indian tribe his heirs who succeeded to his allotment of lands be permitted to file claims and recover refunds in the same manner as duly enrolled member of an Indian tribe: Provided, further, That in the case of the death of any enrolled member of an Indian tribe any such illegal taxes paid by him or on his account may in like manner be claimed and recovered by the person or persons who would have received such money had it constituted a part of his estate at the time of his death: And provided further, That any contract made by or for any Indian for the employment of an attorney or attorneys for the securing of a refund of taxes erroneously or illegally paid, under the provisions of this act, shall provide that such attorney or attorneys shall be a resident or residents of the State of Oklahoma, shall be admitted to practice before the Treasury Department, and such contract shall provide for a fee not in excess of 10 percent of the amount recovered in behalf of any such Indian claimant.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 4, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera, Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of mercy, the Shepherd of our souls, in whose all-encircling love we dwell, we lift our hearts to Thee in prayer. We thank Thee for Thy wise, beneficent providence which redeems our lives and gives them inspiration when our strength is feeble. We pray Thee to keep us strong, for we have loads to lift and hard work to do; it matters not how deep entrenched the evil, do Thou inspire us with fortitude and courage. Oh let Thy kingdom come in all hearts, Thy will be done in all lives, and the name of our Father hallowed in all the earth, and unto Thee be blessing and glory, wisdom and thanksgiving, honor and power forever and ever. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MOUTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I represent the largest sugarcane-producing congressional district in continental United States—and because of the many statements of high-ranking officials that have recently been given widespread publicity, which have had a tendency to confuse the people of these United States as to the true conditions existing in our domestic sugarcane-producing areas, I ask unanimous consent of the House at this point to have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an editorial appearing in the New Orleans States of April 28, 1939, dealing with the Louisiana sugar industry.

I feel that this article is worthy of the serious notice of my colleagues in this august body and the people of this great country, as it truly depicts the chaotic and distressing predicament confronting our sugar industry because of the reduction in acreage for this year's crop imposed upon our cane growers by the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MOUTON]?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to follows:

THE SUGAR FIGHT

They're plowing up 38,500 acres of sugarcane in Louisiana. Government's orders. In a few weeks those waving banners of green, heralding the approach of probably $4,000,000 of sugar, will be destroyed. The Federal quota, therefore, works faster and more thoroughly than did the blight which almost destroyed the industry in Louisiana a decade or so ago, for the blight took years to accomplish its fell purpose, and even at its worst it allowed the riddled fields to produce seed. And it was this same blight which gave Cuba and Hawaii and Puerto Rico and the Philippines the talking point they now have, a favored position which the Federal Government seems determined to maintain.

The destruction of the crop on these 38,500 acres will rob many a field worker of a job this fall; it will shorten the pay of the men who serve the machinery in the mills; it will cut into the earnings of the transportation companies and their pay rolls; it will slash into all the business of the Sugarcane Belt and into the business of the wholesale houses of New Orleans which supply the country stores.

It will increase the strain on the relief machinery of this country. Either hundreds of persons will go hungry or the taxpayers will have to dig more deeply for their maintenance.

It will make more certain the return of 25-cent sugar, retail, when the next war breaks, for the transportation difficulties which fattened the returns of Cuban producers during the last war, will be just as great in the one that is around the corner, if not greater.

Louisiana's sugar interests made a gallant campaign to have the Government recall the quota reductions which were announced after the 1939 crop had been planted. The Federal Government, however, refused to allow even this concession to the only agricultural production in the United States which does not turn out a surplus. The United States has never produced more than a third of its consumption, and it will probably never be able to produce all it needs.
